A correspondent asks for the experience of hose who, like himself, “ have sought and ailed to receive healing by faith, and who re perplexed, discouraged, and weakened in ody and mind by the constant mental truggle, morbid introspection, and despair f peace ; nay, who have lost their faith, nd, in some cases, their reason, while vainly ndeavouring to follow where the Lord does ot lead.”

Messrs. Marshall Brothers, of 3, Amen Corner, have purchased of Mr. Haughton the copyright &c., of “ Hymns of Consecration and Faith,” which will in future, therefore, be published by them.

In the article by Lord Kinnaird, in our issue of June 18, on “ Rest and Air for City Young Women,” it ought to have been stated that the excellent movement for which it appealed is in connection with the Y.W.C.A. We sincerely trust that our readers will reperuse the article, and do all they can to further the objects stated in it. If any of them can help, either in the way of providing pleasant country apartments for London young women needing rest and change, or by contributing to the expense, they are asked to communicate with Miss Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, Hyde-park, W.

An incarcerated London boy once wrote on the wall of his cell :—

> When he’s cotched is sent to prison.”

He evidently contemplated things as they are, rather than as they ought to be ; and it has generally been considered that his education, from a moral and religious, as well as from a literary, point of view, had been neglected—that, indeed, not only his practice, but his principles were at fault. This, however, judging from what we see and hear, would appear to be a mistake. Some Christians whom we esteem very highly in love for their works’ sake are painfully exercised at the enormity, the unpardonability of a lecturer publishing the names of men in high places who are known to frequent haunts of vice and crime. They do not say an indignant word as to the wickedness of breaking the marriage vow ; they do not cover their faces with shame because England is thus dishonoured in her foremost sons ; they express no regret over historic names disgraced ; no sympathy with the wives thus wronged ; no pity for the betrayed and broken-hearted, if not outraged victims. The calamity that overwhelms them is that the words of Jesus begin to be fulfilled : “ There is nothing secret but that it should come abroad.” They have pitched their standard on the low level of the imprisoned City Arab. Horror has taken hold upon them, not because of the wicked who forsake God’s law, but because they are expressed by name.

Nothing is more demoralising than the use of euphemisms to tone down our conceptions of sin. “ If the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do ? ” Why, let us have a Revised Prayer Book, and a re-Revised Bible. Let us henceforth pray, “ From irregularity in our loves, and all other venial sin, good Lord, absolve us.” It has been remarked with gratulation that the Commandments have not been altered in the R.V. ; but, now, let the seventh read, “ Thou shalt not be irregular in thy loves.” And let us carry the euphemism into the New Testament : “ Him that is irregular in his loves God will judge.” Robert Burns, himself a libertine, in his Letter to a Young Friend, was far nearer to the Bible than this :—

> Luxuriantly indulge it ;
> But never tempt the illicit rove,
> Tho’ naething should divulge it.
> I waive the quantum o’ the sin,
> The hazard o’ concealin’ ;
> But, och, it hardens a’ within,
> And petrifies the feelin’.”

And, passing from the excise to the aristocracy, Lord Byron sets his seal to the truth of God : “ His own iniquities shall take the wicked, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins ; ” for, dying in the prime of his manhood at thirty-six, he wrote :—

> “ My days are in the yellow leaf,
> The flower and fruit of love are gone ;
> The worm, the canker, and the grief,
> Are mine alone.”

When sinners reach the outer darkness, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, they will not use the euphemisms invented for them ; but, while they gnaw their tongues for pain, they will describe their sins as God describes them.

Noblesse oblige! Must we revise this dictum also into Noblesse excuse?

MR. ORSMAN AND THE COSTERS.

THE twenty-first anniversary of the Mission Church at Costers’ Hall, Hoxton, was celebrated on Tuesday week, when an illuminated and framed address was presented to Mr. W. G. Orsman, and a flower-stand to Mrs. Orsman. The Earl of Shaftesbury had arranged to take the chair, but during the afternoon a messenger arrived with a letter, stating that it was impossible for his lordship, who is now very feeble, to leave home. Accordingly, Mr. R. Scott presided. About 300 sat down to tea ; and the hall was densely crowded at the evening meeting. After prayer, Mr. Orsman briefly referred to the origin and progress of the work. He and some other young men commenced operations in Bell-alley on Whit-Sunday, 1861 ; and after removing from thence into a larger building—which a gentleman put up in Golden-lane —the mission church was at length formed in 1864. They then little thought that the enterprise would assume the proportions it had done ; and, originally, they were merely a branch of the church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Their first seventeen members had now increased to 289. He had around him a band of helpers 100 strong. The Earl of Shaftesbury had joined them in 1867 ; his lordship had become a member of the donkey and barrow club. This club had now over £700 in hand.

Mr. Orsman went on to speak of other branches of the mission, which were in full working order, while the building in which they assembled, and which had cost £7,000, was not only free of debt, but had several shops that ensured an income of £250 a year. The remarkable fact was also mentioned, that in the course of twenty-four years no sick visitor, nor any member of the mission, had ever taken any contagious disease. The chairman in the course of a brief address, declared that Mr. Orsman’s enterprise was one of the model missions of London. Addresses were given by several friends of the work. Mr. Spurgeon preached in Costers’ Hall last Tuesday evening.—Christian World.

PRIZE ESSAY. — The prize of one hundred guineas offered by the Proprietors of The Christian Commonwealth for the best essay on “ The Relation of the Old and New Covenants ; or, the Law and the Gospel,” has been awarded to Rev C. H. Nash, of East Croydon. The Examiners who made the award were Revs. Dr. Hatch, Dr. Maclaren, Dr. Pope, R. T. Horton, and W. T. Moore. It is understood that the essay, which is regarded as a very excellent one, will be printed in successive issues of The Christian Commonwealth.

KASHMIR MEDICAL MISSION.—Sir,—Might I draw the attention of your readers to the Medical Mission in Kashmir, at this time, which must be a trying one, owing, not only to the dreadful earthquakes, but also to there being few visitors to the “ Happy Valley ” this season, as leave is stopped from India. The visitors generally contribute to the mission, and also bring money into the country. The Medical Missionary, Dr. Neve, is most hard working and an earnest Christian. In ordinary seasons he has about as much as he can do, and I fear, at this time, he must have much suffering to relieve, so that if his hands were strengthened by help from home, it would be well. I am sure both Mr. Wade and Mr. Clarke (the well-known Missionaries at Umritsar) would forward contributions to Kashmir.—Yours faithfully,
ANNIE UNWIN.

IS THE REVELATION JEWISH?—5.

DEAN ALFORD says, with regard to the symbolism of the chapter we are considering:—

> "There is an endless Babel of allegorical and historical interpretation of these locusts from the pit. The most we can say of their import is that they belong to a series of judgments on the ungodly which will immediately precede the second advent of our Lord; that the various and mysterious particulars of the vision will, no doubt, clear themselves up to the Church of God, when the time of its fulfilment arrives; but that no such clearing up has yet taken place, a very few hours of research among histories of Apocalyptic interpretation will serve to convince any reader, who is not himself the servant of a preconceived system."

This is largely true, yet we think that the following elucidation of the symbols used to describe these mystic locusts will be accepted as natural, obvious, and Scriptural; and, if so, it will follow that the true interpretation must be in accordance with it. Whether our interpretation fulfils this condition, our readers must decide for themselves.

They are "like horses prepared for battle." With the strength and energy of a war-horse they war in our members—they war against the soul (Jas. iv. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 11).

They have "crowns like gold." Absolute, despotic, kingly power. You must not say them nay. Nebuchadnezzar was the crown of gold; for whom he would he slew or kept alive. Darius was only silver; he could not deliver Daniel when once he had signed the decree.

"Their faces were as the faces of men." Like the Egyptians, they "are men and not God, and their horses are flesh and not spirit." They speak us friendly, like a brother man; they will even talk like a man of God, and profess to give us a command from God to disobey God (1 Kings xiii.).

"They have hair as the hair of women." This is "the filet d'amour," which, according to an old French poet, "captures the souls of men." "The hair of thy head is like purple; the king is held captive in the tresses thereof" (Song of Songs vii. 5, R.V.). Milton writes of "the tangles of Neæra's hair," and Dr. Watts speaks of "that small snare, the tangles of Amira's hair." And a more recent poet sings:—

"Oh, you tangled my life in your hair, Janette,
'Twas a silken and golden snare, Janette.
But so gentle the bondage, my soul did implore
The right to continue your slave evermore,
With my fingers enmeshed in your hair, Janette."

Could anything more fitly symbolise the entanglement of the lusts and desires of the flesh and of the mind, than the tangles of the hair of women, on which poets almost with one consent lay emphasis?

But, like Delilah, they fascinate only to destroy, for beneath the man's face and the woman's hair "Their teeth were as the teeth of lions." They tear their prey. David's prayer concerning Cush, the Benjamite, may well be ours against every cruel and deceitful lust—"Save me and deliver me, lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is none to deliver" (Psalm vii. 1, 2.)

"They had breastplates as it were breastplates of iron." They are hard of heart, and pitiless. Their conscience is coated with iron mail. They have indeed no conscience. Every kind and gracious quality suggested by the breastplate of the High Priest, bearing the names of his people on his shoulders of security and on his breast of love, finds its cold, hard contrast here; no Urim and Thummim, whereby God reveals his truth; no ephod of blue, telling of heavenly things; instead of this, the will of the flesh, which is enmity against God.

"The sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses, rushing to battle." The headlong rushing of the lusts of men into lasciviousness, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries, or into the more refined but not more godly pleasures of the mind, is as common now as when Peter wrote. Nor need we dwell upon the scorpion sting in the tail of every satiated lust. Truly "at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

They are generalled with more than the concentrated skill, audacity, and craft, of all the generals that ever lived; for their king is the angel of the abyss, Abaddon, Apollyon, the Destroyer of the souls of men.

Such is the First Woe, in which the worldly and deceitful lusts of the flesh, and desires of the mind, bring and execute their own punishment. And the Second is like it, but here God Himself rises up to judgment 'at the determined moment—the hour of a definite day, of a definite month, of a definite year.' 'The hour of God's judgment, the day of his wrath.'" (Wordsworth, Alford, Archdeacon Lee, in "Speaker's Commentary.") But for all this they repented not. Then follows the vision of the Third Woe, when the Lord God Almighty, who was, and is, and is to come, has taken to Him his great power, and reigns, and the nations were wroth, and his wrath came, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that He should reward his servants, and destroy them that destroy the earth.

The very essence of all Scripture is in the Revelation. These things were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. The Apocalypse is present truth, unveiling not only the internal condition of the Church, but the course of this world, dominated by the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. It is Scripture given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. THE "ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOL.

WITHOUT gainsaying or denying the work which the School Boards are doing, it must be distinctly understood that they can never supplant the beneficent operations of our ragged-schools, inasmuch as officialism can never take the place of love. No less an authority than the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury has over and over again insisted upon the paternal character of the ragged-schools. That characteristic which was abundantly brought to the front at the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the "One Tun" Ragged School, recently held at the School House, Old Pye-street, Westminster, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury.

To look at the happy faces of the children was evidence enough that they appreciated the benefit of the change in their circumstances wrought by the action of those connected with the school. The Earl of Shaftesbury was received with such shouts and cheers as must have seemed to his lordship an acknowledgement for his life-long labours for the good of others. The children having sung a hymn, the work of presenting twenty-five young servants with money prizes, books, and certificates, for having kept their situations over twelve months is commenced. It does one's heart good to hear the letters of commendation read from employers, and in these days when good, honest, sober, cheerful, obedient, servants are so rare, we are more than ever struck by the work done at the "One Tun." For these bright young servants are all "old scholars" and owe the ground-work of their training to its influence. Here too are young men—one indeed, who has held his situation twenty-two years, beginning as a shoeblack, has, by steadiness and industry, become an inspector of the brigade. The great value of these prizes does not lie so much in their amount as in the fact that the old school still "keeps touch" with their scholars, and exhibits that paternal regard in their welfare and in all the changes of life which cannot fail to keep them in mind of all the good lessons learned.

Then there were two prizes for two boys who had been most successful in boot mending—not very big chaps either—but they had repaired forty-one pairs during the year, "much to the comfort of their fellow scholars," as Mr. Payne declared. More singing of hymns, repetitions of portions of Scripture by members of the boys' and girls' Bible-classes; then comes a presentation—a letter from the children to Lord Shaftesbury, and a present of a toilet cushion, and patchwork toilet mats, the work of the sewing-class, the cushion being marked with the text, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee." And here is a bunch of artificial flowers for Lady Edith Ashley, from the hands of the little flower-makers of the school; we note that some of these flower-makers are also flower-growers, for we see some of them have been up for their prizes. Lord Shaftesbury thanks them for their gifts in a few words, which the children will long remember—words of practical advice and kindness. There are toilet cushion and mats, for a kind friend Mrs. Woodhouse, with a letter of thanks for all her kindness; be it remarked, these letters are read out by one or other of the young scholars, and well they do it. Then follows the reading of the report, from which we learn that the work of the Institution is, under God's blessing, progressing most satisfactorily, but that there is, unfortunately, about £100 deficit in the funds, and this sum is required over and above the present subscriptions to enable the committee to continue and extend the sixteen or seventeen various agencies connected therewith.

Lord Shaftesbury, before he retired, impressed upon the children the necessity of retaining the memory of the lessons they have been taught in the school. You cannot know, you cannot understand, said his lordship, what misery, wretchedness, filth, and vice you have been rescued from by the many kind friends who surround you. I am happy to say that the great progress which has been made by ragged schools during the past forty years has had a beneficial effect upon the minds of men, and that those who were laughed at and derided when they first began the work of the ragged school have become, as it were, the pioneers of the educational movements of the present day. So much, then, for example: you little things are not rich nor powerful, but you can do much by your example; for the example of a sinless, godly life will help others to become as you are, God-fearing and happy, and so you will help to extend the work carried on in this Institution.

When his lordship retired the cheering was renewed. Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson took the vacated chair, and further speeches were delivered by the Hon. Conrad Dillon, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. E. Bayliss (the blind Bible reader) the Rev. E. D. Matthews, Mr. Burgess, Mr. Payne, and Mr. Curtiss (of the Ragged School Union), who declared that the best speeches of the evening were the singing and Scripture repetition of the children, the prizes and work, and the happy faces which they saw around them, for it was a practical testimony of what was done at the "One Tun" Ragged School—a work which should not be allowed to languish for the want of that generous support which could alone supply the deficiency in its funds, a remark which found an echo in our own hearts as we came away with the feeling of having assisted at a most interesting and instructive anniversary.—The Rock.

SIFTED, BUT SAFE.

By Pastor FRANK WHITE.

"YE are they which have continued with Me, in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that He may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren" (Luke xxii. 28—32).

History repeats itself. As it was in the beginning, so is it now, and will be unto the end. In the faults and failures of the first followers of the Lord, we behold our own. Like them, we, too, are often sad and perplexed. Determined, by the grace of God, to hold fast our discipleship, we are, nevertheless, sorely troubled at times, and fear the worst. This comfort is left us, however. We have the same Master as they had.

It is this which makes these Gospel narratives so precious to us. They open a window, through which we may look and see our Lord and Saviour. In them we can spell out in large letters his strong love, his mighty compassions, his gentle, patient goodness. Here we see what we have gained in taking up the cross and becoming his disciples. If sickness, poverty, reproach, neglect, or even cruel persecution stare us in the face, we can say, withal, that we are gainers, infinite gainers, for this Saviour is ours, all ours. He who loved Peter and James and John loves us. Largely as they and others drew on his grace and pity, neither is exhausted. How can we lack? He who walked and talked with these poor men by the way, rebuking, warning, comforting, encouraging them in the midst of all their difficulties and trials, remains the same to us to-day and for ever. I cannot lose Him, and cannot, therefore, be lost.

"Ye are they," said our Lord, "which have continued with Me in my temptations." So ready is He to commend them where He can. If compelled in all fidelity to rebuke them for their shortcomings, He will not withhold from them their due of praise. With all their faults, they had remained faithful to Himself. True they had often grieved Him by their waywardness, and unbelief; yet He gladly bears witness to their sincerity and steadfastness. No doubt, they had experienced some severe shakings, especially when they saw those who had taken first rank amongst the professed followers of the Lord, and had been the loudest in their professions of attachment to his person and teaching, "go back, and walk no more with Him." This could not but stagger them. Still, they had nobly stood their ground, crying "Lord, to whom shall we go, Thou hast the words of eternal life." They had "continued" with Him. Alas, very soon, they were to give a lamentable proof of human weakness and infidelity. The Lord knew this, yet withholds not from them this word of loving commendation as to the past.

We learn from this how much He values continuance—"patient continuance in well-doing." It is not beginning to do well, but continuing therein; it is not starting in the race, but pressing on to the goal; it is not the first profession, the mere calling "Lord, Lord," that wins the Master's commendation, but "continuing to the end" to do the will of the Father. A needful lesson to learn in a day like the present, when a profession of Christ is so lightly made, to be as lightly abandoned.

Attached to this word of praise is a promise, "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto Me." This was the promise of a King, howbeit, a King in disguise, yet a King, and that by Divine right; a promise, too, which strangely contrasted with the outward circumstances of the Promiser. At the time when the Lord Jesus uttered these words, He was but as a "wayfaring man, and a stranger," with "nowhere to lay his head"—a King without a crown, his only throne the heart's affections of a few poor fishermen; a despised Nazarene, soon to stand as a criminal at the bar of the Roman Governor; yet we find Him promising to these poor followers of his, chief posts in a coming kingdom.

What faith must they have had to have appreciated in any measure such a promise as this. But, Oh! what faith, what mighty faith, does such language evidence in the Saviour Himself, that He was able to look through all the darkness that then encompassed his human path, and calmly and confidently contemplate such an issue. Blessed, blessed example for us, whose path is also overcast with cloud and difficulty. Wherefore, seeing we have such a witness, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Prince and Perfector of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at right hand of the throne of God.

Following on the promise of a place in his kingdom, come words of warning, uttered, we may believe, in tones of affectionate solemnity, "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have you" (lit., hath obtained you by asking). The "you" is in the plural, and so included the eleven. Spoken, as we believe these words were, after the feet-washing scene (John xiii.), Judas must have been absent at the time. Satan already possessed him. He would "have" Peter, also, and all the rest of the disciples. Hence his prayer. For the devil can pray, as well as quote the Scriptures, when it suits his purpose to do so. This is not the first time, in the Bible, that we find the arch-adversary on his knees making similar request.

He presented a like petition, in the case of the patriarch Job, whom he also desired should be surrendered to him, and for the very same purpose. He would "have" them. He had no real right to them. They did not belong to him. They were not his, but the Lord's, "bought with a price." This Satan knew, but he would try his best, or, rather, his worst. Not without special permission could he have them, even for a little. He, doubtless, hoped he would ultimately get them altogether. He had set his malignant mind upon them, and all the more determinedly that they were the near followers of Christ. It is certain that the devil makes a dead set upon those who have stood high in the Christian profession, and who have more closely than most followed the Master. Just as in the time of war, the officers are the special mark for a cunning and determined foe. The great enemy of souls knows too well that the higher a man stands in the Gospel ranks the more damage will be wrought by his downfall. With the most skilfully planned temptations that he was capable of making he had assailed, thrice over, the Master Himself, and had been utterly foiled; he would now try his dark hand at his disciples—his body-guard, his chosen apostles. This would not only show up the apostles, but sadly reflect on the Master Himself.

Such was Satan's aim. Is it any different now, think you? Not a whit. As disciples of the same Lord, we have, alas! to do with the same devil. His devices to compass our ruin are "legion." By what a multitude of schemes and plans does he seek to cast us down. With what subtlety as well as variety are his temptations characterised. How skilfully does he go to work. With what daring, too, does he advance again and again to the attack. Who amongst us can be even with him? Who is proof against such an adversary? Not one of us. Our safety lies just where Peter's lay. "But I have prayed for thee." If Satan prays against us, the Lord prays for us. If the enemy of our souls has a purpose concerning us, so has our Lord. We know which shall in the end prevail.

Satan's purpose in the case of Peter and the other apostles is evident from our Lord's words, "That he may sift you as wheat." It profits wheat to be relieved of the cumbering chaff. Would, then, the devil do the disciples a good turn? Would he pose as their benefactor? Nay, he could but mean them ill, whatever might be his proposal. Nothing venture, nothing have. By a severe sifting, a few grains of wheat might be thrown out, and lost. It were worth the effort. Let him only try. He did try, and we know the result. Peter denied his Lord with oaths and curses, and the rest "forsook him and fled." Did, therefore, the devil win the day? No; he lost it. His very success turned out an eminent failure. Peter repented, was restored, and became the strengthener of his brethren. Of the remaining eleven, "not one of them" was lost, but the son of perdition.

And what was the secret of Satan's defeat? "I have prayed (lit., I prayed) for thee." Both Satan's prayer and the Lord's were of the past. Though the danger had not actually arrived, it had virtually passed. Christ's askings are always havings. Every prayer of his must needs be answered. "I prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not," that is, fail not utterly—might not cease. Peter himself failed, sadly and sorely, but not as Satan hoped. He fell, and that grievously, but he rose again. Bruised and broken by the fall, Divine grace yet preserved him from apostacy, kept him within the sieve, even whilst the devil himself had the handling thereof. With the devil as the sieve-holder, the true saints of God, though sifted, are safe. Terribly tossed, from side to side, cast down, but not destroyed; cast about, but not cast out; sifted, but safe. Yet, let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

CANAL, GIPSY, AND VAN CHILDREN.

TWO Sunday evenings ago, in the midst of heavenly sounds and earthly flowers, I met with, at Hill Morton, two canal boats, in which there were one man, one woman, and seven children of both sexes. So far as I could ascertain not one of this family could read or write a sentence. The woman was ill. But she managed to creep to the door of their floating tent, to tell me that she had, a few days previously, sent three of their children, clean, with their week's school fees to the nearest school; but the poor, ignorant children were not allowed to enter it; and had to return to the cabin, to play in ignorance and coal dust upon the towing-path. Some time previously, the same woman said she sent three children with school fees to the Oakthorpe school. The fees were received gladly: but, instead of the children being taught to read and write they were put to "thread needles all day."

To thrust canal, gipsy, and van children into the cold is not spreading civilisation. Many canal-boat families often pass half their time at collieries and other places, waiting for their loads, and the children, whom the Canal Boats Acts allow to live in the cabins, could go to school and make half the number of attendances I have set forth without much difficulty. The captain sorrowfully and sarcastically said, as he stood at the tiller, "The education of our children is thrown overboard."

As a nation, our sympathies have not been screwed up to concert pitch for the 60,000 canal, gipsy, and van children. Overcrowding and other evils continue in canal-boats and travelling-vans to a fearful extent. In fact, it would appear in many cases that the discordant sounds of ignorance and misery, blended with self-interest, have become more pleasant to us than otherwise. —I am, very sincerely yours,

George Smith, of Coalville.

GERMAN SEAMEN'S MISSION.—A pamphlet, reprinted from the German, tells what is being done for German sailors in foreign ports. It is fully admitted that Germany has been much behind in this matter. Pastor Harms, of Sunderland, was recently appointed representative of the Society to visit the seaports in Great Britain, and report upon them. The result is here given, showing that the condition of German sailors in these places is for the most part deplorable, on account of the temptations which beset them on leaving the vessels. This pamphlet will be interesting to many, and can be obtained of the Central Committee for Home Missions, Genthiner Straſse, 38, Berlin, W.

THE LATE MR. LINDSAY G. DEAS.

THE Christian community of Edinburgh, and especially that part of it devoted to evangelistic work, have lost, in Mr. Lindsay Deas, A.R.A.M., a much respected and beloved fellow-labourer. The youngest of a family of born musicians, he outstripped them all; and, entering the Royal Academy of Music, London, at the age of fifteen, he carried off its highest honours, and at the end of his course was elected an Associate. Subsequently he studied at the Conservatorium, Frankfort-on-Maine, and at the early age of twenty-three he settled in Edinburgh, and commenced his professional career.

His exceptional ability as a pianist was at once recognised, and, had not two circumstances hindered, he would probably, ere his death, have risen to the rank of a virtuoso in his art. The restraining conditions were, first, his delicate health, and, secondly, his unfeigned piety. The "treasures upon earth" lay at his feet, but he had no heart to handle the muck-rake. Major Whittle came to Edinburgh about the same time as he did. Mr. Deas threw himself into the blessed work then begun, and, conjointly with Mr. and Mrs. MacGranahan, greatly helped the musical part of the services. He was a special favourite with these brethren; his quiet unostentatious demeanour, conjoined with his reverent spirit and earnest desire to promote the glory of his God, being so much in keeping with their own ideas. His mastery of his art, both theoretical and executive, was so conspicuous that his co-operation became one of the human factors in the success of the meetings. Throughout Mrs. MacGranahan's illness, this finished artist, who might have been reaping a harvest in the concert-room, was to be found night after night, without fee or reward, seated at the organ while Mr. MacGranahan led the choir. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey also had the benefit of these labours of love.

In a word, it may be said that, wherever Christ was to be honoured or men saved, there was this faithful servant delighted to be used. His time, which was limited, his talent, which was great, and his strength, which was feeble, were all humbly laid at the Master's feet. The last time I saw and heard him in public was in the Sunday evening service in the Free Assembly Hall, a few months ago. I was in time to see him come in and take his place at the organ, and I could not fail to remark the ripple of satisfaction that seemed to run over the faces of the congregation, interpreting itself, in the case of the choir, in a smile of welcome. It was a delight to sing to such playing; choir, congregation, and preacher were all lifted up to a higher level. I believe it was his last public service for the Master who has claimed him, and it is a happiness to me to remember that I was the speaker that night.

At the early age of twenty-seven, a victim to pulmonary consumption—our country's scourge—he was translated from the earthly to the heavenly choir. We who are left behind can only say "Amen," to the "Well done!" of that blessed Saviour with whom he is now for ever.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.—The Occasional Paper for last month surveys the results of thirteen years' labour which form an interesting record. The Convalescent Home at Folkestone, and the old farmhouse near Chilworth, in Surrey, used as a place of summer resort for poor children, are both doing excellent service. Visitors to the Mission, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles, are recommended to call on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 12.45. Communications may be made to Mr. F. A. Pring, the resident doctor.

DUBLIN Y.M.C.A. —The thirty-fifth annual report of this Association says it is impossible to tabulate all that has been done. In the various religious meetings there have been undoubted evidences of blessing, while the literary meetings have achieved considerable success. The Bible-classes are highly prized. Evangelistic and other Christian work is carried on with success. The financial statement shows an increase of income, but not more than is required for the effective working of the Association, whose headquarters are at the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street.

GLASGOW PRISON GATE MISSION.

LAST year's Report of this institution would prepare its friends for a large development of the work, in the prospect which was then held out of new premises for the Mission. That prospect has been realised. A plain but substantial building has been erected in Whitevale-street, partial possession of which was obtained at Whitsunday, 1884; but it was well on in August before it was ready for full or comfortable occupancy. In the former house, in William-street, the workers laboured under many disadvantages, the most serious being the inability to provide for more than twenty women within the house, while the remainder had to lodge elsewhere. Many necessitous cases had to be refused, and allowed to go away unhelped. Now there is accommodation for about eighty inmates.

The removal to Whitevale-street was attended with considerable loss and inconvenience. During the first three months, on account of the unfinished state of the building, the numbers had to be reduced to twenty, and these were not in full work, as, in leaving William-street, nearly all the small washings were lost, and, this being a considerable part of the earnings, was a serious loss. Gradually, however, a new connection was formed, and, by the end of the year, the ground lost was entirely recovered. Sewing, knitting, and laundry work are carried on as hitherto, but with increased capacity for executing orders.

Many of those who have gone into domestic service, and others who have returned to respectable relations, have given evidence of their thorough reformation. One, who has been eighteen months in Canada, writes most cheeringly of her happiness and comfort, as housekeeper on a farm there, and speaks, in grateful and affectionate terms, of her stay at the Mission, and lately enclosed a five-dollar bill as a donation. A love of strong drink is the prime factor in the misery and degradation of our women. Not a few of them realise this, and many a bitter tear is shed by them over a life, which, at one time, gave promise of something far removed from one of vice and crime. Symptoms of a most hopeful character are not wanting in this class—eagerness in listening to the message of salvation.

Many friends have visited the Home regularly, and their addresses have had a marked effect upon the women. Miss White and Miss Bryson are still closely identified with the work, and have Bible-readings on alternate Sabbaths in the Home. The interruption to the work, consequent upon the change of residence, has had the effect of considerably lessening the income this year, while the increase of numbers has added much to the expenses. The long-continued dullness of trade has also told severely upon the receipts; but a change for the better, with the increased facility for undertaking work, will, no doubt, render this institution more nearly self-supporting.

Any help will be gratefully acknowledged by the treasurer, W. R. M. Church, C.A., 75, St. George's-place, Glasgow, or Miss A. A. Bryson, 1, Belmar-terrace, Pollokshields, Glasgow.

"OUR GIRLS" is the title of the first Report of the Girls' Preventive Home, 255, Brixton-road, S.W. This modest endeavour provides a home and training for twelve young girls. At present there are only seven, and additional help is asked for, to enable the committee to extend operations. The homes from which some of the present inmates have been taken are described as being frightful. The Lady Superintendent is Miss Clements.

RAYS OF GOSPEL LIGHT IN MADEIRA.—This little pamphlet of sixteen pages gives a few facts concerning God's work in Madeira. Those who are acquainted with the labours of the late Dr. Kalley and his successor, Rev. W. H. Hewitson, in that beautiful island, will here find references to the grand work they did in 1845-7, and also testimonies to the continued faithfulness of some of the converts who at that period of persecution narrowly escaped death for the Gospel's sake. The pamphlet may be obtained of Mrs. G. Smart, Trevor Cottage, Coity-road, Bridgend, Glamorganshire.

TWO SONNETS.

THE QUESTION OF DOUBT.

O DARK and anguished world, wherein is seen
Victorious, rampant, universal wrong,
Where woe and wail are ever drowning song,
And tears come quicker than the smiles between!
What means this torrent that unceasing rolls,
This stemless stream of evil, deep and wide,
That bears upon its black and hideous tide
Myriads of wasted lives and ruined souls?
What plan in this vast chaos can there be—
Chaos of strife and sorrow, sin and pain?
What meaning to this awful mystery
Of evil regnant, truth and goodness slain?
What hope for helpless, crushed humanity?
In such unbounded loss, what room for gain?

THE ANSWER OF FAITH.

Judgest thou so, O finite human mind?
Surely thou art most like a child, who cries—
Scanning a strange tongue's ciphered mysteries—
"There is no meaning here, since none I find!"
As if one passing a cathedral door
The while an organ wailed some chord of woe,
Should moan distressed, "No music here," and go,
Not heeding what came after and before!
Be sure this sad world has a meaning sweet,
God's End is fairer far than thine could be,
Vaster his Ways and Means. Then, at his feet,
Trust, wait, and worship, till all mystery
Shall break in perfect light; all discords meet
In deep, divinest, fullest harmony.

THE BIBLE IN CENTRAL ASIA.

IN a lengthy review in The Times of Dr. Lansdell's "Russian Central Asia" (Sampson Low & Co.), to which we recently referred, the following passages occur:—

"Dr. Lansdell's first object in his extensive and rapid journey was the distribution of the Scriptures and other religious literature in various languages. He found favour in high quarters, and succeeded in carrying out his benevolent object with complete success. He had free access to prisons wherever he went in Russian territory, and the report he has to give of these institutions is a marked contrast to what we have heard from 'Stepniak' and other Russian writers of that party. Dr. Lansdell speaks freely enough of the sanitary conditions of such prisons as were open to criticism in this respect; but so far as prison discipline is concerned he saw nothing to justify the dreadful charges made by the Nihilists. . . . His account of his stay in Kuldja is particularly interesting. He was here asked by a small colony of Roman Catholics to conduct a religious service, with which request he of course gladly complied; both on Sunday and the following days he sold a very large number of Scriptures.

"Several chapters are devoted to the Kirghiz, into which a great amount of information concerning those interesting people has been collected. To the prisons three chapters are devoted, one of them to the Fortress prison of St. Petersburg itself, in which he had permission to see everything. It is in these chapters he endeavours to rebut the statements of Prince Krapotkin and other Russian writers. The most trying part of the journey was probably that across the desert wich separates Khiva from Krasnovodsk in the Caspian, the southern part of the Ust-Urt plateau. It took several days, during which the travellers' clothes were never off, and water could only be had in cupfuls. There were dangers from Turcoman robbers too, and infinite tedium from the slow rate of travelling; and it is no wonder that when Krasnovodsk came in sight that a 'Thank God!' burst from Dr. Lansdell's lips. This desert is of great geological interest; the travellers came upon a great and remarkable depression that must have been at one time under water, the water which at no very remote period must have covered all this part of Central Asia. Altogether Dr. Lansdell has reason to be proud of a work which is really monumental."

We hope to give occasional extracts from these handsome volumes, which contain many interesting illustrations of Scripture texts, and details of the social life and customs of the peoples among whom the adventurous author sojourned.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN PHILADELPHIA.

THE visit to Philadelphia of this earnest evangelist has been most welcome. Many have felt that he was sent to us by the Lord in answer to prayer. The visit extended over three weeks, with two and three services daily. The meetings were from first to last attended by large numbers. Often the splendid hall of the Y.M.C.A. and the large churches where the meetings were held were crowded to excess. This, at this season of the year, was most remarkable, especially when we consider the dreadful state of spiritual declension prevailing, together with the unostentatious manner in which our brother's progress is made from place to place—the absence of committees preparing for his coming beforehand—and that he is entirely alone in the work. To the services have been gathered ministers and people of all denominations.

The bringing of such multitudes together, and meetings in work and worship of such numbers of people holding different views in many respects, was very blessed. The elevated and scriptural style of Mr. Varley's pulpit ministrations, in which energy and culture, argument and illustration, soundness of doctrine and catholicity of spirit, pungency and pathos, were blended in a masterly manner, places him among the most effective teachers and preachers of the age. Best of all was the intense interest awakened in divine things by these services, which showed that the power was not of man, but of God. Listening, day after day, to the clear and simple unfoldings of divine truth, and experiencing the wonderful power of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the meetings, many Christian workers were led to exclaim, with Paul, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;" with renewed zeal they are constrained to go forth to "rescue the perishing."

The afternoon Bible-readings were occasions of great interest. To see hundreds of people turning over the pages of their Bibles, and eagerly drinking in the expositions, was a most unusual sight for this city. Nor were these audiences composed of Christian people only. Many non-churchgoing people attended. And many, who though intelligent with regard to secular affairs, but ignorant concerning the great truths of the Scriptures, were by these faithful presentations of God's Word enabled to discover in their old Bibles an undeveloped mine, more precious than the gold of California—a mine which all their life has been within their reach, but which they have sadly neglected. At these meetings, the Christian's Standing, the Lord's Second Coming, and the Advocacy and High Priesthood of our Lord, were brought out with great clearness; grandly dispelling the doubts and fears of years, the ignorance of a lifetime, and leading many timid believers who had never seen the eternal efficacy of the blood of Jesus, into the light and joy of peace with God. In his lecture on Hebrews, the evangelist struck a blow at "Irvingism" from which it will not soon recover.

The testimonies as to the power of the word as delivered by our brother are neither few nor far between. Not only have God's people been enlightened, comforted, and strengthened, but sinners have been led to see a beauty in Jesus, and to trust Him for salvation. While eternity alone will reveal the full results of our brother's labours, we rejoice to find so many seals to the faithfulness of his ministry among us. The name of Henry Varley has become very dear to thousands of American Christians, and it is their earnest regret that he feels compelled to leave a land where his labours have been so signally blessed of God. May the Lord go with him, and richly bless him in his future efforts for Christ and souls. WM. B. CULLISS.

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—4.

REVERSE SKETCHES.

THE old fox-hunting parson has well nigh vanished, but the reverend cricketer is now to be found in every part of our land. Public opinion, with its strange and unaccountable tastes, declared it would have no more of the former, and for several years has pursued him with such relentless hostility, that where he still exists he keeps himself very scarce. Yet are there many in country districts who miss and mourn the hero of the chase. He was nearly always "a gentleman;" and his wealth, generosity, and family name so easily secured him respect, that he seldom had to exact it.

The would-be priestling who succeeds him is generally found to lack the points which gained favour for his predecessor in the eyes of the masses; and as he is frequently found possessed with great ideas of his own importance, he is constantly demanding, without ever obtaining, the regard that was so readily rendered to the other. Perhaps, when all has been said and done, the state of things was not really worse in the days of Rev. Mr. Nimrod, than that which exists at the present time under the sway of Rev. Father Monk.

It was bad enough, however, in Mr. Nimrod's day. I stopped for several weeks in a parish in which he was regarded as its spiritual head. As the village schoolmaster was an acquaintance of mine, I once happened to be in Grenford schoolroom when the old gentleman came in. Some of the youngsters had been in mischief; and, after threatening them most vigorously, calling them, at the same time, young devils, he bade his subordinate, Mr. Dominy, to let them have it well. In case the parents might complain, he was to give it the old ones "right and left," with the reminder that his vicar was at his back.

I went to church on the Sunday to hear with what kind of spiritual food the worthy parishioners got supplied. "Where did he say the text was?" asked the clerk, by whose side I found myself sitting. "He will be just nineteen minutes, then, with this sermon," said he, as he learnt the chapter and verse; and, asking me to wake him in a quarter of an hour, he successfully settled himself down to sleep. His superior, it appeared, had given most of his sermons so often, that he knew to a minute how long each one would require in its delivery. All the discourses I heard preached while in the village were, comparatively, very harmless.

But, oh! the spiritual condition of that parish! The old gentleman was wont to boast that it held no Dissenter within its bounds. All in the central village, and all in the scattered farmhouses and cottages, were "Churchfolk" to the core. But the barriers opposed to Dissenters could not shut out the Lord of Life.

The village choristers were, one night, waiting for their choirmaster to teach them Christmas carols. I had gone in to listen to their "practice," and offered to take his place for a while. We sang carol after carol, but still he failed to put in appearance; at last they determined to wait no longer. Yet, were they to go without a word? How could I begin to speak to them on sacred and eternal things? I offered to tell them a story, and as I have, many a time, done in the railway-train (for the mention of soldiers and sailors will always secure a hearing from people of a certain class), I gave them the conversion of Hedley Vicars. They listened most attentively, even when, forgetting him, I continued to dwell on the well-known text—"The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

The winter went, and the summer followed; one of the choristers was in the hayfield, when he fell as if from a sunstroke. They took him home, as they thought, to die, and the neighbours concluded, one and all, that his reason had gone before his life, inasmuch as he began to pray, in a manner altogether strange to them. Another of the choir went to see his afflicted comrade, when the poor lad began something as follows: "George, they say this is sunstroke; I don't believe that it is; the Lord Jesus and Satan have been fighting for my soul, but it belongs to the Lord Jesus. Do you remember that night, about Christmas time, when Mr. Linnell spoke to us about the blood of Jesus? That led to the salvation of my soul." The other remarked that he believed the same address had, in like manner, been blest to him, and the two rejoiced together.

The poor lad did not die at the time. He recovered, as he felt he should, and went again to his work. But when another summer had come, and the other men were in the hayfield again, poor Dick began to droop once more. He had given true marks of a saving change, during the time that had elapsed since his former illness; now he wanted to see me, before going home, as he felt that this sickness was to be unto death. A friend of his wrote a pressing letter, urging me to meet his wishes, and a feeling of sadness comes over me now to think that I refused. I know my time was fully engaged, but I wish I had strained a point, and gone. Poor lad! they told me, afterwards, that he died in perfect peace, nor did I doubt their word. After all, "Salvation is of God," and He can save where and whom He will. JOHN E. LINNELL.

FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

ON Friday week a drawing-room meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. Handcock, 66, Redcliffe-square, South Kensington, in furtherance of the work of the Society. Rev. H. J. Brown, vicar of Christ's Church, Barnet, read a statement showing that the lines on which the Society works are that each country must evangelise its own people. Out of the many existing foreign and continental societies, ten received aid from this Society, and all were deeply grateful. The income for the past year had fallen £200 short of the needed amount. On the other hand, the sphere of operation had been enlarged, encouraging success had marked their efforts, a union of two of the most influential religious bodies had almost been effected, and the higher classes in France and Belgium were being reached with growing success.

The Chairman, Hon. C. H. Hampden, pleaded for increased support for a society whose aim it was to render much needed help to existing societies. Having seen something of the superstition prevailing in Belgium, he could testify to the pressing need for sustaining all evangelistic operations on the Continent. Rev. J. Bennett believed that the disaster which happened to the French Protestants, represented by the martyred Huguenots, had been overruled for good. As Secretary of the Société Centrale, Paris, Pasteur Duchemin addressed the meeting, and compared England to a vast Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge among the nations. France was indeed very far from faith, but a deep sense of a felt want was being more than ever realised. The people were getting tired of infidelity; they were hostile to religion only as exhibited to them through the priesthood. Great good was being done through the many evangelistic societies, much more than was at present manifest.

Pasteur Ouriere, of Narbonne, said he was formerly a monk and a priest in the Romish Church, and therefore well acquainted with the inner state of the people. Ten years ago he was converted through the influence of a Scotch family, and he has since then become the representative of the Evangelical Society at Geneva. The meeting was also addressed briefly by Pasteur Pontet de la Harpe, of Bayswater. The Chairman urged strongly the immediate formation of a local branch of the Society. It seems that this Society has precisely the same object as the Continental Evangelical Society, only it is more especially connected with the Established Church.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES.—Miss Cole, in her new Report, says much spiritual blessing has been vouchsafed to the work. One orphan gave her heart to Christ at one of the meetings held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Fleet-road Hall, Hampstead, and came out brightly on the Lord's side; since then many others have made a good confession of faith in Jesus Christ. During the year twenty-five new cases have been admitted. Subscriptions having fallen off, the children could not have their usual new garments. All letters and parcels should be sent to Miss Cole, at the Orphanage, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W.

INFLUENCE.

"COME, sister, let us have our twilight talk round this cosy fire," said Frank, a fine handsome youth of fifteen. Ever since Margaret had come home to take charge of the motherless children, they had all spent this evening hour together. Then, it was that the little daily troubles were put straight—the joys again rejoiced over, and multiplied fourfold, with their mother-sister to share them. Many a word for the Master, many a precious lesson of his love was then given, which bore real fruit in their lives for his glory.

"Well, darlings, draw in closer, and tell me what you have been doing, or thinking about to-day."

"Why, Katie and I," answered Frank, "have been trying to make out what Mr. Newman meant yesterday at church about influence. You know his text was 'No man liveth to himself.' He said that we either do harm or good to everyone with whom we come in contact; upon each we leave our mark."

"Yes," added Katie, a bright merry-looking girl; "it seems such an awful thing for me, when you all call me 'minxy,' and say I'm always in mischief; what does 'influence' mean?"

"I have heard it explained," said Margaret, "as a 'flowing in' of some power from one to another. I believe the word 'influenza' is derived from the same root. You remember when little Nancy caught cold at the school treat, she 'influenced' us so much, that we all had a cold."

"I thought they were only good people who influenced others?" said Frank. "Harry Westgarth said, as we came home, that boys like us had no influence."

"Ah, but that's the worst of it," answered Kate; "for in my chapter this morning I saw that the ten spies influenced the whole congregation of Israel by discouraging words; then I thought of the awfulness of that bad woman, Jezebel's influence. This is what has made me so unhappy to-day, and set me thinking whether my love of mischief and fun was influencing baby, and Herbert, and the others; I could not bear that they should become naughty through me," she added, with much feeling.

"Why, darling," said Margaret, "it is just that lighthearted, lively love of fun and frolic in you that God wants to use for his glory. You remind me of some lines I saw quoted last week; I copied them for my note-book. Here they are—

> 'A loving, cheerful temper,
> A gentle smiling face,
> Will cast a ray of brightness
> Within the darkest place.
> Words, looks, and deeds of kindness,
> Are sunbeams bright and fair;
> God help you, dear young Christians,
> To shed them everywhere.'

Give God your brightness, thank Him for your happy cheerful temperament, and He will make it a blessing to all around you. Be his bit of sunshine, Katie; linking Him with it makes all the difference. In the sixty-ninth Psalm, we see how a song of praise sheds its influence, how it not only pleased the Lord, but it says that 'the humble shall see it and be glad.' It was Paul's happy confidence in God which 'influenced' the poor shipwrecked mariners on their voyage to Rome, till they were 'all of good cheer.'"

"But if speaking discouraging words, or a word of praise, influences, surely that means that all we do or say may have an influence for good or evil."

"Certainly, Frank," replied Margaret, "I believe the way we wear our clothes, the way we look, and walk, the way we speak, all go to make up our influence, while each act in itself, is an influence. I remember last Christmas Eve, as I walked up the High-street to visit that poor fellow who was dying of consumption, feeling so tired, I thought I must really go back again. Suddenly two girls tripped past me, laden with Christmas parcels. I knew, most likely (as that day is a busy one to all), they were tired, too, and they seemed to give me new life and energy, as I quickened my pace, influenced by their bright buoyant steps."

"I suppose then," laughed Frank, "it was influence that made a crowd of people collect round our house to-day. Don't look shocked, you dear old Margaret, when I confess to having played a trick—I only fixed my eye on a chimney stack, with as anxious a look as I could command. Soon I saw a boy look up, then a young woman, and so on, till I had attracted quite a crowd."

"Well, Frank dear, if I am not to be shocked, then I must read the moral. In the fact that your looking up caused others to do so too, there lies a deeper lesson than we at first think. If we fix our eyes upon Jesus some one else will look to Him also. You remember 'when they looked unto Him, they were lightened,' or as another translation puts it, 'their faces were made bright.' Do you remember the tall poplar in our old garden, and how all the apple-trees and shrubs near it grew tall too? Even the little seeds planted at the root, sprang up with wonderful rapidity, showing how, in nature, one thing acts upon another."

"But what says little Nancy," said Katie, bending down to a little sad-looking creature on the hearthrug, who was resting her head on Margaret's knee; "we've not heard a word from you since we gathered round the fire?"

"I don't know what to say, except that Aunt Mary always makes me happy, when I am near her, she is so happy. Is that 'influence,' Cousin Margaret?"

"Oh, yes!" answered Margaret, thoughtfully; "that is the power of a holy life. God alone knows where the influence of a calm, restful woman may end. May we be like her, or rather like Christ, our and her Master."

"Talking about little things," said Frank, "one of my masters told me that the remembrance of his mother's hand upon his head had kept him from many a sin. I think I could understand that," said the boy tenderly, as he too remembered how often his own mother's hand had been placed there, as she had prayed that he might grow up an earnest, God-fearing man.

"Why, I never thought of it before," exclaimed Katie playfully, pulling Nancy's fair curls; "the other day I saw this little pet so earnestly sewing the buttons on to her boots, and I was so ashamed to think that I had only three on mine, that I quickly followed her example."

"Which was the most remarkable event of the nineteenth century," teased Frank; "but here's father coming up the garden walk, and I see Margaret is wanting to see if tea is ready; so, Katie, as the finale to our talk, sing us Longfellow's 'Psalm of Life'—you know it just fits in with our conversation." So Katie sang—

> "Lives of great men all remind us
> We can make our lives sublime,
> And, departing, leave behind us
> Footprints on the sands of time—
>
> "Footprints that perhaps another,
> Sailing o'er life's troubled main,
> Some forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
> Seeing may take heart again."

TO THE HUNGRY AND THIRSTY.

"BLESSED are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled" (Matt. v. 6).

"I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely" (Rev. xxi. 6).

"Let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. xxii. 17).

"Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (John iv. 14).

"Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. He that believeth on Me . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water" (John vii. 37, 38).

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost" (Matt. iii. 2).

"Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently. He shall give thee the desire of thine heart" (Ps. xxxvii. 7, 4).

"According to your faith be it unto you" (Matt. ix. 29).

THE POWER OF SYMPATHY.

By Dr. CLIFFORD.

I AM sure we could heal more if we felt more, and we should feel more if we saw more of the real life of men. We are powerless to heal because we are cold, and we are cold because we give such scanty attention to Christ's law of fireside evangelism, and hurry away from the galling wretchedness and vice of our city streets, from the gaping wounds of our social life through which the blood of the State slowly trickles away, from the brutal inhumanity of man to man, or the worse inhumanity of man to woman. If we know anything at all of these things, it is from the rose-scented reports about outcast London from the pens of newspaper reviewers, or by the gossip over afternoon tea, and never or rarely at first hand and from personal friendship with the toilers in these abodes of misery. Ah! we wonder the power of the Lord is not present to heal, and, indeed, well we may; but it is only because we are so little present with those who need the healing.

We want more humanity; we are too far from our work; we need to study that tear-stained book of the poor men's souls, to acquire an individual knowledge of their sorrows and temptations, defeats and hopes, plans and perplexities, and then we shall have no difficulty in keeping ourselves alive to the infinite value of men, in saturating our nature with sympathy, or in speaking in such a way that our words shall go straight to their hearts as good news from God, and be as bracing as the breezes of the sea, welcome as the flowers of spring, gentle and refreshing as the dew, and fragrant as the garden of the Lord. If we watched for the keen yearnings of the soul for a glimpse of the face of the Father; knew of the strained eyes and bony fingers that are pushed out into the empty air to lay hold of the forgotten God; heard the despairing cry for a word of free pardon from Him who alone can give it, surely, then, our feet would be swifter to carry the evangel of God's love to the living, and our tongues more pathetic in persuading them to accept it.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS.—Mrs. Evered Poole sends us her annual report of the Juvenile Association in aid of the Army Scripture Readers' Society, by which we find that the Juveniles have raised £318 during the past year. Another reader has been engaged, and the Association has spread itself among old and young.

THE DISCHARGED PRISONERS' AID SOCIETY Report states that nine fresh branches have been established since August in various parts of England and Wales. A Conference of Managers is being held during the present month, at the Westminster Hotel, which will develop further the designs and programme of the society. The headquarters are at 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

THE SERVICE OF GOD.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, June 24.

PRIOR to the commencement of the proceedings, several hymns were sung by the congregation. The formal proceedings were opened with silent prayer. The hymn was then sung—

"Jesus, stand among us
In Thy risen power,
Let this time of worship
Be a hallowed hour."

Dr. Wilson, the venerable vicar of Islington, then led the meeting in prayer.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

The Chairman, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, having read Nehemiah ix., said: You will permit me, not as one fit to teach many here, but as occupying the place assigned to me as the servant of this Conference, to say a few words with regard to the passage I have just read. There was a great Conference at Jerusalem 2330 years ago, and it seems to me that it does, indeed, prove a fit model and pattern for our Conference here in London. It happened, like to-day's Conference, to be held on the 24th day of the month, but I do not, of course, dwell upon that. That is a coincidence, and we may make what application we like of it. It is not with regard to the coincidence of date, but with regard to the similarity of circumstances to which our attention needs to be directed. It had been, as we read in the chapter before us, a day of very great gladness. It was a time of great revival, and great reformation among the people. They were gathered together to seek the Lord, and in his strength to consecrate themselves afresh unto Him. They assembled in the attitude and in the garb of humiliation. They were the professing people of God, and their practice had not corresponded with their profession. As the professing servants of God, and those who had a desire to serve Him better in the future than they had done in the past, they took the only right and proper place—that of humiliation before God because of their failures and their sins.

They separated themselves, as we read, from the world, from all strangers, and they confessed their sins and the iniquities of their fathers, with that wonderful confession which occupies the main part of this chapter. There is also mingled with it a strain of heartfelt praise. The two went together—sorrow, because of their sins; gladness, because of God's unfailing mercy. What had been those sins? Let me point out one or two expressions in the chapter which describe them. "They dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments, and refused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst amongst them; but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion appointed a captain to return to their bondage" (verses 16, 17). We read again of further mercies. "Nevertheless they were disobedient, and rebelled against Thee, and cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets which testified against them to turn them to Thee, and they wrought great provocations" (ver. 26). Look also at ver. 28: "But after they had rest, they did evil again before thee;" ver. 29: "They dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments." What a terrible record of failure and transgression on the part of the only people in the world who knew and professed to serve the true God. Look at the mercies in one or two other verses. Verse 17: "But——." Oh! those blessed "Buts" and "yets," and "neverthelesses," which describe the unfailing goodness and mercy of God "But thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and forsookest them not." (Read also verses 19—21, and ver. 31.) That was the strain of thanksgiving that mingled with their expressions of humiliation and confession of sin.

Surely, standing at the commencement of this Conference, when we propose, God permitting us, to occupy our minds so much with the solemn and blessed subject of service to God, can we, ought we, to take any other place or any other ground than that which was taken in the Conference at Jerusalem two millenniums and more ago? Surely every heart here that knows anything of its own plague, everyone here who is able at all to discern the true character of his service in the sight of God, anyone of us who has the least conception of the faithfulness and the mercies of our God, will say, "Yes, that is the only place which I can take—utter shame and confusion of face before God because of my wretched service; deep heart-felt surprise that God has not dealt with me after my sins, that He has not cast me out of his household, or turned me away from his service, but that I am still permitted to gather with his people in his presence, to sit at his feet, to hear his Word, again to expect to receive great blessings from his hands in order that I may, as a restored and newly-consecrated servant to Him, perform his service. May God give to us all that right spirit at this commencement of our Conference.

For what has been our service? Are we God's stewards? Can none of us be accused of having wasted our Master's goods—temporal, as well as spiritual, goods? If it be required of stewards that a man be found faithful, who of us can lift up his face without spot to God? Has our service been loving? An old officer met me this morning at the early prayer-meeting. He is now a minister of God's Word. Speaking of his past days, he said, with words that came home to me, "I loved the service," meaning the military service. Do we put as much love into the Divine service as men of the world put into its service, or into the service of an earthly sovereign? Has our service been honest? I believe that, if our gracious Master had dealt with us as we deal with our servants (we expect good service, and soon terminate an engagement if we do not receive it), we should have been cast out of his household long ago. I could not have stood here, not one of us could stand before Him, for I believe we are all very much alike—in great measure at least. Yet in his manifold mercies He has not forsaken us. He has given us his good Spirit to instruct us. He has not withheld the manna from us. Day by day it has come fresh from heaven in his Word to our hearts. We should have put our children and servants on bread and water long ago, if they had dealt with us as we have dealt with Him; but He has not put us on starvation fare. He has given us the finest of the wheat and the honey out of the rock, though we have not rightly used his mercies. He has shown us the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night—to guide us continually.

What a due sense of God's mercies we need to have, if we are indeed to yield ourselves up to his service by walking before Him in holiness and righteousness all our days. I do hope and trust that, as it will be the only real and true prelude to the blessing we come to seek, the only real prelude to a renewal of energy, of love, and of consecration of service to God, that we may have the spirit which characterised Israel on that day at Jerusalem—the spirit of true, deep humiliation, as we look at ourselves, and the spirit of deep-hearted thankfulness to God that, because of his compassions, which fail not, we have not been consumed. "I am Jehovah, I change not; therefore, the sons of Jacob are not consumed." May we begin our Conference by humbling ourselves deeply before God, and seeking afresh to realise the precious cleansing power of that blood which cleanseth from the failures of our past service, even as it cleanseth from all sin.

Preludes to Service.

BY REV. DR. ADOLPH SAPHIR.

The subject on which it is my privilege to speak to you this morning is not service, but the things which precede service. In other words, I am to speak of what God has done for us. That also includes what God has done in us. For we are not able to do anything for God until first we receive the things which God has done for us, and until first we experience the power of his Holy Spirit in our souls. Christ is Alpha; and before Alpha there is nothing. Christ is the door, Christ is the way, and Christ is the end of the way; and, oh! what a blessing and a consolation it is to us that on whatever points of the path it may please God to call us to Himself, either by death or by the coming of the Lord Jesus, we have reached the end. For, if we have entered at the strait gate, we are already possessors of eternal life. The thief who took hold of Jesus during the last moments of his earthly experience had only a few steps and he entered into the paradise of rest. The Apostle beholds the end as it were in the past: "whom He justified He also glorified." What a wonderful path is this, that any part and every part of the path is already the end of the path.

There is another remarkable peculiarity of this spiritual path. On every other path, as we draw near to the goal, the starting-point recedes into the background. But it is different on this path. It is true as the Apostle says, "Now is your salvation nearer than when ye believed;" but not merely is the end nearer to us than when we believed, but the beginning also The day is approaching when Jesus will come in glory, and, as the believer continues on his way, that day becomes brighter and clearer to him. But iust as the goal comes nearer, the starting-point comes nearer, and our conversion is nearer, and clearer and dearer to us at the end of the journey than it was at the beginning. We find, when the Apostle has finished his course, and when the hour of his departure has come, and when he sees before him the crown which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, will give to all that love his appearing, there is one experience of his past life that stands out with transcendent brightness—when mercy was shown unto him, and when Jesus Christ made Himself known unto his heart.

For this true Alpha, Jesus Christ, is the magnet that is continually attracting us. And here is another paradox. Christ is the foundation. We are built on Him as the foundation; but the more we build on this foundation we do not get further away from it, but we get nearer to it. Not merely do we get nearer to it, but we get nearer into it. For Christ is the stone upon whom we build; He is the living stone, and so are we not merely founded on Him, but we are rooted in Him.

He is the Alpha. All things are of God. When we were brought unto the Lord we had nothing, and we had less than nothing. You remember that it is with those who have broken the first covenant that the new covenant is made in the blood of Christ, in which there is granted unto us forgiveness of sins, and in which our souls are born again by the power of the Holy Ghost. Redemption comes to us when we are in Egypt, when we are in the house of bondage, enslaved by Satan and under the curse of the law. Life comes unto us when we are dead in trespasses and sins. And not merely has God, as it were, to take us out of the evil in which we are, and in which we are helpless, but He has to start us with everything that we require for our new life. Tell me whence are all the energies, whence are all the weapons that we need, from the day of our conversion until the moment that we entering into glory—the best robe, the ring on the finger, the shoes of obedience, the feast of joy? Were they brought unto the returning prodigal out of the region which he had forsaken? Were they parly his and partly the Father's? Did they not all come out of that heavenly region—out of the spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus? "All things are of God."

Not merely this, but we ourselves are "His workmanship—created in Christ Jesus." That new birth, that turning from darkness unto light, that exercise of faith in Jesus—who died for the ungodly—it is not our own work. It is the work of God's grace and of God's power, "of His own will begat He us by the word of truth." "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts and given unto us the knowledge of the Glory of God in the face of Christ Jesus." "We all like sheep have gone astray," but He turned us back unto the shepherd and bishop of our souls. "All things are of God."

To impress this still more upon your minds, let me remind you of a very solemn truth. Throughout all eternity God cannot again bestow upon you as great a gift as He hath bestowed upon you already—the gift of his only begotten and well-beloved Son. Throughout all eternity there cannot be a greater manifestation of the love of God than has taken place already, when God made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us. Throughout all eternity there cannot be a greater work of the Divine Grace within you than there has been already, if so be that you are the Lord's believing people. For the step from grace to glory is not so great as the step from nature to grace. The angels are not so much astonished when they take the most suffering believer, though he be like Lazarus, and convey him into the realms of blessedness and of light, as when they see a poor unbelieving, worldly, sin-bound man touched by the grace of God. Then do they rejoice; for this man "was dead and is alive again: he was lost and is found."

And now, as I have brought before you, without the slightest fear of there being any difference of feeling or of opinion on this point, the wonderful, all-sufficient, sovereign grace of God that Jehovah is the first, that Christ is the Alpha, that the Holy Ghost is the beginning of even the slightest beginning, in our souls Godward, I can, with the greater liberty, speak to you of the great purpose which God has in all this, that we should serve Him. We are not merely forgiven; we are beloved. We are not merely acquitted; we are accepted. We stood before the Judge, and there came one and pleaded our case—"Jesus Christ the righteous." He was our advocate; and, now that we believe that "Jesus Christ died for the ungodly," we are acquitted. But, not as in an earthly court does the acquitted one go away, our accusers go away; our guilt goes away; our old man is, as it were, put to death; but we remain. The Judge is now the Father and we are to continue in the presence of the Father, and in union with the Lord Jesus Christ, to serve Him. We have been redeemed, not with gold or with silver, but with the precious blood of Christ, as the Lamb of God, from the power of Satan, from the sting of death, from the terrors of everlasting destruction. We are redeemed also from our old and vain conversation, redeemed also from that connection which formerly subsisted between sin and us, so that sin shall no longer have dominion over us. Therefore it is that in the Apostolic epistles we are not exhorted to form, as it were, a resolution that, since God has shown unto us such great love, and Christ has died for us on the cross, we will make a great effort and give up sin. This is rather the teaching of these epistles, that God has taken us away out of the region of sin, that He has transplanted us out of the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of his dear Son; that our old man was crucified when Christ died upon the cross; that the whole system of sin, the whole body of sin, should be put to death, that we might live unto God.

Not merely forgiveness, and not merely redemption, points unto the service of God. If we rise still higher—if we rise unto the highest point that is given unto us in the Word of God, the point of sonship, our adoption in Christ Jesus brings before us prominently the same subject of service. Because we are the sons of God, God hath sent into our hearts the spirit of sonship, that is the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. There is a contrast between the servant and the Son, but here there is no contrast. The very Son of God Himself, before the foundations of the world were laid, became a servant in spirit, in that covenant of mercy to which we all owe our salvation. His obedience here upon earth was merely the manifestation in time of that which happened in that eternity which we cannot fathom, when He who was in the form of God said unto the Father: "Lo! I come to do thy will." When He, having by his death delivered us from everything that made it impossible for us to draw near unto God, rose again from the dead, our regeneration, our position as the sons and daughters of God commenced. By this resurrection are we united to Jesus, who calls God his God and our God, his Father and our Father. Do we possess, then the spirit of children? There is no contradiction between the spirit of sonship and the spiri of obedience. Look at our blessed Saviour when He was here upon earth, He looked upon everything in the light of obedience. He laid down his life, and he took it up again, because He received the commandment from the Father and, when He approaches the Father, with wha reverence does He approach Him? "Holy Father," "Righteous Father," "Lord of heaven and earth." Even now that He is seated upon the throne in glory, in that epistle that He sen to the Church of Philadelphia, as recorded in th Book of the Revelation, Jesus speaks of God wit reverence, and calls Him "My God;" and ye what wonderful simplicity of trust, of love, an of confidence is there in that word "Father."

If Christ has given unto us his Spirit, so tha we are one with Him, then service is that whic must characterise our whole life. How beautifully our blessed Saviour shows unto us tha there is no contrast between love and obedience "As the Father hath loved Me, so have I love yon." He commands us to continue in his lov (and let no one think he will sink into the lowe level of a legal spirit, or a spirit of bondage, i he now begins to think of the commandments) "Even as I obey my Father's commandments and continue in his love."

Let me remind you of one thing—the strikin contrast that the Apostle witnessed in thos idolaters, who, through his preaching, wer brought into the knowledge of Christ. Whe he writes his Epistle to the Romans, he gives u in the first chapter a most appalling picture the condition of apostacy from God in whic the heathen nations were sunk. Yet it is to thes very people that he is able to say in the sixt chapter "Ye were once the servants of sin; bu now ye have been freed from sin and mad servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holines and the end life everlasting." Or agai when he writes to the Corinthians, when h speaks of all those fearful and degrading manifestations of the one root of sin that is withi us—when he enumerates those foul spots whic even in our eyes are so full of deformity, he says "And such were some of you; but ye are washed ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the power of the Holy Ghost." Or again, when he writes to the Thessalonians who only a few months ago were bowing down before dum idols, "You turned from your idols unto God, to serve the tru and living God, and to wait for the Lord Jesus from heaven." Obedience has in our ears a legal sound; but why? Because we do not, as James says in his epistle, sufficiently look into the perfect law of liberty. That very Apostle (Paul) who is so distinct and emphatic on the truth that we are justified not by the works of the law, but simply by faith in Jesus, in his Epistle to the Romans uses four times the expression, "obedience" in connection with faith and the Gospel. "To bring the Gentiles through the Gospel to the obedience of faith." "Your obedience is spoken of throughout the whole world." Again, to the Philippians: "As ye have always obeyed, not in my presence only, but now much more in my absence." Again, in the most striking manner, in the Epistles to Timothy, when Antinomianism was already showing itself in its power, the Apostle speaks of the Gospel as commandment. Christ is indeed the end of the law, but "the righteousness of the law is now fulfilled in them who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law is spiritual, and to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

As God has done all these wonderful things for us, as He has forgiven us, has renewed us, and accepted us as children; as He has redeemed us by the death of Christ from the power and bondage of sin and Satan, so it is now by his Holy Spirit that He makes us willing, and that He creates within us a readiness to serve. It is touching to see how, from the very moment that the Spirit of God comes in contact with the sinful heart, there is created within it a new will. From the moment the prodigal comes to himself and says, "I will arise and go to my father," to the moment he commits, like Stephen, his spirit unto the Lord he is willing. God works not merely for us, He works also within us. And that heart which God alone has created, and which God alone can understand, is, by the marvellous and mysterious influence of his grace, made willing to give itself unto God.

You remember that beautiful story of the Ethiopian. The feature that shines forth most touchingly in the countenance of that man is his alacrity. He had come to seek goodly pearls; his whole heart was in the search. Diligently he read the Scripture; in humility, and with the readiness of a little child, he accepted the offer of help from the evangelist. Joyfully he listened to the glad sound. Eagerly he exclaimed, "Lo! here is water: what doth hinder me to be baptized?" He heard, he believed, he confessed, he was sealed, he rejoiced, he went on his way.

Such are the preludes to service. All things are of God, who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Let us cherish this willingness that is given unto us at first, as the sacred flame which God Himself has kindled. "Ye did run well," says the Apostle to the Galatians. Oh, let nothing hinder the continuance of our willing-hearted service of the Lord. Willingly they came in the wilderness and brought offerings unto the building of the Tabernacle, all those whose hearts made them willing and whose spirits were stirred within them. Willingly they came in the days of Deborah, for the avenging of Israel. Willingly shall they be, as is written in Psalm cx., when our glorious Melchisedek—the Royal High Priest—sends forth the command, his people shall be all willingness. Remembering what God has done for us, and remembering what God, by his grace, has done in us, let us continue to be willing.

Let me say a word in conclusion. Without love, what is obedience? A body without spirit. Without faith, what is love? There can be no obedience without love. There can be no love without faith, and it is just because we think love so very important that we guard most jealously that foundation testimony of the Reformation that we are justified by faith, and by faith only. And not merely does faith come first and love afterwards, at the beginning of our Christian course; but faith always comes first. Every action of love that is spiritual and pleasing unto God is only thedaughter, and, as it were, begotten afresh by faith that very moment. Therefore is it written—and the Holy Ghost makes no mistakes—"The just shall live by faith."

Separation and Readiness.

BY REV. HANDLEY G. C. MOULE,

Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

Dear Christian Friends,—I feel with the greatest sincerity that the best thing, perhaps, I could do would be to call attention again and again to some of the great truths Dr. Saphir has brought before us, specially at the close—his words on the connection and separation existing between faith and love. Yet I am here, I know for another purpose—that of giving, with our Lord's help, a few thoughts from another point of view on the subject before us. So let me try to do it briefly and to the point.

Dr. Saphir has taken the whole range of the subject as it is put before us on the programme. I can do nothing of the kind. I have been especially dwelling in thought, and praying over a mere section of the subject, the last two items in the syllabus. And perhaps it is better it is so. You have been led to heights and depths of Divine truths, the Mighty Alpha and Omega of the ways and will of God. I have been led to take a very simple and practical view, by way of application of the great truths and principles, rather than otherwise; and I take the subjects at the close of the list this morning—separation and readiness. I have been asked to lead you in a thought or two upon these points.

In so doing I turn to the Word of God, not specially to the text with which the subject is connected in the paper—not that I have not meditated on that text nor see its connection with the subject; but in taking, by anticipation, a survey under the head of Preludes to Service, I have been led to ask as a servant of God, "What is the worker's continual need? and what is not merely the prelude, the beginning, but the continual accompaniment all through?" The need of the worker is to watch, to watch in the right direction, to watch against sin, to watch chiefly against sins that do most easily beset alike work and workers of God; and beset those not only of comparatively minor orders, as the world calleth them, though we do need to know as little as possible of such distinctions, but also the more important orders.

May I say here a word or two on the service itself? Let us put from us utterly all idea of service that would make service a mere part, a limited section of the Christian life; it is not a part, it is the whole. There is absolutely no part of Christian life which is not service to the Divine, eternal, absolute Master. I know it is unpractical to be always dwelling on this view. Undoubtedly there are things to be done, to be said, to be planned, which have a special connection with the work and will of God, and which for distinction's sake we must speak of as Christian service. There are, for example, words directly spoken in the service of God, and works the world recognises as done, or said to be done, for Him. We must recognise such distinctions. But in theory—and a sound and true theory will ever be getting deeper and deeper into actual practice—all Christian life and every part of it is service. This is the true theory, and it is always, or ought to be always, the natural (in the deepest sense of the word) outcome of a life that is really and truly, and of honest purpose, yielded to God, recognising the simple fact, we are "bond servants." There is a remarkable passage in ancient history, describing the connection between a slave and his master. In no action of his life could a true slave be looked upon as an independent being, having any interest terminating in himself. He could entertain no ambition, he could not plan, anticipate, or do anything that was not in connection with his possessor. Now, however humiliating to the flesh, is that not the true condition of life that is lived not to ourselves, but by the faith of the Son of God, that is wholly and honestly yielded to Him? And when it is so, every action, every thought, every word, however commonplace it may be, will be, as it ought to be, service to God.

This leads me to what I was especially to speak of—a few of those things that do most easily beset the workers for God, and do most tend to mar and spoil the work and its beauty; and, therefore, as a prelude to work in general, and as a prelude to every detail of work from the beginning to the end, we must be exceedingly and assiduously watchful against the little foxes that spoil the vines. You remember how the Preacher, in Ecclesiastes, tells us, in words slightly modified in the new version, that "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom." The Preacher practically says that as dead flies do a great deal of injury to ointment, so a little folly injures the reputation of a wise man; or, as the Revised Version puts it, "so doth a little folly outweigh wisdom." I do put it to myself, to those who are fellow-labourers with me in the service of God, to watch and pray against little follies. We ourselves have observed how a very little thing will mar the savour of a great work.

Now, there are various little, but important, points one might mention, such as the will, the self; absolute separation of will and conscious self-assertion is a great and constant risk in all work for God. Some are continually inclined to think of their work for Him, to talk about this work or service, as if it were a spiritual height of their own, to which they have climbed, and from which they may look down on others they may please to think are not doing so much as themselves, nor foregoing so much as themselves. The creeping in of that spirit, whether shown in acts, words, looks, or manner, is one of the flies that make the precious perfume not sweet at all. The mortification of the spirit of self-comparison, the hidden self, "I," in work done for the sake of spiritual credit, of fair spiritual repute to self, is a very important prelude to true work for the Lord. Do we not need absolutely his strength and Word to lay this aside? It is immensely easier said than done. Thank God when we are brought to the unreserved attitude of desiring to do it. It will need great humiliation, and fresh drawing upon Him, who can alone enable us to work in that spirit so well described as "a life service which is the death of self."

Then I would say again, consistency in the common things of life is all-important to fruitful service for God, either in direct work for Him or in any other walk of Christian life. Let us try to remember that, while we are in his presence at all times, we are at certain times more than at other times under the observation of those around us. In our own household, amongst our servants, amongst those in any respect under us and over whom we have an influence, and before whom we walk—by these we are watched. Let us remember that, and remember that very much wisdom and knowledge, very much faith and love will be outweighed by small inconsistencies in common things.

I was very much struck, in talking the other day with a domestic servant, employed in a menial capacity in our College at Cambridge, by the way in which she used consistency as a synonym for considerateness. "Mr. So-and-so," she said, "was very consistent, he gave her so little trouble," and from the context one could see he was considerate of the rights and claims and feelings of those around him and under him. I think that synonym may give us some instruction. Our consistency equals our considerateness in the opinion of many amongst whom we move. And it is consistent for a follower of Christ to be considerate of the feelings of others.

There are other points I should like to have mentioned, but I have come to the second part of the subject—readiness. We want readiness in the presence of the Lord, in the right spirit, and the right way, to own our own failures, our spiritual failures; we may have occasion to own them to others; if so, let us be willing. Let no one have to say of us, we are hard to be persuaded we have done wrong; such a proud spirit is not only a misfortune, an infirmity, but a sin. It is sad, when such a sin finds power in an otherwise enlightened conscience. Even on the side of man, let it never, never be said of us. Contentedness with a position of failure is no true attitude of a servant of Christ. Remember what we have heard this morning of our true position and calling; let us, when we come short, be ready to own it to ourselves; when needs be, to others; and always and fully to the Lord.

And when we are so ready to confess our faults, there is one reflection that will be present—"it need not have taken place." How often we have to own this. Perhaps yesterday I lost patience just after I had been confessing and remembering I never need lose it. It is very hard to remember that, to look upon my own faults; it is so much easier to excuse them. But, however hard it may be, let us honestly confess; and the blessedness of doing so is this, it brings us a happy sense of union with the all-sufficient source of grace, with Him who is able every hour and every minute all-sufficiently to meet every such confession, to stimulate and raise up to renewed and consecrated service. There I possess a secret that will avail in all circumstances and to the end of time.

I am speaking, you observe, of the practical side of things, and I say that practically their need not be failure in patience or any approach to it; there need not be any want of consistency, or any approach to it; or, most wonderful of all, this thought of self, this spiritual thought of self that mars my work and ruins an otherwise useful hour, need not be at all. Readiness of confession, humility of spirit, is rendered perpetual by the recognition of the view of truth, that there need not have been this, or that, the other flaw or fault, and by the grace of God there shall be no more such failures.

Now we reach the last part of the programme—readiness, and the words of Samuel, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth:" familiar words and circumstances, yet a thought or two may come out of them.

First, we are servants of one Master; we are continually in the Word of the Lord brought face to face with the aspect, "Servants of one Master." Again and again the thought appears like a strong buckle, keeping together other aspects, for practical utility in service. Servants of "Thy servant"; this is a title in which prophets and martyrs rejoice; let us rejoice in it too. Samuel's wonderful equipment for the service of God began in his deep sense of the blessedness of being a servant. He carried it out next morning in a very striking, though humble way; before he attended to the solemn spiritual service laid upon him, he patiently and attentively went about his temporal duty, opening the doors of the house of the Lord, and trimming the lamps.

There is one thought more here: I am "Thy servant," and my interest is summed up in thine. We serve Thee; "Speak, Lord." Now, what have we to do in Christian work? Not to be original or to become inventors; God forbid: the moment we do that we had better stop; we have but to get what the Lord has to say, to draw out of his infinite region of truth, and patiently, humbly, simply, and by his great mercy faithfully pass it on. Utterly unoriginal, utterly unambitious for reputation of self, we must speak as servants and speak the Master's word.

Just one more thought, an important one, and one that has a close connection with this. God speaks in hundreds of different ways about his will. He may speak to me out of trial and sorrow; He may speak in a moment of joy or grief; but while He speaks by all these He gives validity to them all by speaking in his Word. The moment I get outside of that to other ranges, and am tempted to speak with the same validity and formality, that moment I get out of speaking as his servant, and out of the way of service altogether. Therefore I leave with you this word with regard to the Book: if we be the people of the Lord, let our watchword in connection with the Bible be nothing less than submission. I want to distinguish that from reverence; reverence is short of submission. There is a large amount of reverence for the Bible floating about, and we want more. That is all very well in its way, but we want submission. Reverence is quite conceivable without submission. A dethroned king may be reverenced because of his former dignity, and his conduct when on the throne, yet all this without one spark of submission to him as the source of law and authority. Now, we want to remember the Book is the source of all authority; and that the Bible is worth little to the Christian were it not for the authority with which it speaks. It has the unchallengeable authority and sanction of the Lord God Himself. It is for me, then, to ascertain its meaning; it may take me some time to do it, but that is altogether a different thing from being uncertain. Being ascertained, its utterance is final; my present ascertainment of its meaning, in humility, prayer, and dependence on the Spirit of God, is for me the final voice of authority and command. There is nothing higher. When the Word speaks it is law. That is what I want to leave with you. Let us put away from our hearts all distrust of the oracles of God. Let us close with these beautiful words of old prayer, which may well be ours moment by moment: "O Almighty and most merciful God, of thy bountiful goodness keep us, we beseech Thee, from all things that may hurt us; that we, being ready both in body and soul, may cheerfully accomplish those things that Thou wouldest have done; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Christ our Life in Service.

A GREAT company assembled in the large hall on Wednesday afternoon to hear addresses on this subject. This meeting and the corresponding one on Thursday afternoon were arranged for by Mr. H. F. Bowker, who himself presided on the first day. After the preliminary exercises of prayer and praise, he read three brief passages of Scripture bearing on the topic of the afternoon (1 John v. 11, 12; John v. 26, 27; xv. 5).

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

The subject of Conference is the Service of Christ, and we propose this afternoon to say some words upon this aspect of it, viz., that Christ's life must be manifested as the source of strength and power; nay, that Christ Himself must manifest His life in everyone who takes upon himself to serve Him. In the first passage I have quoted we read that "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son." Then the Son of God has not parted with His life; neither has He so communicated it to us as that we are separated from Him; or, indeed, that we have anything at all except in union with Him. He maintains it in all its glory. He tells us in the second passage I read, "As the Father hath life in Himself; so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." In what sense given to the Son? He was eternal, co-existent with God the Father, and wanted no life imparted to Him. But, when He took upon Himself the form of a servant, in order that the life forfeited by man might be restored, that life could only be restored in one way. That way, as you know, was by the Son of God Himself becoming incarnated, and undertaking the manifestation of that life, imparting it to all who believe in Him. So we stand in the presence of this great fact—that, inasmuch as it was impossible for Christ to part with his life, so it is equally impossible for any one of us to lose ours.

This life, then, is the gift of Christ. Have we all received it? Are we conscious of it? Do we know that we possess it? These questions lie at the threshold of all service. Vain will be our attempts to serve, if we have not this life. But if it be ours it is because we have been to Christ, because a distinct transaction has taken place between Christ and us. And, now that He has imparted to me his life, I am in union with Him for ever. All the consequences of this union it is impossible now for the human mind fully to fathom. I doubt whether we shall ever fully fathom them; they will occupy our attention through the eternal ages.

The first thought I want to present to you, is that this life is the gift of Christ. A trite truth, you will say; but have we grasped it with such firm tenacity as that no temptation, besetment, difficulty, perplexity, or sorrow to which we are subject, can ever, in the least degree, overshadow it in our minds? The next thought is this: if we have this life, how is it to be maintained? It is by the truth, instrumentally, but through the agency and power of the Holy Ghost. In our loose way of talking we mingle phrases which should not be mingled at all. There is only One Great Doer in the universe; He is the Agent in everything. And may I say, in passing, that God never parts with that power. To suppose such a thing possible, is to suppose that God has abnegated his position and stepped down from his throne. He never parts with it; but He ministers all the power that is needed for the exercise of the gifts He bestows on each of us. If we allow the thought to take possession of us that He parts with his power, we are sure to get into a quagmire of difficulty, if not into a gulf of despair.

The third thought is indicated to us by the passage in John xv., where Christ says, "Without Me ye can do nothing." And we do not believe it. Perhaps you think that in saying this I am casting stones at the people of God. If any such thought as that were to possess me, like stones thrown upward, they would fall on my own head. But I say advisedly, as the result of much observation, much experience, and much thought, that we do not believe that statement of Christ. To believe it means surely that we should live upon it. It is this half-hearted belief and feeble reception of it that causes the weakness of the Church, and of ourselves as individual Christians. What we truly believe God has done for us, we shall, to the utmost of the power that God gives to us, endeavour to carry out in practice.

What, then, does our Lord mean? Does He mean that this life which we receive from Him is sufficient to lead us onward through all the conflicts and battles and difficulties of life? Then, if we fail, are we to say that it is because sometimes we must fail? Is that the teaching of the Word of God? Did we not hear this morning, in ringing tones of power, that, if we fail, there is no necessity for failing; because the provision that God has made is all sufficient? God has made provision all along the line for every need that can possibly come in the experience of any believing child of God, if only the conditions are maintained, viz., that we are wholly given up to Christ and wholly trusting in Him. Will we accept the conditions?

Let me state briefly two or three things in which this life will be manifest, if we have it. First in conflict. We hear much about conflict, and we are fully conscious of it. Some of us have been accused, more than once, of teaching that there is no conflict in the consecrated Christian. We teach no such thing. We teach that it is to be maintained; but observe that everything depends upon the place in which the battle is to be fought, and the conditions under which the conflict is to be undertaken. If we are abiding in Christ, He has, on our behalf, conquered every foe. The great enemy, Death, He has overcome. Satan He has defeated. The world He has overcome. Self—Christ had no self to overcome, in the sense in which we have to see it overcome! But, as our representative, He had to conquer through discipline, and He "learned obedience by the things which He suffered." He had to conquer temptation and difficulty, and He overcame them. In all these aspects of conflict, Christ is the conqueror, and Christ alone. It is only as I abide in Him, and have fellowship with Him, and am conscious of my union with Him, and my dependence on Him alone, that this conflict can be successfully undertaken, and that I can be used of Him to overcome and defeat the tempter.

Another thing we have to remember in the manifestation of this life is obedience. What is this obedience? There are many Christians who trouble themselves much about certain things in relation to obedience that they should trouble themselves no more about. It is not so much to the outward form that God looks, as to the heart. If He sees that our heart is bent upon keeping his commandments, and that all the precepts He has given are precious to us, then, as we abide in Christ, is the power to obey given with every step we take; and there is no power elsewhere. Discipline, obedience, experience, will be useful only to drive us back to our stronghold, which is Christ.

Then there is the manifestation of this life in the pathway of service. Who can grasp the length, and breadth, and depth, and height of this? As we have heard, conflict and obedience are themselves a part of service. There are many forms of service to be rendered on every side. When Paul would strengthen the hands of the Ephesians in his remarkable Epistle, which I commend to you as an exhaustive study of this great subject, you remember he prays, in the third chapter, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts." What is our view of that? Christ dwells in the heart of every consecrated believer, who is wholly given up to Him. But in what way is it manifested? Through the power of faith. Christ dwells not in our hearts, as some have aid, in the way that Paul spoke of the Corinthian believers as dwelling in his heart. There is a reality, a personal indwelling which becomes a conscious thing, because Christ is there to cleanse and to keep the heart clean. He is there to keep the heart in all its waywardness, and its tendencies to wander, to be the supreme object of its thought, of its imagination, of its regard. You remember how the Apostle finishes his prayer: "That ye may be filled with all the fulness of God." What does he mean by that? Not that we may be filled with the fulness of omnipotence; that is not possible. He means that we may be filled into the fulness of God. We are taken away from that self of ours, and launched into the ocean of the fulness of God. Are we satisfied with our position? Then let us rejoice and be glad, for we know that we have fellowship with God, that Christ is our Friend, that the Holy Ghost ministers to us, and that all our needs will be supplied.

ADDRESS BY REV. C. A. FOX.

The service of Christ is, indeed, simply this: Obedience to the will of God. It may be in suffering; it may be in silence; it may be in adverse circumstances; it may be in poverty; it may be in reproach, but it may be also in the foremost places of the field. Wheresoever Christ places us, there is the place of service. God grant that each of us may serve Him just where we are, and with what we have got; for we have the Holy Ghost and Jesus our own Saviour.

The service which we render may be merely acquiescence—if it is a real acquiescence—in the will of God. "Even so, Father," may be true service, when we consider anything that God has done for us. "Yea, Lord," may be true service, when God proposes to do anything further. If Christ puts us in the dust, and keeps us in the dust, let us humbly, and even joyfully take our place and say, "Yes, Lord." But there is one thing that we may say to Christ, once, and only once, in our life; we may say, "I will not." When He gives us leave to go forth, as was given to the bond-servant of old, we can say, "Nay: I love my Master; I will not go from you." Let us each say that to-day; let us each be consecrated to-day—nailed to the door-post by the pierced ear, ready henceforth to hear the will of God and obey the voice of God.

Before the cross Jesus called us to "Come." We came to Him, and we found rest. After the resurrection He used the word "Go." And we must go, lest we should not have Him with us. "Lo, I am with you alway"—if ye go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. But there is this word also: He not only said "Go," but "Let go." This is very needful for every child of God. Have you "let go" yet—let go all that is human, all earthly resources, all trust in anything of this life? Have you let go the shore, and are you launched off with Jesus? Have you gone forth with Him on the single plank of his word—floating out into the great deep of his truth, his love, his faithfulness, and his holiness? Dare you go forth with Jesus alone? That is what He wants each of us to do.

This is why He said, "Let my people go, that they may serve me." Christ's people must be detached people; they must be severed from Egypt. Pharaoh said, "Go, sacrifice to your God in the land." That would not do; they could not offer anything unto God in Egypt. Then, Pharaoh consented that they should go "a little way out." That would not do either; they must go out definitely, and for ever. He went further, and said, "Yes, go, if you must; but leave your little ones behind you." "Nay, but we must take the children with us." "Then, go, you and your little ones, but leave your flocks and herds." We must answer this compromise with uncompromising fidelity: "We will not leave a hoof behind us; we know not with what we must serve the Lord until we be come hither." Yes, we must be wholly for Christ, all for Christ, only for Christ, always for Christ. There must be no looking back to Sodom. There must be no looking aside to Syria. There must be no looking at the flesh; there must be a looking straight on to Jesus, and going with Him, definitely and persistently, and triumphantly.

What, then, is the service? Let me put it thus. True service is a heart surrender, so that there should be henceforth a new inhabitant in that heart, the indwelling Holy Ghost. It is a will surrender, also, to Christ's yoke. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Child of God, young man and maiden, have you got this blessed rest—this deep, perpetual, abiding calm of God in your souls and your lives? Have you accepted it as a Divine reality? Christ's will is rest; no rest without his yoke. Yoked to the Lord Jesus, step by step we must walk with Him, work with Him, move forward with Him, as "Enoch walked with God." But there must be also a surrendered body. "That ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." Have you presented your body yet? The body must be on the altar, as truly as the will is under the yoke. The body and the will, the heart and the conscience—all must be upon the altar of Jesus Christ.

What are the principles of service? There are two great universal principles—death and life. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." By God's grace we must apprehend that we have died with Christ on Calvary. That is the great root of true life. The Apostle says to the Philippians, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do." There is an awfully mysterious inhabitant indwelling in you, working in you—God Himself. Let there be an awful fear and trembling, lest you should spoil his blessed work. If you are a Christian, you have no life of your own at all; your life ended at Calvary. Therefore, is it true that "it is not I that live, but Christ liveth in me." Oh, to experience more and more of this blessed indwelling life, this willing, working presence within us—this Divine inhabitant. Let the Lord have the whole house, penetrating every apartment, bringing every thought into subjection to Himself. Let Him have the keys of all; let Him be sovereign and supreme in all. What He bids, do; what He saith, hearken to and obey. Then we shall be prepared for his blessed service.

Every true Christian must be thrice baptized—baptized unto repentance, baptized unto crucifixion and death, and baptized with the fire of the Holy Ghost. This is what we all want. Moreover we must be thrice convicted by the Holy Ghost. He is come to convict us of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Of sin, because we have not believed in Christ Jesus. Even the child of God must be convicted of the sin of unbelief right throughout his whole life. Of righteousness, because Christ has ascended into the glory as the righteous representative of a fallen race; therefore, our place is there, in the glory, upon the throne. As our glorious Saviour, He not only shows us our sins and absolves us from our sins; but, by his own Divine power, He works in us his own glorious life. Every true servant of the Lord must also be thrice persuaded. We must be persuaded that God is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him against that day. Are we persuaded of that? We must be persuaded that He is able to keep us, body, soul, and spirit; and again, that there is nothing that can separate between Christ and us. There is one more persuasion. Are we persuaded that what He has promised He is able to perform? Then we are thrice persuaded, and we are fitted to be the servants of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But we must also be thrice renewed. Our outward man perisheth, but our inward man is renewed day by day—renewed in cleansing, in keeping, in filling. Do not be afraid to use up all you have—to give out your best sermon, your best address, your best thought, your best strength—all that you have. You shall be renewed every morning, day by day. Then, if God gives us our daily bread, let us give Him our daily service. Let us use ourselves wholly to his glory.

Do you ask me for an instance of such preparation in Holy Scripture? There is one in the prophecy of Isaiah, about Isaiah himself. What prepared him for his wondrous mission? We may answer: Three visions and a voice. He saw Christ on his throne, high and lifted up, with his form filling the temple; that vision inspired him with the greatness and the glory of the Lord. He heard the seraphim crying out one to the other: "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts; the whole earth is full of thy glory." That inspired him with the holiness of God. Oh, that we might cry out one to another! that Church might cry out to Church, and people to people, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts," till this world re-echoed the sound, and the earth be filled with the glory of the Lord, the Coming, Reigning Prince. Another vision the Prophet saw—himself in the dust. As soon as you see Christ on the throne, you will see yourself in the dust. "Woe is me, for I am undone!" You must be detached from yourself, from your sin, so that you may look at yourself and abhor yourself as Job did. Oh, that we all had this vision of God and of self! There was yet a third vision, a vision of the fire, the live coal swiftly taken from the altar—the Pentecostal coal which burnt his lips. Only burnt lips can speak to the glory of the Lord. There must be death on the lips, death in the heart, death in the life. We must be buried with Christ by baptism into death, and we must speak from these burnt lips which the fire of the Holy Ghost has burned, so that we cannot misuse his blessed Word. Children of God, have we had these three visions?—Christ on the throne; self in the dust; the fire of Pentecost burning the lip, burning the soul, until we are all aflame with the Holy Ghost, and self is consumed in this holy transfiguring fire? Then, we shall hear a voice. "I heard a voice saying, Who will go for us?" He answered, "Here am I; send me." Yes, three visions and a voice will prepare any man for the battlefield, for any mission, any ministry, any ministration whatever.

Not only must self be abased, but shall I add this word: Self must be displaced. Bad self must be abased; but even good self must be displaced. Let us take the case of Joshua. There is no holier man mentioned in Scripture. He led the people into the Land of Promise in victorious triumph, under the Lord. The servant of God who had led them through the wilderness was not fit to lead them in, but Joshua was fit, by the grace of God. It was this man who, as he surveyed Jericho, before he went forth against it, lifted up his eyes and saw one standing over against him. He went up at once and said, "Art thou for us or for our adversaries?" The answer came from the mysterious stranger: "Nay, but as Captain of the Lord's host am I now come." Now, if Joshua was anything, he was captain of the Lord's host. But the Captain of the Lord's host hath come, and He must displace even good Joshua. So the good servant self must be displaced, and Christ must do his own work. Joshua recognised this, so he fell to the ground and said, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" Surely Joshua was to take Jericho now. Nay, there was something more; he had not yet been sufficiently prostrated in the dust. "Loose thy shoe from off thy foot, for the place whereon thou standest is holy." I believe the Church of Christ is not low enough yet. There is not in it, as there ought to be, that brokenness of spirit, that entire surrender of body and soul to the Lord. We need far more of this humbling in the dust at the feet of Jesus. Surely it must grieve the Lord to see many Christians, who have been for years talking of their advancement, losing something of that beautiful humility which was theirs when they were first converted. Yes, we need to go down deeper into the dust.

Though it was under the very walls of Jericho—cursed ground—it was yet holy ground, for the Lord was there. "The place whereon thou standest is holy." Wherever my Lord stands, there is holy ground. Though I go into the teeming alley, and minister amidst the most loathsome scenes, if I take Jesus with me, there is holy ground. Let us see to it that we stand on holy ground, wherever we are. This room to-day is holy ground, because Christ is here. There is the consecration of his presence. Lord, let thy Holy Ghost come upon this people, we beseech Thee, that He may bid us go forth to thy service; that He may enable us to let go our conventionality and routine, let go our reputation—let go everything, so that Thou shalt reign in our hearts and lives supreme. No matter who we are, Thou art all and in all. If we are the vilest, Thou art the most worthy; so shall we show forth thy glory!

Brethren, then, and only then, shall there be, not the cold hand and the cold shoulder, but the open heart, the open house, the open hand, and Pentecost shall come again. O God, revive us in the midst of the years, we beseech Thee! May this Pentecostal power be upon us, so that every soul in this building shall be shaken with the Divine and wondrous presence of the Lord God of Hosts. Let this little piece of earth be filled with thy glory. Amen.

ADDRESS BY REV. E. H. HOPKINS.

"Christ our life in service." Let me direct you to two simple points. First, the Service; then, the Life that we need for the service. If we are to have a true conception of the service, we must understand the principles by which it is governed. Of course, this we find in the Word of God.

All true service lies in the line of God's will. A good servant knows his master's will, and obeys it. It is not enough for me to be engaged in a good work; I must work according to my master's will. It is the master's office to give directions; it is the servant's to obey them. But if I am following my own directions, and pursuing my own counsels, it may be a very excellent work in which I am engaged, but I am not serving the Lord. I am going to God for his blessing on my plans; let me first go to God for his orders. Let us not only say, "Give me thy blessing," but, "Teach me thy will; show me thy way." He may give me some very simple work to do; but, if I do it, I shall be serving the Lord far better by doing a number of little things in the path of God's will than by seeking to do some great work in obedience to my own conceits. You say to your servant: "Bring me a glass of water." He says to himself: "I will do something better than that, something grander and nobler, I will bring to my master a basket of fruit." Would he be a good servant, and would that be true service? A good servant is one who just does what his master tells him. I remember hearing Pastor Monod say: "If you want to do something, do not try to be somebody."

Then this life becomes so wonderfully simple. It is not like divergent lines; it is one single line. God does not expect you to be in two places at the same time. The nearer we get to God's will in service, the more freedom we shall find in it.

Does anyone ask: "How am I to get into God's will?" Come to the right centre. It is a good thing to be occupied with Christ's commands; it is a far better thing to be occupied with the Commander Himself. "Whose I am, and whom I serve," said Paul. The thought in the Apostle's mind was not so much the service as the Master whom he served.

Again, true service lies in the line of God's supply. God's commandments are not grievous. They may be impossible to you when you are out of Christ, or not abiding in Him. You remember the command the Lord Jesus gave to his disciples, "Give ye them to eat." It seems at first sight a rather unreasonable and impossible command. How was it brought about? They had to bring everything to the right centre. He says, first of all, "How many loaves have ye?" Bring all your resources to Him. "Five loaves and two small fishes." Are these ugh? What are they among so many? We e to learn the first lesson, that without Him can do nothing. The next words were, "Bring m hither to Me." There is consecration.

ng all you have—your weakness, and emptis, and poverty to Him. Now, picture the
ne. The five thousand people an outer circle; disciples an inner circle; but the centre, ist Himself. Taking these weak and feeble ngs, the stream of blessing began to flow n Him as the centre, through the channel of disciples, to the thousands outside. "Oh,
," you say, "the disciples did not fulfil the nmand; it was the Lord Himself, through m." Precisely. That is what we want to
; that is what we are insisting upon to-day.
t you, but Christ working through you.

nce again, the path of service is in the line od's guidance. God is not going to dispense h your faith by showing you a chart with all his poses marked out in detail. He means you walk by faith every step of the way. The k and walk of faith are intimately connected.
e way to do God's work is to be always walk-in the will of the Lord and claiming his dance. What we have to do is simply to ase Him. He knows your work is imperfect; you can please Him, nevertheless. A little d is making a pinafore for her doll. The her looks at the child, and she is pleased.
; is the child's work perfect? Certainly not.
that we were more like little children. He Father whom we have to please.

ow, a word about the life that we need for vice. What a precious thought is this:
hrist our Life." It is all in Him. Let us x at it briefly in three aspects—life before us, around us, life within us. Christ's life re us. "I am among you as One that veth." He is the perfect object of our gaze.
has left us an example that we should follow steps. "As the Father hath sent Me, so d I you." He went forth in entire sub-sion, in complete dependence, in simple st. So let us follow Him. I remember once ring a farmer say he had a servant who was ery good man, but a very bad ploughman.
en he was ploughing, instead of fixing his s before him, he was continually looking back ee whether he had made a straight furrow!
ere are many Christians doing the same thing.
have to look away from ourselves, from our n walk, off unto Jesus. "I have set the Lord ays before me."

hen there is the life around us—our protec-
n. "His presence is salvation." Do you eve in his presence, not afar off, but "Lo I with you." "Abide in Me," He says. He nself, the Living One, is the home of your soul.
ır service, perhaps, lies in scenes of temptan, and the deadly polluting influences of the rld. He is God's provision, and in Him you y be kept safe. Some of us have seen those le creatures rapidly moving on the surface of ond. They do not spend all their time on the face. They dive down to the depths, but they e with them a globule of atmospheric air.
ey are, so to speak, enclosed in a crystal sphere.
ey prosecute their search down in these putrid ths, and come up again uncontaminated, ause they are enclosed in that globule of nospheric air. How striking a picture of what s to be in Christ. He is to be your home. "I l be to you a little sanctuary," He says—a ce where you live, and move, and have your ng. "Whatever ye do, do it in the name of nce more, there is the life of Christ within us. e want power—power to cast out evil habits, to bring forth fruit unto God. That power is the indwelling of Christ. We have heard about the duty of "letting go." It is wonderful the tenacity with which the dead leaves of our old life seem to hang upon us. Sir John Lubbock has been lecturing upon "Leaves." He says the falling of the leaves is really a process of life, not of death. To prove this he exhibited a twig. Half of it had been broken through, and half had remained in union with the trunk. This was done in the autumn. It was found that all the leaves on that part in union with the trunk fell off; but the leaves on that part where the life had been hindered held fast, and it needed considerable power to pull them off. There, I thought, is a picture of our old habits. How is it that you find Christians with so many worldly habits hanging about them? They say: "I cannot lay them aside; I have tried to cast them off, but I cannot." Shall I tell you the reason? You need to have your spiritual life deepened; to know not only what it is to have life, but "life more abundant." You are enfeebled because the flow of Christ's life has been checked, and you are not really living in union and fellowship with Christ. Oh, that to-day we may receive Him into our hearts that He may take possession of our whole being, and be the power not only to lay aside every weight, but to bring forth fruit unto God.

ADDRESS BY REV. H. G. C. MOULE.

Having read Ephesians iv. 15, 16, and made some preliminary remarks, he proceeded: Our vital union with Christ is imaged forth by our Lord Himself in the parables of the vine and the body—this union which is the spring of inexhaustible resources. It is a very old truth, as old at least as this Epistle to the Ephesians. It is as old as the truth of God itself, yet it is one that is ever new—a surprise to the believer as he goes on and tries it. To many of us, doubtless, it has been a new discovery long after other truths were grasped.

First, let us understand that it is a fact. I find more and more that the right order in which to regard the life of the soul is this: First, fact; then faith; then, as the result, feeling. I find myself cold, dead, this or that which I do not wish to be. How, by the grace of God, shall I set to work? Not by resolving to feel this or that, but by going down to the fact. Is it the fact that I am in contact with the Lord Jesus Christ, in a sense as real, as wonderful, as that I am by my physical nature connected with humanity? Yes, about that the Word of God is clear. Probably we are all doctrinally sure of it; but my experience bids me lay it upon your hearts as Christians to be practically sure of it, and to treat it as a fact. Let us recognise that, in the mysterious way and will of God, we are not only near to Christ, but we are in Him. Christ Himself, as I have said, compares it to the branch in the tree, and the limb in the body. There are things I can carry in my pocket, and leave them at home if I think fit; but I cannot do that with a limb in my body. It belongs to another order of things; it is in profound and vital communication with the head. This is a fact, whether or not you can realise or analyse it. The question is: Will you use the fact? You have not to construct the union. We are joined to the Lord, and that means being one spirit with Him. What shall we do with this union? Shall we turn it into communion—not constructing communion out of nothing, but out of this union? I do not merely belong to Him; I am in Him. Let me turn that fact into daily use. Let me apply it. Let the power that comes from this vital spiritual contact with Christ our head flow through us, and then, as Mr. Hopkins has shown, the dead leaves shall gently fall off, perhaps one by one, or it may be in a shower, in that blessed springtime of the incoming life of Jesus Christ.

Observe the Apostle's illustration of the body in writing to the Ephesians. Of course, it is only a figure, and does not fully set forth the reality. In the case of Christ and his people, every limb of his Body is in direct communication with the Head; whereas, in the human frame, there are other limbs coming in between. This, no doubt, suggests to us that we can help one another. All the various outward means of grace are precious things in their own sphere, but there is something which far exceeds them all, and that is the soul's contact with the Lord Jesus Christ.

There is another point. The Apostle desires that the Ephesians may "grow up into Him . . . which is the Head, even Christ." Christian growth, therefore, is a growth into Jesus Christ; a deeper contact where there is contact already; the limb or the branch, as it were, invited to run its fibres and its vessels deeper, up or down, towards the head or the root. By repeated self-surrender let our growth be into Him, and there will then be the less risk of growing for self. I remember a dear student at Cambridge who had got a grasp of this truth in a remarkable way, saying, "I find religion a blessed success." God knows what reasons for self-humiliation we have, but the consciousness that comes to one is this—these reasons are all in us, and not in the gift of Christ. That is perfect and needs but to be applied, not only in the great things, but in the little things. Do we not find that our defeats mostly come from the little things, because we are tempted to think we can do them in our own power. If we cannot take Jericho, we imagine we can at least take Ai. Luther said that all the angels in heaven had not strength to deal with one sin; but there is One who has. We shall find, by realising our contact with Him, by wholly putting ourselves into his hands, wholly trusting Him in simplicity, that, even in the deepest-seated besetment, He will fill us with a power which will indeed surprise us. Growing up into Him, we shall be able to bear the testimony that God is able to make, not some, but all, grace to abound towards us; that we, having not some, but all, sufficiency, in not some, but all things, may abound unto, not some, but every good work, not of our choosing, but which God hath prepared for us to walk therein.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Obedient Service.

BY REV. CANON WYNNE, DUBLIN.

IT is recorded of a certain great philosopher that a friend who went to visit him met the philosopher's little daughter before he met the philosopher himself. Knowing the father was such a deeply learned man, the friend thought that the little girl must have learned something from him very deep, something very grave from her very learned father. So he said to the little girl, "What is your father teaching you?" The little maid looked up to him with her clear, blue eyes, and just said the word, "Obedience." That was what the great, wise man taught his little girl, and I believe that is the most important lesson for children, to learn to be obedient. It is a lesson necessary for their happiness and for their safety; I think we may say necessary for their very life.

And after all, what are we? Grown people of this great world so full of mysteries, what are we after all but weak, ignorant little children? How little we know of what is around us and what is before us. How little we know what may be the consequences even of our own acts. Manifestly, therefore, the most important lesson for us to learn is the child-like lesson of obedience. And it is our Father's wish above all to teach us this lesson. A lesson that we are to begin to practise upon earth and to practise for evermore when we serve Him day and night among the angels.

I am glad that it has fallen to me this evening to have the great privilege of trying with you to learn this great principle of Christian service and of human life, to join with you in learning a lesson in obedience. The little verse suggested to us in the programme on the subject of obedience is exceedingly helpful, as showing us the ground and the measure of Christian obedience. "Whatsoever" (says the mother of the Lord Jesus to the servants) "He saith unto you, do it." I do believe that in that word "He" we have the foundation of our obedience. "Whatsoever He saith." The mother of our Lord knew who He was. She knew something of the solemn, sacred mystery of his Divinity. She knew much, through daily intimacy, of the tenderness, the gentleness, the sympathy of his human love. She knew that whatever He said must be the wisest and the best thing to do. So we see that the great foundation of obedience is personal knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

If the Lord Jesus is a stranger to us we cannot obey Him. If there are any in this room who have not a personal acquaintance with Him, I cannot say to you, "Go and obey Him." You could not do it. If there should be any among us here who do not personally know the Lord Jesus, we can but join in prayer that He would by his Spirit make Himself known to all such hearts. But when we know Him as God and King, as our Saviour who has loved us, and who has given Himself for us, as our personal, loving friend, always with us, more deeply interested in our happiness by far than we are ourselves, have we not then the desire and the longing to serve and to obey the precept: "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it"?

This suggests to us the measure of our Christian obedience—"Whatsoever." It is a strong word and a wide word; but I do think there is great rest in that simple word, "Whatsoever He saith unto you." No doubt it often requires much thought, much prayer, much careful consideration, and—shall I add?—some common sense, to be sure what it is that the Lord says. It is not consistent with our earthly probation that He should, in some miraculous way, tell us in all the details of our life exactly what we are to do. We might wish for this; but He says it is better for us that we should exercise thought, and judgment, and care, and reverent study of his Word. If we do not exercise this care—and again let me commend common sense, as well as careful, loving, prayerful, search—we are likely to become that most unreasonable, disagreeable, and unmanageable thing, a fanatical Christian, one who supposes that he is obeying the command of his God when he is really obeying the morbid scruples, perhaps the superstitious fancies, of his own mind. I would put it before my Christian brethren and sisters to be very much in earnest in this matter. Be sure with regard to every step you take that it is what He saith, and not what your own fancy saith. He has not given us any infallible external guidance as to all the details of life, but He has given us our conscience; He has given us our reason; He has given us the eternal principles set forth so grandly in Holy Scripture. He has given us the mysterious, unspeakable guidance of his own Holy Spirit in our hearts, so that surely all those who want to know his will, and who hope that He may lead them, and teach them, and guide them, may hear a voice saying, "That is the way; walk ye in it." I believe that those who are conscientiously and prayerfully anxious not to do their own will, not to follow their own fancies or ideas, but really to do what will be pleasing to the Lord and Master, will be able to know what He saith. Then when I know what "He saith," be it a little thing or a great thing, an easy thing or a very difficult thing, a painful thing or a pleasing thing, I must straightway, cheerfully, and gladly go and do it. Is there not great rest in this—to have done with hesitation, to have done with the measuring of consequences, to have done with the counting of the cost. Probably in the providence of God that little word whatsoever may bring a message to some heart here this evening. Perhaps some one here feels that there is some struggle he ought to make for his Master, some sacrifice he ought to make, some trouble he ought to take? But he is hesitating about it; he is uncertain whether it is in the providence of God. Dear fellow-servant, there comes to you this evening that little message, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Go and do it cheerfully and gladly; as surely as you do it you will find rest unto your souls.

But I can fancy that, as I have been thus far speaking, there may be some who feel a kind of disappointment in their hearts. I have heard it expressed something like this: "Oh! it is very easy to talk of obedience and self-surrender, of the complete dedication of oneself to the Lord; it is very easy to talk about it in meetings, and to sing about it in hymns; but in the daily practice and in the little things of life, I do not find it so easy to carry out. I do believe in Jesus as my Saviour. I have committed my soul unto Him. I long to do his will, and yet I find the old faults coming up again and again, evil tempers, indolence, sometimes cowardice, pride, vanity, ambition, selfishness, and worldliness of spirit—these things are coming upon me again and again, and are interfering with my obedience. How can this be? Can I really be the Lord's, and have this old struggle against my old faults coming upon me so often?" My brother, my sister, let me suggest to you one thought about obedience that perhaps may be a help. Do you remember how it was said of our great faultless Brother Himself, even of the Lord Jesus Christ, that "He learned obedience by the things that He suffered." Does it not suggest to us that obedience is a thing that has to be learned? So He says, "Take my yoke upon you" (that is another way of saying "be obedient") "and learn of Me." After the prophetic Psalmist says, "I delight to do thy will, O my God!" he adds, in the very same breath: "Teach me to do thy will, O my God!" Obedience is a thing that has to be learned, and learning implies practice, time, and attention, repetition, and care. Sometimes learning implies, as it implied with our Master Himself, suffering.

There used to be a little book for teaching children, entitled, "Reading Without Tears." I am afraid that the title of that little book was very delusive. I am afraid there are very few children who learn these long lessons without some tears trickling down their soft and rosy cheeks. I believe it is the same in the great school of Christian life. Though we can say reverently, taking the very words of the Messianic Psalm, "I delight to do thy will, O my God. It is my joy and my delight, and my privilege to try and serve and obey my Master. I delight to do it." Still, it sometimes involves, as He warned us, the cutting off of the right hand, or the plucking out of the right eye; the bearing of the cross, self-denial, effort and pain. But it is sweet pain. What a privilege to have that pain. How thankful we may be when we feel that in any way we are made comformable to the sufferings of Him who learned obedience by the things that He suffered. Sometimes it seems fit to the tender Father, who is teaching us to obey, to help us in our lesson by little strokes of the rod. We may be sure that they are always loving, and, in the deepest sense, tender strokes. But they sometimes bring salt tears. When our wills are crossed, and our hearts are sad, and our hopes are disappointed, is it not one of the ways in which the Lord is teaching us obedience even through suffering? Do not, then, be discouraged or disappointed to find that you have still to be learning the lesson of obedience. Go on day by day practising your lesson. Take trouble for the Lord and Master in little things as well as in great things. His rod, when from time to time it smites you, is but the reminder that you are learning one phase of the lesson of simple obedience—doing what He saith unto you.

This leads me to a concluding thought, and it is, how obedience, though it necessarily implies many a little effort, and though it sometimes implies tears and suffering, yet dignifies and ennobles and glorifies the life of the servant of the Master. The things that He saith unto us may be only little things. We want to serve Him, and we say "What achievement can I accomplish for my Lord and Master?" The answer comes—just a little temper to be checked; to get up a little earlier in the morning, perhaps; to sit down and write a letter when you are wishing to be doing something else; to make some simple effort of thoughtful considerate kindness. What little things these are, we say; is life to be frittered away with such small trifles? Do not call them trifles; they are glorious things. Whatever He tells us to do becomes, through love and reverence of Him, through a sense of the honour due to Him as our great Commander, a glorious thing. As we go on from day to day doing these little duties for Jesus Christ's sake, bearing these little crosses, trying to help our brother and sister in these various ways, the angels and the archangels cannot do anything more spendid than we are doing.

So the thought of obedience to the Master and to the Great Father, elevates the little efforts of life; it softens and sanctifies the sufferings and the trials of life. Obedience consists in bearing as well as in acting. To obey is not only to do what He bids me do, but to bear patiently what He bids me to suffer. You know that in a great battle some soldiers are ordered to dash forward in a brilliant charge; others are ordered to stand firm and unmoved, to hold some important position, under heavy fire. We admire the gallantry of the onward charge, but it is, after all, comparatively easy; when a man's blood is up, he will do or dare almost anything. But these men who are standing there so quietly, and closing up their lines so steadily, while the shot ploughs a bloody lane through their ranks—these are the real heroes. These are the men whose steadiness and unflinching courage help in the greatest measure to win the day. Even so it is in the great world-wide battle for our God—for the right against the evil. We thank God for the active servants who press forward in what we may call the onward charge; the missionaries who leave home and kindred for the sake of the Gospel; the men and the women (and I believe there are many such in this company to-night) who spend their whole lives trying to alleviate and benefit, to help and Christianise their fellow creatures. But there are many others (and I dare say there are some of them here this evening) who are placed by God's providence in a different position. They have not the opportunities of active service; they have to bear suffering, loneliness, poverty, privation, trial. Life goes rather hard with them. Hopes have been disappointed. Friends have been removed. Still there is no murmuring upon their lips. There is no bitterness in their hearts. They are obeying voluntarily and submissively the behests of their God. Are not these the real heroes, the bravest of the brave? Is it not true of them what is so beautifully said by the Christian poet:—

"Oft in stillest shade reclining,
In desolation unrepining;
Meek souls there are who little dream
Their daily strife's an angels' theme:
Ah! but the rod they take so calm Shall prove to them a martyr's palm."

May God grant us all more and more intimate personal knowledge of our Lord and Master, that whatever He saith to us, whether it be great or small, we may gladly and willingly do; whatsoever He bids us to bear for Him we may patiently, submissively, and thankfully bear for his sake.

Obedience the Fruit of Love.

BY MR. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

The service of God involves submission, obedience, as we have already heard, and as we shall, doubtless, hear further in this Conference. It brings before us the great fact of the rule of God, the authority of God, the sovereignty of God. He who has created all things governs all that He has made. There is oftentimes a shrinking, is there not, in our hearts from this thought of the sovereignty of God—the thought of Almighty power wielded by Him who holds us in his hand, and works his own will amongst the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth? But there is a truth which we should never disconnect from the sovereignty of God, a truth which presents it in an aspect that attracts the heart. That is the character of Him to whom this sovereignty belongs. I want to lay emphasis upon one great fact. It has many a time brought relief to my own heart, as I have thought about the sovereignty of God, the government of God, the rule of God. It is simply this, that the sovereignty of God is the sovereignty of good. "There is one good, and that is God." The rule of God is the rule of goodness itself; not only good in moral power and wisdom, but the rule of goodness itself. And the government of God is the government of love, for "God is love." There never was a time when God did not love; there is no place where God's love is not; there is no event in which his love has no part, and there never shall be a period wherein that love shall cease to be.

We are called upon to consider the question of the principles of this obedience; not so much the obedience that we are called upon to render, as the principle upon which that obedience should revolve. You know that the movements of the earth, though complicated, have certain great centres. The earth rotates upon an axis which may be called, in one sense, the principle of its movement. The movements of all worlds, however complicated, vast, and wonderful, obey a single principle—the principle of gravitation. Let us consider, very briefly, some of those principles of the Divine service, a sight of which, and a sense of which, will tend to produce that service itself. It is not sufficient to perceive the service that we are called upon to render; there must be the presence and the operation of adequate motives, leading to that service, and constraining to that obedience. You cannot have the fruit without the tree, the result without the cause; and here are fruits and results of a peculiar character, which only grow, so to speak, upon certain roots, and spring from certain causes.

God rules in nature, organic and inorganic. The course of the seasons, for instance, the growth of plants, the growth and changes which take place in animals, their various activities, and the endless multitudes of things in operation in heaven, and upon the earth, and under the earth; all these ceaselessly obey Him who sits upon the throne, and fulfil his will. But in this we have a service altogether different to, and lower than, the service we are called upon to render. There we have simply blind obedience to the operations of Almighty power. In contrast with this, there is moral government. Wherein does moral government differ from material government? It is the government of the free; the government of intelligent moral beings, with liberty of action, liberty of will; liberty to obey, and liberty to disobey. How great the dignity; but how awful the position, too! How does the great Creator control the actions of the intelligent, moral creature? By means of motives, and, as we have often heard, by means of rewards and punishments. But the method of the Divine government is not the whole of that government, or even the central part of that government under which we are placed, and to which we are called to render obedience. It may seem to some here, perhaps, that it is. There are some who see this so clearly that they see nothing beyond it. They see a great and glorious Being, who makes virtue its own reward, and vice its own punishment. In this aspect human government is an image of the Divine. What are the honours bestowed by earthly governments? What are the police, the prisons, the courts of law, the armies, the fleets, but so many checks and constraints and guides, acting upon the free wills and guiding the actions of men by the principle of rewards and punishments? Wherein does this differ from that peculiar government of God under which we stand? After all, we are under a government which rewards virtue and punishes vice; which deals with men according to their deeds. We cannot escape that, and we do not want to escape it. But in what does the difference lie? It seems to me that that form of government appeals only to the principle of self-love. That is not in itself an evil thing. If it were, we should not be commanded to love our neighbours as ourselves. It is evident that self-love is a proper thing within its own proper limits. But there is no power in self-love and self-interest to raise a ruined world from its ruins. Hence we say, reverently, the law of God which appealed to these principles failed as a method of Government. God knew that it would not answer this particular need when he gave it. He gave it simply to convince of sin, and unfold the remedy for sin. Paul tells us, in Romans viii., that what the law could not do, God found another way of accomplishing. What is that principle? Not that of self-love, though it is still that of love. Self-love remains as a motive, but a secondary motive. The love that leads to Christian service is the love of Christ Himself. "The love of Christ constraineth us." The more the Christian knows of Jesus, the more he comes under his influence. The love of Christ is self-sacrificing love. The service of God is a service of self-sacrifice; it springs only from the fountain of self-sacrifice, and that fountain of self-sacrifice is nothing else and nothing less than the self-sacrifice of Deity.

The peculiar service, then, that we are called to render is the service of the free to a law which they love, and a God whom they love. It is the service of the redeemed, the service of the liberated. His service is perfect liberty, because it is the service of those who are set free by a redeeming act. Redemption has broken the yoke, and struck off the fetters. We are no longer under the law; the law neither justifies nor condemns us. Not that we are without law; we are "under law to Christ," as Paul says, but not under the law. You remember that remarkable expression in Romans vii., "that we should serve, not in the oldness of the letter, but in newness of spirit." It is not an external service to which we are constrained by terror and self-interest, but a heart service flowing out in action, to which we are constrained by the love of God in Jesus Christ.

Then it is the service of sons. If you look at the service which the Son of God Himself rendered to the Father, in our redemption, you will see it there. There was no constraint, no compulsion, no slavery; it was the service of the Son. It is evident that when the Apostle says that the love of Christ constraineth us, he does not mean our love to Christ, but Christ's love to us. The context clearly shows that. Nothing but this can afford the requisite motive. In order to perceive the force of this we must remember and reflect upon this fact—that the love of Christ constrains only as it is known. The reason why multitudes find this wondrous motive power so feeble is that they know so little of that love. How can the love of Christ constrain those who know not that love? Therefore it is as we grow in the knowledge of Jesus Christ that we are brought more and more under the constraining power of his love, and that we love to render that service to which we are called. What is that constraining love? I believe it will be the theme of our meditation, as well as praise, to all eternity. It is the love of a Redeemer. The banner over us is redemption. It is the love of God who takes his own Son by the hand and leads Him forth. It is the love of the Son, who says, "God so loved the world that He gave Me." Oh, if we but entered into that! Let parents give their children to the Lord's service, and then they will find out, at least in some measure, what is the love that gave not only a Son, but an only-begotten Son. We see that same love in the Son of God Himself. Ponder that remarkable sentence from his lips: "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life." Have we not here a moral loveliness, attracting the love of God Himself? It is that same love which attracts and delights our hearts, and constrains us to an obedience which we sometimes find it so hard to render, because we have got so little of the knowledge of it. Let this great love be shed abroad in our hearts, and we shall not find it hard to give even ourselves.

Let me entreat you to gaze on Jesus Christ until you really see what He is, until you understand what his Cross really means, until you comprehend his self-sacrifice for your salvation, until you, taking the thought of a love that never had a beginning and never shall have an end, which has strewn your path with blessings, your way with light, your future with immortality. Let that infinite love chide your ignorance, and dissipate your misapprehensions. Cling to Him; weep upon his bosom and upon his feet, till He teach you, and instruct you, and lead you into the knowledge of Himself in such a way that you shall be trained to bring your best to Him, even as He has bestowed his best upon you—a living, loving sacrifice.

THURSDAY MORNING, June 25.

BY REV. E. W. MOORE.

The Pattern of Service.

"I SERVE" is the motto of our Royal Prince; but it is also the motto of the Prince of Princes. "Behold my servant." He whom we worship this morning has ennobled for ever the name and office of servant. Though He was in the form of God, He took upon Him the form of a servant.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty: all thy works serve Thee; even Thine enemies serve Thee, for the wicked are a sword of thine. Thy saints serve Thee. Angels serve Thee: they do thy commandment, hearkening unto the voice of thy word. But there is One only who has served Thee as our Pattern Servant.

Let us endeavour to contemplate our blessed Lord as the servant of the Father: first in his descent, second in his dependence, and third in his devotion. First, let us contemplate Him as the servant in his descent. If we would understand what it cost the Lord of Glory to become a servant, we must remember who He was and who He is. He was in the form of God; that is, He was by nature God. For as Chrysostom beautifully says: "By the expression, 'in the form of a servant,' we know that he intended that He was by nature a man; therefore, by the expression, 'in the form of God,' we know that Jesus was by nature God." Jesus is God. What comfort to my soul! Then his body has a Divine form; then his righteousness is the righteousness of God. "Jesus is God." So Solomon sang of Him: "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old." So Isaiah saw Him upon his throne, "high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." But though He was God, and though He is God, having all the glory, and attributes of Deity, He emptied Himself, and "took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." Oh, infinite descent! Who can fathom it?—who can measure it? Of old days, when in our creeds the words were uttered, "God became man," the congregation fell on their face and worshipped, and well may we, as we have been exhorted this morning already, "put off our shoes from our feet, for the place whereon we stand is holy ground." God became man; the Infinite came into the limits of space; the Eternal knew birth and time; the Unchangeable in stature grew; the Omnipotent hung a helpless babe on a mother's breast; the Omniscient asked questions to increase his learning; the All-sufficient, Self-existing, asked for food and drink. Who can say what a stoop was here?

> "Hast thou not heard that my Lord Jesus died?
> Then, let me tell thee a strange story:
> The God of power, as He did ride
> In his majestic robes of glory,
> Resolved to light; and so one day
> He did descend, undressing all the way.
>
> The stars his tire of light and rings obtained,
> The clouds his bow, the fire his spear,
> The sky his azure mantle gained.
> And when they asked, what He would wear,
> He smiled, and said as He did go,
> He had new clothes a-making here below."

So sweetly sang George Herbert. Jesus is our pattern as a servant in his descent. He passed by the heavenly host. He took not on Him the nature of angels. He left the Cherubim and Seraphim, and came down to the lowest order of created intelligences—for after all there are no lower intelligences than ours—and was made, though sinless, spotless and unstained, knowing no sin, though holy, harmless, separate from sinners, was made in the likeness of sinful flesh—subject to our infirmities and weaknesses. What a descent was here!

How is He the pattern to us in this? Remark how the passage we have before us this morning (Philippians ii.), in which the descent and the humiliation of Christ is used as an argument for the purifying of dissension in the Philippian Church—"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." What is the great hindrance to service? I say at once, unwillingness to stoop. How the blessed Master, by his descent, abashes the pride and selfishness of man. How he bids us take the lowest place that we may lift up those we go down to seek. Turn with me to John xiii. There we have, as it were, enacted this wondrous humiliation of our Lord (read verses 3—5). The mind and heart of the disciples were set on winning the highest place. It was the menial servant's office to wash the guests' feet. Why does not Peter or Matthew, or James or John, take the servant's place and do the lowly service? Why not? Turn to Luke xxii. 24: "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." How contrary to the mind of Jesus!

Again, we see more completely, more fully this lesson of humility when we think of the Lord's dependence. All through his life upon earth He was dependent. The very thought of a servant suggests the idea of dependence, and the Lord Jesus came to be dependent. We know that we tread on holy ground when we speak of the Son depending upon the Father. We know that we can only be led leaning on the hand-rail of Scripture, but we know that the principles of Christ's life, the principle upon which He led his life, is the pattern for our life. He gives it in John vi. 57: "As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me." How did Jesus live? Did He live by virtue of His deity, which was ever present? He laid aside its glory. He lived through the Father, He lived filled with the Holy Ghost, He lived possessed of God, He lived the man Christ Jesus, ever God of God, light of light; and yet those attributes and glories, in abeyance: God dwelling in Him, God living in Him, God leading Him, God energising Him, God using Him. "My Father gave me a commandment what I should do and what I should speak." Oh, wondrous pattern of a self-emptying life. How it thrills my soul with joy and peace to see that Jesus is a pattern of a life of faith, that He came to tread this earth as a servant in dependence, ever waiting upon the Father's word, ever governed by the Father's will, ever filled with the Holy Ghost. Then do I see the necessity of being self-emptied; then do I see how Christ is a pattern to me in being self-emptied. Christ was emptied of His glory: am I willing to be emptied of my meanness? Christ was emptied of his greatness: am I willing to be emptied of my littleness? Christ was emptied of his exaltation; am I willing to be emptied of my self-exaltation? Christ was emptied of Divine sufficiency: am I willing to be emptied of self-sufficiency? Christ resigned his own will, "Not my will, but thine be done": am I willing to be emptied of self-will? If I am, then I am prepared to be God's servant, and the Holy Ghost shall fill my poor feeble capacities to the brim; then to me shall come the Christ mighty to save, able to use the feeblest and most worthless instruments for his glory, even rejoicing in the most insignificant instruments to accomplish the mightiest ends. But I must be self-emptied. When you speak to me of the example of Christ it overwhelms me, it discourages me, it throws me into despair, until I have no power within me. But now, seeing that the secret of that life is not only the copy without me but is the inspiring power of Christ within me, I am filled with faith and love and courage and hope.

Next, the devotion of his service. If I could attempt to tell its details we should be here for many conferences. I can mention only one or two. First there is its voluntariness. "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." I am content to do it. "Yea, thy law is within my heart." Christ was the willing servant—no compulsion, nothing mechanical, nothing forced. "My meat and my drink is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish his work." Then its unobtrusiveness. "He shall not strive, nor cry, nor let his voice be heard in the street." There are very few servants like Samson, who can kill a lion without letting people know about it. There are very few Christian workers who are not anxious for a corner in the newspapers. There are very few who would not like "a little notice about what they are doing for the blessed Lord." But Christ's wish was to be hid. "He straitly charged them that they should not make Him known." He would not be paraded, He would not be trumpeted, He would be quiet if He could. His mercy dropped as the gentle rain from heaven. He would ever hide Himself. "Verily Thou art a God that hidest Thyself." O God of Israel, Saviour, may we be willing to be hid, may our work be only known by its effects!

Then let us notice its compassionateness. "A bruised reed He will not break." The shepherd's pipe that somebody has trod upon, cannot be made to sound; you cannot bring a note from it. But the Great Master can; give it into his hands and let Him make melody with it. Your poor, feeble frame, how gently He will use it, and, in spite of all its weakness, make it sing in his praise. He is gentle. And then his sternness. How stern He is in rebuking sin: "Get thee behind me, Satan." How stern in exposing hypocrisy: "Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites!" Then his lavishness of service. He never spared himself. You read in the Gospel by Mark, which describes, as we know, the Lord as the servant, such a passage as this, "They took Him, even as He was, in the ship," an expression, as has been pointed out, that denotes extreme of weariness, for the next moment He is asleep upon a pillow. Oh, the laboriousness of the service of Jesus; how He was worn out in the service of the Lord. In this He is our pattern. Then his faithfulness. Oh! the enemies that confronted Him, and the difficulties that beset Him! But what does He say? "I have set my face like a flint, and I know I shall not be ashamed."

Brethren, the particulars of service are too numerous to tell. Let us take these fragments that we have had presented in God's Word to-day, and let us say, "O Lord, who alone can serve acceptably to the Father, come into these poor, feeble bodies of ours, which we have presented unto Thee a living sacrifice, and make them thine." Sacrifice lies at the root of service. Before the acts of service in Romans xii. are given, there is, first, the exhortation to present our bodies a living sacrifice, that He may sanctify us and fill us and use us. May we hear his voice, may we contemplate Him as our pattern, and may we accept his power.

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON THE LORD'S COMING.

Mr. Mathieson rose to read requests for prayer, and said: The reading of the 50th Psalm has decided me to make an announcement, which previously, I had hesitated to do. Those who attended the Conferences, in 1878 and 1879, on the second coming of our blessed Lord and Saviour, will remember how Dr. Bonar commenced his address at the beginning with these words: "Our God shall come and shall not keep silence." I see this morning in reading this verse that there is an alternative reading: "Our God cometh and shall not keep silence," which makes it, as it were, a little more imminent and immediate. It does not project it so far into the future as the reading in the text perhaps does. We have never at Mildmay lowered our testimony concerning the blessed hope of the personal pre-millennial coming of our glorious Saviour. Though we have not had any Conference for these years past, yet in no Conference has there been wanting abundant allusion to this blessed hope; special reference will necessarily be made to it to-day in the meetings concerning Israel. Last year we had a special afternoon meeting on the subject; but, if the Lord will, and should He tarry, we hope that God will give us help to hold a Conference in the spring of 1886, probably in the early days of March. We ask for special prayer for that Conference, which will present greater difficulties in the way of arrangements than this annual Conference.

Christ both Pattern and Partner.

BY REV. HENRY E. BROOKE.

We have been brought very near to God Himself by our dear brother who has led our thoughts in the previous address, and I pray that we may be kept there. It is holy ground to have to do with the Lord Jesus Christ, and to contemplate Him. May we realise now what is spoken at the end of 2 Cor. iii: "But we all, with open face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

You may remember that the mirrors of old were of polished metal, not like ours, of glass, and therefore they had this peculiarity, that, if a person looked into a mirror, he saw, probably less perfectly than we do now, his face; but if he used the mirror to look at any other object—as, for example, reflecting mirrors are used in telescopes, to see the stars and the moon—if he used the mirror for such a purpose, if the object was a brilliant one, it would not only show itself upon the surface of the polished mirror, but cast back its rays upon his face, so that a man who was using a mirror for this object would not only see what he wanted, but imperceptibly his face would be lit up with the glory of the object, if that object was one possessing brightness. I think that is the key to the right understanding of that passage: "we all, with unveiled face, beholding, as in a mirror, the glory of the Lord." We are told a little further on, "In the face of Jesus Christ," there the glory of the Lord is revealed. We are gazing at Him, and, as we gaze at Him, there is this effect going on—the Spirit of the Lord is changing us from glory to glory. Here, then, is the advantage of gazing on Christ—that we are gazing at an object whom the Spirit of the Lord uses to this end—that He reflects back the glory of the object upon the countenances of those who gaze at Him. May our thoughts then be sanctified for the short time that we are to have this blessed subject before us; and, as the Lord Jesus, as the pattern of service, is the object of our contemplation, may every Christian heart have reflected back upon it some of the rays of this glory with transforming power.

It shall be my endeavour to take up this subject from the point at which our brother dropped it. Indeed, what has been said has been so clearly expressed, that I should only mar the subject if I were to go over the same thoughts that have been presented to us. We are thus brought down to the point where the Lord Jesus, as the servant, was entering upon his great work. I refer especially to John xiii., mentioned by Mr. Moore, who pointed out the interesting connection between it and Luke xxii. He pointed out that the disciples were not ready to wash one another's feet, for there was a strife among them who should be greatest. Let me ask you to look at the washing of the disciples' feet, for it seems to me that if we are to regard Jesus as a pattern for service, we have it here in a very concentrated form. Mark, first, the dignity of Him who performed this act of service:—"He riseth from supper, and laid aside His garments; and took a towel, and girded Himself. After that He poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith He was girded." One is almost reminded of the laying aside of his glory in order to come down and do his work. He laid aside his garments and took a towel and girded Himself. Peter objects, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." He was brought to a sense of shame when he saw his Master thus assuming such a position before him. The Lord, however, recalls his thoughts, and would recall our thoughts, to the object of this washing his disciples' feet, by saying, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." The Lord, in washing his disciples' feet, wished to draw their attention to the results of his finished work. That washing, that cleansing from sin, was accomplished by his dying for sin, dying the just for the unjust, by opening that fountain for sin and for uncleanness of which we sing:—

"And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

But the Lord did evidently not intend here to bring back their thoughts so much to the pardon sinners get when they first come to Christ as to the continual cleansing which his people need. Every day's walk is a day of contraction of defilement, and, therefore, every day's walk needs a daily washing; and the Lord Jesus, in priestly service, would teach us that He graciously ministers to us this daily cleansing; in other words, what we have in 1 John i., "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin," that is, goes on cleansing us. It is a daily thing. It is a continual, a perpetual application on his part, of that blood which, having been once for all shed for sin, is, in its application to our daily need, to be considered as a daily washing.

Does this present to us any motive for consequent action? Can we thus contemplate Him, the Lord of glory, laying aside that glory and becoming a "man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," and living a life of which we have a record in the Gospels, and dying a death of which the record in the Gospels fails to be an adequate representation. I mean, by that, as to any attempt to sound the depths of what He went through. There is no attempt to do it. It has often been pointed out that the Evangelists did not dwell as men often do upon either the physical sufferings or the mental sufferings of Christ. It is too holy and too deep a subject for man to attempt to fathom, and therefore it is passed by in almost silence. But are our hearts touched by what He endured? That bitter cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" is, as it were, an index, or should be, of what He passed through. Or that other cry in the Garden of Gethsemane: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." It did not pass from Him. He was strengthened to bear it. He finished the work. On the cross He proclaimed that glorious truth: "It is finished;" and so He has "brought in everlasting righteousness, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

Dear friends, I would not pass away from this subject without remembering that prayer has been asked for two persons present, that God would bless his truth to their souls. I think often that there may be hundreds present for whom such prayer is needed. I believe there is no condition exacted in the issuing of the tickets for Mildmay that only converted persons shall come, and perhaps there may be numbers present who as yet are not saved. Let me pause here just to tell you that this is the message we preach—that this finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ is offered to you just as it is. This glorious service which He has performed is now at your disposal, for your acceptance, that you may, by faith, make it yours, and that you may now enter into peace where you are, without leaving this hall, simply by trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, who hath wrought this finished work—simply by believing the record that God hath given of his Son, "For this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Now, let me point to the lesson which the Lord would have us learn from this washing of the disciples' feet. "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." And then He adds: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." "Know these things"—what does He mean? May we not say that here the Lord would teach his children is that if we realise that the Lord Jesus forgives our daily sins we ought to forgive one another's sins? "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye ought also to wash one another's feet." It is quite true, we cannot forgive as God does, judicially. That is his work, and his alone; but we can forgive offences against ourselves. When we are offended, or when we are hurt or annoyed, or when our brethren by act or speech injure us, the Lord would recall to our thoughts how He treats us—every day's sins blotted out. "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought to wash one another's feet." I think the spiritual exposition of this is to be found at the end of Ephesians iv., "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake [or, literally, as God in Christ] hath forgiven you." Oh, may He write this lesson of forgiving love upon our souls, may He cause us not only to love our brethren but to forgive them whenever there is anything that seems to separate betwixt us and them; and may the motive of this love be his great love to us.

We need to be reminded of the complete forgiveness in which we walk, and that sin is not in a judicial sense laid to the charge of a child of God. "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again;" "who is even at the right hand of God; who also maketh intercession for us." Thus we are brought back to the priestly intercession which is being continually carried on.

And may I say that, in considering the Lord Jesus as the pattern of service, we must go a little further, and look upon Him as the partner in service. I may be called to look at a pattern which discourages me because it is so much above me; but, if I am called upon to look at the work of one who is perfect, and then am told I have an interest in that work, I look upon it in a very different way. Now, the service of the Lord Jesus is not merely to be looked upon as a pattern of what we are to do, but we are to assume partnership in this finished work. We are not merely to regard Him as setting before us an example of what we ought to do. In one sense, that is impossible. We are not called upon to put away sin, or to do the atoning work which He wrought. It is one of the features of the antichrist that we discern, alas! not unfrequently in the present day, that man's work is brought into the place which should alone be occupied by Christ's work. Thank God, we protest against that, and may our protest be stronger. We are, however, called into a real partnership with Him: "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." We are called upon to be partners with the Son of God; and, just as in a partnership, you can imagine some leading members of the firm being far more active and intelligent than others, and yet the latter sharing the benefits of the wisdom and sagacity of the former, so is it here, the Lord Jesus is sole partner in this matter of salvation, but He allows us to be partners, first of all, in the reception, and, secondly, in the promulgation of his salvation.

And this leads to another point. It has been very much on my mind of late that the Church of God is waking, but is not so thoroughly awake as it might be, to the fact that the ministry of reconciliation is committed to every reconciled soul. You know we have all been waking up very much of late to see that what we call the laity, as distinguished from the ministry, has a sphere of work. But I will go beyond this. I fully believe in the ministry, and all that is written concerning it to Timothy and Titus; but I do say that the ministry of the Gospel is not committed to ministers as such; it is their privilege to preach it, and they have an exceptionably advantageous position. But the ministry of reconciliation is, if we look at 2 Cor. v., given to all the reconciled. "God hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation." I ask, who are the "us"? Do you think that Paul meant that Apostles were reconciled, or that only those engaged in the ministry were so reconciled? No; he meant that every reconciled soul was to consider himself a minister of this reconciliation. I know the difficulties, I have felt them; but I think they give way before an honest examination of Scripture. One has been happily removed by the Revised Version—2 Cor. vi., "That the ministry be not blamed." That, at first sight, looks as if the Apostle meant a certain order of men called "ministers." But the word is translated "that our ministration" be not blamed. Or it might still more accurately be read, "that the ministration be not blamed." If the ministration of the Gospel is committed to every saved soul, I ask you, Are we awake to that? Have we really admitted the fact that every saved soul has a ministry of reconciliation committed to him or to her? I speak not now as against the importance of special work, but I emphasise the general work, that which has been committed to all the Church as such.

May I refer to two parables which throw a light upon this subject?—the parables of the Talents and of the Pounds; the one in Matt. xxv. the other in Luke xix. You remember their general features. A nobleman in one case, and a master in the other, is leaving his house and his own property, and goes into a far country; and his servants trade with his money—his money, not theirs; and his word is "Occupy till I come," or, as the Revised Version renders it, "Trade herewith" whilst I am coming. When he comes back he takes account with his servants; and what I would have us to think of is that from everyone of you, not from ministers alone, not even from Sunday-school teachers, but from every man, woman, and child, who has believed on the Lord Jesus for salvation—from you will be asked the account of what you have done with this wealth entrusted to you. What is that wealth? We are accustomed to think of the talents as suggesting natural endowments. I do not think there is anything of the kind meant. The Lord Jesus did not leave natural endowments with his people when He went away. Let us see what was his own commission. You have it four times repeated in the Gospels — in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. The last words of Jesus to his disciples, "Make disciples of all nations;" and then, again, in Mark, "Preach the Gospel to every creature;" and, again, in Luke, "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached among all nations in his name;" and, then, in John, "Receive the Holy Ghost" (pointing on to the Day of Pentecost): followed by "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

One is thankful that a protest is now being raised, and that by men whose names will carry weight, against the attempt to limit this commission to the ministers of religion. I refer to some well-known words of Professor Westcott. He has pointed out that this commission is not to the ministry of the Church, but to the Church itself; for every member of the Church those words were spoken. It was not to the Apostles alone the Lord Jesus Christ spoke. We know some of the Apostles were not there. We know there were others present who were not Apostles, and probably women were amongst them; but to everyone of them were spoken these words; "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

I ask, What was meant by that but what the Acts of the Apostles tell us they did? They "went everywhere preaching the word." Surely not Apostles only. Nay, in Acts viii. 1—4, it is all "except the Apostles." We want more of this. We want Christians stirred up with regard to carrying forth the message of life amongst those who are still dead in trespasses and sins. And, then, you remember that when the master came back, he found that they had been trading—"Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds;" just like the Christian who has so many seals to his ministry, so many souls—it may be ten or five souls: "Lord, the knowledge of thy salvation entrusted to me, has won so many souls."

But there was a man who did not use his pound, and there you have the unconverted one who is still a professing Christian. He has the knowledge in his head, but he has never turned it into heart knowledge. He has a knowledge of the way of salvation, but never used it for his own soul to begin with, and that is the meaning of the reply: "Why didst thou not give it to the changers, or the bankers, that I might have received mine own with interest." What is the interest that the Lord may fairly look for from the knowledge of salvation? I ask—is it not the salvation of your own souls? And if your souls are not saved, may not the Lord say, "Why did you not at least so deal with what I have committed to you that I might have received the same with interest." And so it is taken from him and given to others, to show that the profession of a Christian will be taken away from those who are not really Christians. Thus we have this solemn lesson, that we are all called upon to further this work, to win souls to Christ, and that with his capital entrusted to us. He gave them his own property, "the property that belongs to Me," as we have it in the Greek. What was the property of Christ? Why, by his death he had brought in everlasting righteousness, and put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. Paul called it "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Oh, may we feel this more and more, that this is entrusted to everyone of us; that there is no saved man or woman who has not this ministry of reconciliation committed to them, and that they are responsible in the midst of this perishing world to make known to others the glad tidings of a full and free salvation through a crucified Saviour.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Appointed Service.

BY MR. . A. BLACKWOOD.

THERE is one point not mentioned in the programme for this evening's subject to which I would refer—viz., that the pathway of service is appointed, a prepared pathway. It is not one in which self-will or self-pleasing is to have any part or lot. It is one which is prepared beforehand, of God. Look with me for a few moments at Numbers ii., as throwing some light upon this feature of the Christian pathway of service. Here we have the marching orders of the Lord; and in the fourth chapter of the same book we have the rules given for the service of the Levites. Let me point out to you a few verses in this chapter which seem to show very clearly that, as of old, so now also, every step in the path, and every particle of the work if it is to be the right pathway, is appointed of the Lord. Chapter ii. contains the ordering of the position of the tribes, and their position in the encampment on their march. The order of march was clearly ordained for all the tribes. Every tribe, every family, every man had his place marked out, and it was marked out by reference to the Tabernacle in the centre. Therefore, in order to ascertain where he was to encamp, where he was to take his place in the march, a man had to keep his eye fixed on the pillar of cloud and on the pillar of fire. All was divinely settled. Is not that most important in these days, when we are so apt to go hither and thither according to our inclination; to linger behind, or to press forward, just as we are inclined, just as we choose? It seems as if in these days that, accompanying all the Christian activity for which we are so thankful—and which may God increase tenfold and a thousandfold, there is at the same time a great deal of, so to speak, will-worship and will-service. There is an absence of that subordination, that regularity, that complete and implicit submission to the will of God in the matter of service which the hosts of Israel manifested when they encamped and when they set forward. Is it not because our eyes are not constantly fixed on the centre, that we are not looking unto Jesus, that we are not taking our directions from Him, but rather going by what our own inclinations prompt, and what our own will, or sense, suggests?

Look at this further, for one moment, in chapter iv. That chapter describes the work of the Levites, and it is a remarkable thing about that that it is declared in the 19th verse to be all appointed. "Aaron and his son shall go in and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden;" and in the 27th verse, "At the appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens." In the margin, instead of "to do all the service," it is rendered "to war the warfare;" so we see that the smallest bit of work about the Tabernacle of God was dignified by the name of warfare. A Levite who carried a tent-peg for the Tabernacle was as much warring the warfare in the service of God as Joshua when he led forth the armies of Israel. That is a very blessed view to take of service, I think.

Then again, the burdens were appointed as well as the active work—the bearing of the burdens, and the doing of the service. But the great point upon which I feel inclined to lay stress is that it is all appointed. Every man not only knew his place in encamping and in marching, but every man knew the exact bit of work that he had to do. There was no room for doubt; there was no room for gratifying self. The simple question was: What does Aaron say? As we heard last night, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Thus we learn how God has, indeed, has prepared beforehand the pathway of service, and appointed the work for everyone of us to do.

What, then, is our responsibility in the matter? First of all, is it not to ascertain what the Lord would have us do? The thought that suggests itself to one is something of this kind: It was easy enough for the Israelites; they walked by sight; they could see the pillar of cloud; they could go to Aaron and could get exact directions as to what they were to do. But they were only children compared with those who live in this dispensation. They were under the schoolmaster; we walk by faith, and not by sight. Will the way be less clear now, under the light and teaching of the Holy Ghost, and with a completed Bible, than it was then? No. We may be sure, if the heart is right with God, if the eye is single, the whole body will be full of light.

Here are principles enough for service. Take them; embrace them. The Holy Ghost will apply them, and, if we are honest in asking the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do," we shall know what it is and where it is. Depend upon it that it is only as we realise this that the forces of the Church militant, here on earth, will really be effectual in the way that God desires they should be effectual. How much of our service is wasted? How many are working in the same place, when they might be serving more effectually elsewhere? There is a common expression applicable to much of the religious systems of the day—"every man to his treble and bass." We have regard to our own feelings and wishes and our own inclinations, instead of regulating our path and conduct by keeping our eye fixed on the central object—the person of the Lord Jesus, and by considering our relative positions in the Church of God as the Israelite had to regard his relative position to the next family or the next camp. It may be that some like to go in the first rank, and few, perhaps, like to go hindmost; but the rear-guard is as noble a position in the army as the advanced guard. If they are in their proper place, they are doing what the commander-in-chief will have done. To be hindmost with Christ, and under his orders, is as great and as glorious a privilege as to march in the van. May He give us more of that subordination to his will, that laying aside our own selfish regard to our own feelings and interests, shall make us say day by day and hour by hour, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Then we shall find what a blessed thing it is to walk in the path of good works which He has before appointed and prepared, that we should walk in it.

The Pathway of Service.

BY REV. J. G. GREGORY.

We have been reminded in Ephesians ii., which was read, that the starting-point for service is on the heaven-side of the grave. It is in the risen Christ—"quickened together with Him; raised together with Him, seated together in Him." That is our position. The moment of the quickening from the grave with Christ was the first moment of the life—the spiritual life of the believer.

In looking to the programme for to-night, we find the pathway of service marked for us thus:—In the first place after Christ. As Christ trod the pathway so are we. The text specially brought before us is John xii., 26: "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me." We know how that certain Greeks wanted to see Jesus. The same came to Philip, which was of Bethsaida, and desired him, saying, "Sir, we would see Jesus." Philip, answering about this matter, told Andrew, and then Andrew and Philip went together and told Jesus. (Read John xii. 23, 28.) Now, what see we here? The whole passage shows there must be full consecration. It must be in resurrection life. So let us view it for a moment. The pathway our Saviour trod was the pathway of thorough consecration to God. Beloved, this is what we need—that yielding of self, power, opportunities, talents, all we have, and all we are, to Him; this involves separation from what is evil. A very thorough emptying of the old self. But mark, how was it with Christ? Let us again look at Philippians ii. Thank God here for the rendering of the New Version: "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." What did He do? He who made the heavens and earth, at the time appointed, emptied Himself. To what extent? We read that Jesus increased in wisdom and in power and in favour with God. How remarkable. How could it be? The great God who created the heavens and the earth, the visible and the invisible, thrones, dominions, principalities and powers—that great God increased in wisdom and in favour with God. What is the answer? He had emptied Himself. That is the only answer we can give.

The first point of all sanctification is separation. This is necessary to the dedication, which is the second point, and, together with the separation, makes up the consecration full and entire. He emptied Himself, and then set Himself to fulfil the whole will of God. There is our pattern. "Be ye followers of God—imitators of God, as dear children." How can we? No man hath seen God at any time. No, but "the Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath revealed Him," and that Son has shown us what is the holiness of the great God, the eternal Father of all. He has bidden us look at Him in his excellence and service, and follow in his footsteps hour by hour. What do we know of such consecration as this? How do we stand with the things of this world, which we have set such a high value upon? Have we emptied ourselves? Does the world sit lightly upon us? Have we emptied ourselves, that we might give ourselves unreservedly to God, to serve Him in fulness of heart, and yield ourselves to Him in whole consecration? God grant it may be so. Then, like our Master, we may do always the things which please God; will it not be blessed?

This passage speaks to us of crucifixion. A blessed doctrine, that Jesus died for me, and there is, therefore, now no condemnation. But, let us remember this, there is not a single doctrine brought before us in God's Word which has not its experimental side. With every doctrine there is power. With every doctrine there is personal responsibility, and it is so with the doctrine of Christ crucified. Hence, they that are Christ's—not some of them—have crucified—not do crucify—the flesh, with its affections and lusts. It is a serious thing to be a Christian if this be so. It is no mere matter of getting the doctrines all right, and being thoroughly, and staunchly, and properly orthodox, and being up with all the interpretations of the doctrines of God's Word concerning Christ crucified; but the cross of Christ must be so grasped that there may be reality of death of the old man, so that the affections and lusts of sinful kind have received their death-blow. "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, whereby the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world" (Galatians vi. 14). Let us have a little personal questioning. We have spoken about the crucifixion of the flesh, or rather God's Word has, and it has also spoken about the crucifixion of the man to the world, so that he is dead to it. How does this stand with us? It is very nice to come to Conferences. It is very nice to take a Christian brother by the hand, and rejoice in what we call fellowship. It is very nice to look back together at the wondrous work Christ did for us, and to rejoice therein. But, touching this service, how do we stand with the world? How does the world stand with us? The world must be a crucified thing, and the crucifixion of self must be that which shall make us dead to the world. That is as God would have it. Is it so with you and me? Is the crucifixion of Christ nothing, or is it deeply important?

Let us pass from crucifixion to resurrection. We would follow Christ, would tread in his footsteps, would behold the pathway, and would walk in it, as He trod in it. What a stress we should lay upon the resurrection life. Romans i. 4 is a very remarkable verse. Christ was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Mark the word power. In the Old Version, and, I think, in the New, we often come across the word power as connected with Christ, and spoken of by Himself, while He was yet upon the earth. In every such case power means authority. It is another word here altogether. Here it means force, might. The risen Christ has received at the hand of God, in our human nature in which He sits at the right hand of that great Lord, all power in heaven and earth. He has received this power that you and I may have it in membership with Him. At the moment we came to Christ, were we not beheld by God in the old nature that would have left us nowhere but in the arms of death? But we were baptized by the Holy Spirit right into the very person of the Lord Jesus Christ, and we became from that moment members of his body, in closest alliance with the head. Joined to the Lord, we have the one name, and we are required, as we tread in the pathway of service, to do whatsoever we do in that name, and having abiding communion with that great and glorious head. Here is resurrection life: Christ sitting upon the throne, waiting there till the Father shall say, "It is enough; go down again to this world and gather thy people to Thyself." What a lesson for us! Abiding in the glorious estate of Christ, we have to wait upon the Father, even as Jesus does; to wait upon the Father that his will may be revealed to us; that He may tell us what to do and how to do it. Not to follow our own inclinations, or our own ideas, or our own spiritual bias, or walk, but waiting upon God.

I should like to have gone into that list of special marks to the pathway—the special characteristics of the pathway brought before us in our paper—uprightness, spirituality, the presentation of our bodies, constancy, zeal, and fervency; but we will just look at Christ. We have seen how blessed it is to follow such an one, and we have seen what power we have, the power of the Holy Ghost abiding in the body of Christ, because, in the Head of that body, we have seen how that power can never fail. As He in whom we have that power emptied Himself, so we are called upon to empty ourselves; and we have seen how He was crucified for us, and we are called upon to stoop down to the grasping of the cross—to the thorough experimental death of our old nature. We have seen how He rose again and has ascended to the highest heaven, and we are called upon to lay our hand of faith—real, loving, abiding faith—upon his resurrection and ascension estate, that we may live in the power of the eternal life we have in union with Him, living in the consciousness of that union day by day. Evil is cast beneath our feet. We are enabled to stand firm, and press boldly towards the great goal, the eternal glory, the eternal kingdom where the crowns are, that He may, according to our service in Him, give unto us the crown according as our works have been. Then Christ shall be glorified as the manifested head of his body—that Christ to whom the honour, the fulness of the redemption of the body belongs, and who shall have the glory thereof from saints and angels for ever and for ever.

The Service of Jesus Christ.

BY LORD RADSTOCK.

There had been a Church at Corinth, saints of God, of whom it was said, "their bodies were the temple of the Holy Ghost," who had got into disobedience, and had got away from Him. Trouble had come in; there were divisions among themselves, and therefore there could be no joy. They had allowed evil, and they were thinking every one of taking their own supper before the other. Their consciences had also got so blinded that terrible evil had been allowed and unjudged, and one had to be put away from the communion—from the body of Christ. Not long after, a letter came addressed to these people. The first letter began, as all the letters began, "Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." The second letter began in the same way, for the love never failed; The saints had failed; the Church had failed, but the love never failed. Again there was "Grace and peace from God the Father"—He could never be anything else than a Father, who was longing to bless his children—"and from the Lord Jesus Christ." Then there was a message of tender love and restoration to that guilty one. He was to be restored. That one had done such terrible evil—yet the Father's heart went out after him that he should be restored, "lest he should have sorrow upon sorrow." So it was that our blessed Lord sought his sheep to bring it back again.

Then, lest there should be any mistake, there was the great final blessing. Let us take it to ourselves in faith, and in the power of the Holy Ghost: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all;"—that restored one, who had grieved the Holy Ghost?—yes, the communion of the Holy Ghost to be with them all. Now you are in a fit state to serve. You have got your link with God.

There is one aspect, however, of this service, which I do not see in the programme, to which I would call your attention for a moment; that is, not merely the service for Christ, but the service of Christ. It has been alluded to, but I think it is well for us to remember that our service is an outcome of the commission to Christ. You remember that remarkable passage in Isaiah xlix., where our Lord gets his commission, "I have set Thee for a light to the Gentiles." You remember in Acts xiii. the Apostle quotes it, and says, "So hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee for a light to the Gentiles." In other words, the Holy Ghost, who seemed ever to be teaching the Apostle Paul the wonderful ministry of the communion of the body of Christ by the Holy Ghost, took up that one commission given to the individual, Christ, and said that was the commission given to the whole Church. Let us, then, remember that that is the commission given to us. The commission given to Christ is the commission given to the Church; not merely to us individually, but to us collectively.

Then look at another aspect of how the service is to be done. Just look for a moment at Deut. x., "At that time." What was the time? It was a time something like our own day, when the mass of the people had gone after idols and were leaning upon them. They said, "These are thy gods, O Israel, that brought thee out of Egypt." They departed from the living God, and God could not have fellowship with them. The tabernacle had been pitched afar off, outside the camp, and everyone that sought the Lord went there to meet Him, and that was the tabernacle of the congregation; the congregation of those who met God. "Now at that time He separated the tribe of Levi." Why? Were they distinguished for their holiness? Were they—if I may use the term—the best men in Israel? Were they chosen on the ground of their peculiar excellence? No; but because they were Aaron's. They were given to Aaron. It was because of what Aaron was tha the tribe of Levi had the blessing. You remember that when it was a question which tribe was to take up the priesthood, and when those twelve dead sticks were put up before God, then the Lord said, "The man's rod, whom I shall choose, shall blossom." You remember how each tribe wrote their own name, but there was one tribe that did not write its own name, but wrote Aaron's name. Moses wrote for the tribe of Levi, Aaron's name on the rod for the house of Levi. There was one name which did not appear, and that was the name that God chose for the priesthood; the name of the tribe was lost in the federal head. So when it was put up before God, God bore testimony to Aaron and that rod, simply because it had the name of the federal head, and was laid up as a witness in the ark of the covenant. The tribe of Levi belonged to Aaron, and therefore they were separated.

What was the first thing they had to do? They were separated to bear the ark of the covenant: "At that time the Lord separated the tribe of Levi to bear the ark of the covenant." The tribe joined to Jesus—because you know "Levi" means joined—separated for Him, separated for his service. As we read in the Epistle to the Romans, "Married to Him, [that is, raised from the dead], that we should bring forth fruit unto God." Mark you, not ye, but we, that is, Christ and the Church. Not, "You must do this, you must do that;" no, the heart won to Christ, and then, as the result of that divine union, fruit unto God. Well, they were to bear the ark of the covenant, and what was there in it? There was the Law; there was the manna—the daily bread. Are you discouraged, young believer, because the spiritual experience you thought you had secured as your own yesterday seems to have gone away to-day? Remember, you are to have your manna fresh every day—you are to have your Christ. He that is eating Me liveth by Me. Your life is to feed upon Christ, not to live upon your own experience; to walk by faith, and not by sight.

In that ark of the covenant there is, too, the eternal Priesthood. That same rod that budded from the moment the name was put upon it—there is the token. He says, take it for a token, and there is the token. Well, they were to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and then, what next? This is the beginning of all service—to stand before the Lord. In the Revised Version, in Isaiah lxiv., there is a very beautiful rendering—that God "worketh for him that waiteth for Him." To be occupied with Him is fulness and grace; to be satisfied with the riches of his love, and then to minister unto Him. It is not to succeed in this, or succeed in that, or succeed in the other; but it is to minister something to Him, whatever it may be. I believe it is just when we are most occupied with the little things that please Him, that we are most in the condition to be used.

How often have I been struck with the fact that David, when he had been at the court of Saul, went back again to his father's sheep. It must have seemed a very poor employment for a great soldier, for a person of high position, just to look after a few sheep in the wilderness. You remember that his father sent him with some loaves of bread for his elder brethren, and for those elder brethren who had been so disagreeable to him. If he had not had a true servant's spirit he might have shrunk from that, and said: "Anybody else can do that; I shall only be received with disagreeable remarks, and I do not see that it is my place." But he went with the bread for his elder brethren. There is the true spirit of service. He went because his father told him to do it. And in that spirit he sees, with that clear eye which nobody else in all Israel could see, the real covenant ground. Therefore he comes in as one to bless; he brings in the power of God. The covenant had not changed; and he saw their darkness, and that they had lost all confidence in God, and they did not know how to overcome Goliath. But David did. He knew the secret, and he went back to the covenant ground and brought in the power of God. He knew that the army of Israel, though in that low state, had the right to conquer the Philistine.

So it is with us, brethren. As we learn first of all to stand before Him as those who are in the Covenant, as those who are in the Christ—as we learn thus to minister to Him, to minister to the weakest of his saints—"He that receiveth you receiveth me;" "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto Me;"—as we learn that principle of ministry to Him, then we shall learn the secret of bringing the power of God in blessing. Can you trust Jesus, dear young believer, now? Just as those Levites were chosen for service because they belonged to Aaron, so you are sanctified in Christ because of your relationship to Him. For no other reason you are set apart for his service. As we heard just now, we are the workmanship of Christ, created for a good work. And as you wait upon Him, He will show you where you are to serve Him. Perhaps it is to take a loaf of bread to some poor disciple; perhaps it is in simple, humble ministry; but you do it unto Him, and so you get an experience of Him as your reward. "I am thine exceeding great reward." In a little while He is coming. Let us wait in His presence through the day, and through the hours that are passing away so quickly. If there is a time of darkness in the soul, remember that although you cannot see anything, you are in the house of the Lord. Praise the Lord, then, ye servants of the Lord; praise the Lord, and be "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

The Privileges of Service.

BY REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD.

WE have been meditating upon a heavenly theme. The service of God and the privileges of that service can only be estimated as we are enabled, in the light and teaching of the Holy Ghost, to apprehend the majesty and the glory of Him whom we serve, the dignity of the service itself, and the destiny to which it leads us. May God save us from theorising upon this awful subject. I do not know a more fearful snare for professing Christians than intellectual theorising upon undigested truths of God's Gospel. God's love is addressed, not to our heads, or to our minds, for it passeth knowledge; and I do solemnly feel, in being called to the subject that I am about to speak to you upon, how very humble one ought to be in the conscious contrast of the privileges of God's service and the meagreness of the service we render. Better not know his love than to trifle with it; better not to hear of the privileges of his service than to neglect it, for our God is a jealous God amongst us.

There is one service, the privileges of which shed a halo over all the subjects which we have been considering at this conference, and that service is noticed in the 42nd chapter of Isaiah, and the privileges of it are there detailed. "Behold my servant," saith Jehovah. How complacently He seems to contemplate it! Mark the privileges of the service: "My servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon Him." You remember in Luke iv. 16, when He stood up in the synagogue at Nazareth, and opened the Scripture where it was written, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor, to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captive." This was the glory committed to Him—to be the Servant of Jehovah. Now, turn to John xvii. 22: "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." Here is the great Servant speaking to his fellow-servants. What glory What is this glory of which the Lord, the great Servant of Jehovah, saith, "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them"? The essential glory? No, that is not communicated. His personal glory? No, that is not communicated. His mediatorial glory? It is not communicated. "I have manifested unto them thy Name"—the name that was manifested to Him. Read the 8th verse: "I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me." See the 18th verse: "As Thou has sent Me into the world, so have I sent them into the world."

What is the glory, then, He has given us? The glory of union with Himself, fellowship with Himself, in the knowledge and in the enjoyment and in the service of the Almighty God. You see the communication coming from the anointed head of the great Servant, down to the skirts of His raiment: And then mark how He upholds them in his prayer! "Father," He says, "keep them—righteous Father, keep them." Ah! they will be well kept—the servants of the Lord. "Father," He says, "sanctify them through thy truth." "Father, unite them to Me and to Thyself; Father, glorify them." Thus they are sent and thus they serve. Now take an illustration from the New Testament of this descending of the spirit of unction for service upon the Lord's servants. Take the case of Saul of Tarsus, that chief of sinners, the persecutor, the blasphemer, the injurious. I need not remind you of how he was stricken down on his way to Damascus. The sight that he got of Jesus broke his heart; being given a sight of himself and of his Lord, the prayer is forced from him, Lord Jesus, whom I have persecuted, what wouldst Thou have me to do? and the Lord spoke to him. Have you ever compared the different accounts of this appearing of Jesus to the Apostle, as written in the Acts of the Apostles, in the 9th, 22nd, and 26th chapters? Put them together, and see what a splendid lesson we gather of the privileges of God's servants. (Read Acts ix. 15—18.) Do you see the descending unction of the anointed Head above?—the great Servant of Jehovah serving in the presence of God for his people, and coming down upon his servants here below. That we may enjoy the privilege of the service of God is the end of the redemption, the end of the adoption, the end of the regeneration, the end of the inhabitation by the Holy Ghost of God's people. We are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works; and if we are not created in Christ Jesus we do no good work.

We read, in Luke i. 74, how we are delivered from our enemies that we might serve Him without fear. So it was when Isaiah the great prophet, that Gospel prophet, was called to his service. You remember the sixth chapter of his prophecy where he gives us an account of it. It was in the year that King Uzziah died, that king of Judah who presumed, in the warrant of his royal position, to intrude into the Temple of the living God. He was stricken with leprosy, and, in the year that King Uzziah died, a leper, a poor leprous sinner was admitted to see the King in his beauty, to see the Lord in his glory, and to listen to the harpings of the seraphim. His voice could not join their voice, his heart could not mingle with their praises, and he cried, "Woe is me! for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips," so he could not speak with them; there would be a discord in the sound of those lips. And then the angel, a messenger from Jehovah, takes the coal from the altar and touches the lips of that poor sinner. Judgment had fallen whence that coal was taken and applied to the lips of that poor sinner; it was life and pardon, and peace and power. He said unto him, See, I have caused thy iniquity to pass from thee, and thy sin is purged. Then he heard a voice saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" His reply was, "Here am I, send me."

You remember, it was the same with the prophet Jeremiah, when he was called to his great and fearful service. If you look at the tenth verse of the first chapter, you will find the Lord was sending his servant to a fearful service. He says: "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant." He was sent with judgment, and he says, "I am a child." Read the reply: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." Is not the privilege plain? the source from whence the privilege of service has come, manifest?" See the privileges and the qualifications for the service of the Lord. See whence they come. Look up to the same source, and you will get the power, and you will get the privilege. The sufficiency comes from Him who alone is sufficient. When the Lord called the twelve, observe what it says: "He goeth into a mountain and calleth unto Him whom He would." Oh, He is sovereign in calling to Him whom He would. And they come unto Him, made willing in the day of his power. And He retained twelve. For what? That they should be with Him, and that He should send them forth to preach and proclaim glad tidings of great joy, and to have power to heal sicknesses and to cast out devils.

In the beautiful shadows of the Old Testament economy—the service of the Levites—they were a circle within a circle in the land; they were God's special property, God's peculiar portion amongst the tribes of Israel; they represented the firstborn, redeemed with the blood of the Lamb. Their place was to be encamped round about the Sanctuary of God, and to minister in it. They were all numbered. Every name was named in heaven. They were all washed. They were all clothed. God Himself appointed their apparel. They were all anointed and consecrated, and their business was to do the Lord's service out of the fulness with which He had supplied them. It was their business to do the Lord's warfare, it was their business to keep the Lord's charge. Oh, their precious, precious privileged business, to be the servants of the Lord, to tell of his goodness, to declare his glory, and to minister amongst his people, around the sanctuary, in the wilderness, and in the land. The Lord's people are Levites still; you will never find the Lord finding fault with the Levites for any deficiency of service, only for their wrongness of motives. And we are a chosen generation, if we be the Lord's servants still—"called out of darkness into his marvellous light." When we speak of the privileges of the servants of God, I know no privilege higher than is to be found in the service itself. The service of a redeemed people, the service of a consecrated people, the service of a people made willing. It is a service of perfect freedom.

Have you ever observed, both in the Old Testament and in the New, the dignity of the service of God is spoken of as paramount to all the other dignities of God's people? "Hast thou seen my servant Job?" Job, according to God's own account of him, was unparalleled upon the earth. There was not another man like him upon the earth, and the Lord could boast of him as "My servant Job." God spoke with Moses face to face, but when God would boast of Moses, He does not speak of other privileges, but of this: "My servant, that is faithful in all my house." The great Apostle Paul, of whom we were speaking, puts his being a servant of God before his apostleship. You never find him writing, "Paul, an apostle and a servant," but, "Paul, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ." You find the same in Peter. You never find him saying, "Peter, an apostle and a servant," but he also says, "Peter, the servant of God and of Jesus Christ, and an apostle." When the great Apostle speaks of James, he calls him "the Lord's brother;" but when you find James writing his Epistle, it is, "James, the servant of God and of Jesus Christ." The beloved disciple lay upon the bosom of God, but we do not find him speaking of this as his primal privilege; it was, "John, the servant of Jesus Christ."

The man after God's own heart had learned the lesson that I wish we all would learn on this subject to-day. Have you marked his pleading with God? He does not plead his earthly dignity, and say, "Great God, I am a king;" nor does he plead his prophetic office, but he comes before God as a poor, needy man, and he pleads thus: "I am thy servant." If you were to take a concordance, and read the number of pleas that David founds upon this, it would interest you: "Be merciful unto thy servant," "Be surety for thy servant," "Hide not thy face from thy servant." Go all through, and you find he pleads the service of the Lord, and that he was engaged as the servant of the Lord more than all other considerations whatsoever. This also was Elijah's boast: "The Lord God Almighty," he says, "before whom I stand." He was a great prophet, and he performed mighty things, but he boasts not of his office, and not of his works; he boasts of his service: "The Lord liveth before whom I stand." This was Gabriel's dignity: "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God." The glory of the angelic host does not consist in this, that they excel in strength, that they stand upon the mount of God, but that they do his commandments, and that they hearken unto the words of his mouth. There is no higher dignity in heaven, no higher privilege than to be the servant of God. When we come to the Revelation we read of a goodly multitude there, clothed in white robes. There are palms in their hands, they stand upon a sheet of glass; they harp with the harps of gold; but what is the privilege on which the spirit of God lays emphasis? Not their robes, not their palms, not their harps, but this—"They serve God, day and night, in his temple."

When the Queen of Sheba heard the wisdom of Solomon, and saw the house that he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their family, and his cup-bearers, and the ascent by which he went up to the House of the Lord, then there was no more spirit in her. She said, "Happy are these thy servants, that stand continually before thee, and listen to thy wisdom." In the light of New Testament and of Gospel truths, we can speak of a higher privilege. The servants of the Lord are privileged to stand in the presence of the great King, to listen to his voice, to learn his wisdom, to receive at his hand, to be smiled upon in his love. By and by, by God's blessing, they shall hear Him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Are there not many of us standing all the day idle? The word "servant" has become a word of courtesy in our day. Have you never put your name to a letter, "Your very obedient servant?" Have you never received a letter "Your most obedient servant"? Translate it—"I am a hypocrite." Let it not be so in the service of God. "The harvest is plenteous." But there can be no harvest if the grain of wheat do not fall into the ground and die. There can be no harvest. If we are not in death with Jesus how can we be in life with Jesus? "The labourers are few." Seek the privilege of being labourers for the Lord, and depend upon the provision in his fulness for your supply. There is work for all. The poorest and feeblest in the family of God has work for him, and all excuses are lying excuses. One says, "I am so nervous." You have no business to be nervous, when God is strengthening you. Live on his strength, and He will take your nervousness out of you. Another says, "I am so ignorant." What, with the word of God in your hand and the Spirit of God to teach you! People try to be servants by a very short cut. We do not find skilled hands in business if they have not served an apprenticeship. Some Christians think they can step into service without taking any trouble; if you are serving you must take good bread, good medicine, good exercise. The food that some of you have fed your souls upon would soon cause you to die of spiritual apoplexy. It is a sad thing to see how people sit from day to day and from week to week, eating and feasting upon truth, and doing nothing with it. All things are yours for the service of Christ.

All God's servants are also his children. Do you know what makes so delightful the service which your children render you? You are delighted because you know it comes from the heart. All God's servants are kings born in a kingdom, and to serve is to reign. This is the view we ought to take of God's service. All God's servants are priests consecrated to his service. All God's servants are temples, where He wishes to dwell, and to worship, and to enjoy communion with his people.

I will tell you another thing, and it is well to think of it. Some of us, perhaps, are longing for rest, and for the time when the war-trumpet will be broken; for the time when we shall have no more struggling with the world, the flesh, and the devil. As the Lord liveth, it is a greater honour to be serving here than resting in his bosom until the time come. Do you remember how He cast the legion out of one man, who was living in the tombs, cutting himself with knives, and who afterwards was found "sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind"? How he longed to be with Christ, and prayed that he might be with Him. "No," said the Lord, "time enough; they won't have Me in this place." (They had besought the Lord to depart out of their coast.) "Go to your house, and tell what the Lord has done to your soul. It will be better for you than rest with Me. By and by the rest will come, and we will be happy together." You remember Mary at the tomb, how she longed to be with her Lord. "Time enough, Mary, we shall have plenty of intercourse in happier scenes and in brighter regions; go you and tell my disciples that I am risen from the dead, and I go before them into Galilee." It is a great honour to be a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Let me close by saying, there are plenty of people who suppose they have the fulness of God embodied in Jesus Christ to draw upon, and yet have nothing more than an empty vessel at the fountain. The fountain is full. It flows from the throne of God. Your vessel may be no bigger than an egg-cup. Let it be at the fountain, and you will overflow in blessing all around. This is your privilege, to draw out of the fulness of Jesus grace for grace, and be a blessed, privileged servant in your homes, in your families, in the Church of God. There are promises: "Where I am there shall my servant be." "The servant is not greater than his lord." "Is it not enough that the servant shall be as his Lord?"

Have you ever remarked that the three crowns spoken of are all for servants? First, there is a crown of righteousness: "I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown which the righteous judge will give me in that day." There is a crown of life: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Then the climax—may we all claim it—you that feed the flock, you that go breaking the bread of life and telling of the Saviour's love and trying to win others to life: "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." It is the business of a good master to supply his servants. You do not expect your servants to serve you out of their means, but out of your means. I have known the servants in a house—I wish there were more of them, but they are a generation that is fast dying out—that were so incorporated into the family, felt so identified with the property of the family, that I have heard them speak of "our horses," "our coaches," "our children." Brethren, your privilege as a servant of God is to claim all He is and all He has to strengthen you for your service. Is not this a great privilege—the privilege of service?

I will mention two or three others. You are not responsible for success. People are thinking a great deal too much about their success. Do you remember Mr. Moody's saying about Noah, how he preached for 120 years without seeing a convert, so far as he knew? We are not responsible for our success; we are responsible to tell the news, to be engaged in the service. Perhaps, when we are dead and gone, the seed will come up that we have been the honoured instruments of being privileged to sow.

I will tell you another solemn and precious truth. If we be servants of God we are baptized into one body. This is a truth which is lost sight of in this day. All the servants of God are members of the mystical body of which Christ is the Head. There are no servants out of that mystical body. "If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it, therefore, not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it, therefore, not of the body?" This is the truth I want to bring out. I believe every member of Christ's family is interested in every gift in Christ's mystical body, and every servant in God's mystical body is interested in the service of every other servant in God's mystical body. How this ought to unite us! It fails to do so because we overlook the privilege of service. If you want to have fellowship with Christ, you that profess to be his servants must go in the way of the needy, must go to those that are weary. You must go after those that are lost. How can you otherwise be in fellowship with Him who is always going after the weary, and always seeking the lost, and always displaying his love and efforts to those that are comfortless? If you want to have practical union with Christ, you must tread the path that Christ treads.

I just ask you, in conclusion: Are these things realities to you? If they are, are you engaged in God's service, or are you only talking about it? Are you consecrated to God's service? Are you standing with your foot upon Calvary, your eye upon the Master's countenance, above your head an open heaven into which a new and living way has been opened for us through the rent veil of his crucified body, under your feet a pathway paved with love, surrounding angels and archangels, and the company of heaven? For God has given them charge over you, and they are all ministering spirits, sent to minister to the servants of the Lord. Is there a new song in your mouth, the Spirit of God, and, like a rill of living water in your heart, bearing you upward and onward to the source from whence it comes; or is it all talk, all just coming and hearing about service, and saying "very precious" and "very delightful," then going away and serving the world, the flesh, and the devil? Let me remind you of Bunyan's beautiful allegory. In the Interpreter's house he says he saw a picture upon the wall of a very grave man, arranged after this fashion—his eyes were upwards unto heaven, the best of books was in his hands, the law of truth was upon his lips, the world was behind his back, a crown of pure gold was upon his head.

Joyful and Reasonable Service.

BY DR. DONALD FRASER.

There is something in our moral nature that responds to the clear, distinct requirements of service to God. It becomes God to command; it befits us to obey. Even those who are good servants of God know that this is true. It is not enough that we have a God who makes, preserves, guides, upholds, consoles; we want a God that commands and we feel that it is our plainest duty to obey. We are made servants unto God by his grace, and our members instruments of righteousness unto God. We have been well reminded of Him who in the Old Testament says, "O Lord, I am thy servant; truly I am thy servant." It is well to begin here before we speak of service.

What is our place? What is our standing? First, we are made children unto God not by dint of service or effort on our part, but by the grace of God, by the adoption of children. We are made children unto God, and so we are children to whom the Father saith, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." "Truly, I am thy servant, the son of thy handmaid"—that is, a human-born slave. "'Thou hast loosed my bonds.' I am so connected and associated with thy household that I cannot lawfully and equitably go out of thy service into any other." So the Apostle, as we were reminded, not only puts servant before apostle, but he does not even call himself "saint." He has left it to us to call him "St." Paul. He was a saint, but he never called himself a saint. Some people are a great deal too ready to call themselves saints. Leave other people to find out that you are saints. He was a servant of Jesus Christ, a slave to Jesus Christ. That is the word. He could not go out of the service of Christ into any other. That was the great apostle of liberty. If anyone had the idea of liberty in the early Church it was the Apostle Paul. He is the great teacher and champion of liberty, but he writes of himself, "I have given up my will to Jesus Christ; I am a servant, a slave of Jesus Christ; and I cannot leave the household of Jesus Christ and exchange it for any other whatever."

If you want to know the character of a house, ask the servants—especially the old servants. If you want to know what sort of a condition the public services are in, sometimes you will hear various accounts of them. But it is different with the service of our Lord. Ask the old servants, and you will get the best account of it. There may be servants who have tried it for a little while and become froward and wilful. Those who have been at it longest have the best things to say about it. Ask such an one as Paul the aged. Observe the cheerfulness of the latest Epistles of Paul. You have a good deal about his trouble and suffering in the mid-time, but when he came to be Paul the aged, when he is writing his pastoral letter to Timothy and Titus, he is extremely cheerful and consolatory. He has been long in the service. Ask the Apostle John, who began in earliest life and lasted longest in earthly service. You will hear how he had not found it an easy service—nobody does who goes thoroughly through with the Lord John had, after the Master left, been arrested and threatened along with his friend at Jerusalem. Afterwards he had been exiled, as we know, to Patmos, for the Word of God. He had lost his own brother James, and his dearest friend Simon Peter, by martyrdom in the service of Jesus Christ. But what does he say of it at the end? Look at his Epistle: "His commandments are not grievous." He came more and more to see, as all aged Christians do see more than they saw in youth, how thoroughly reasonable is this service; how good it is, how right it if—nay, how blessed it is.

John had heard his Master saying, and put his "Amen" to it at the end of his service—"My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." It may be a question, having regard to the context, whether, when our Lord says, "Take my yoke upon you," He just meant the yoke assigns to us, or the yoke that He had borne, and which He called us to share. Take the latter meaning. Just as when He says to the disciples, "My peace I give unto you," He intends not merely a peace that He can confer, but the very peace that possessed his own soul in the midst of his tribulation, and says: "That peace I give unto you. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in Me you will have peace." So in regard to those obligations of duty; He calls those who come to Him to follow Him in the way; and to bear the yoke with the courage and the burden He endured when He was here as the Father's elect Servant. So we are not merely commanded, by the thought that God has a right to give his orders, and we cannot take a higher place than to be his servant, but we have, as has been again and again pointed out, to follow the Master, who Himself has served, and knows all the difficulties of the service.

It gives a master great power over his workmen when they know quite well that he is not a mere amateur in the thing himself; not merely master because he has money enough to employ them, but is a master who has done the work himself, and knows it better than they do; has done it well, has done it thoroughly, and joins them in the work, and says, "Come and work with me; what you do not know how to do, I will show you." It is such a Master whom we serve.

Now Jesus Christ had not an easy task set before Him. It was, in some respects, a terrible command that was laid upon Him: "I lay down my life that I may take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." He went on through it all because He had perfect affinity of mind to the Father whom He served, perfect confidence in the Father, perfect love to the Father, perfect assurance that the Father was always with Him. He had no discordant purpose and no impatient or haughty will with which to resist the Father. So our dear Master, when He was a servant, because He was meek and lowly in heart, found rest to his soul. Into that service we are called to walk, and as we walk to learn obedience, it may be, by the things which we suffer even as the Son of God learned it. It is not easy to let no outward difficulty or opposition in anywise appal us. But if you have affinity of mind and purpose with the Master whom you serve; if you love Him and have confidence in Him, and if you trust in Him that He loves you and will keep you to the end, then go on with a brave and patient heart. You may do it through all the work that is before you, and all the sufferings, too, if you are meek and lowly in heart. The yoke is easy to the loving heart. Obedience is easy to the contented, to the calm, to the patient, to the disciplined spirit, and the Lord knows how to make His grace to abound towards us.

What is the reasonableness of the service? It consists in this, that it is a service of One who knows in all things what is right—what is best. The longer—I repeat it—we are in the service the more cheerful we should become. If there is a thing a man does not like in his servant it is to be surly. I can stand a cheerful servant who does not understand his or her duty very well, so long as he does his best, and is cheerful, and does not grumble; but I do not care for the cleverest servant in London if he is of a surly temper. How many surly, complaining servants there seem to be about the household of God! The Lord loves cheerful givers, and He also loves cheerful servants, who, although they do not do all things as they ought, are yet keeping their eyes upon the Master, and seeking, amidst all their imperfections, to please Him. If we go on cheerfully and humbly, He will make the service appear more reasonable to us day by day. He will give us more and more of the impulse of his own life in our hearts to carry us over our own difficulties, so that we also shall say, "His commandments are not grievous;" but that "in the keeping of his commandments there is great reward."

I remember a text in the first epistle of John which runs thus: "This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ.” We begin that way, but often fail under the commandment, “Love one another.” They are two commandments, not one. He does not say, “These are the commandments—two commandments—to believe and to love.” He says: “This is the commandment.” You must not sever it. We are apt to choose commandments. One says: “I like this one, and will obey it;” or, “I do not like this one so much, and it is not convenient for me, so I will put it off.” It is bad business to choose among the commandments. Said the Psalmist: “I count all thy commandments concerning everything to be right.” It is bad not to know the commandment; but it is almost worse to break the commandment in two. You say you have a great deal of faith, but you are not good at love. Amiable people easily love; but as for believing, they break that commandment. Keep the two together. Believe on the Son, and love one another. Surely that is not grievous, when we think what Jesus Christ is and has done. It is our unbelief that is shameful and grievous; it is the proper, the right, the reasonable, the pleasant thing to believe on Him.

As for this loving one another, after all it needs more performance than preaching. He has given us commandment. He does not say: “If you please, do it,” or, “If it is agreeable, love the people that are like yourself, and go to your place of worship, and agree with you in every jot and tittle;” nay, He says, “I command you to love all the brethren.” You will never get into the real enjoyment of God’s peace, as long as you have prejudices in your mind against the brethren whom you ought to love. “Love the brethren,” i.e., forgive them when they have trespassed against you; care for them; help them in their need; act justly towards them; speak kindly, and be not like those servants who beat their fellow-servants. They would beat them with their tongues nowadays, for these are the weapons they use; and with their pens, saying, “The Master delays his coming, and the thing will pass with impunity.” You may depend upon it, it will not. It is the breach of brotherly love which is the beating of one another in the house; that is the grievous and shameful thing for which the Lord will call his servants to a solemn account.

Now, come to the Lord, and let Him take off your burdens; let Him take away the evil yoke from off your neck. What then! Shall we go scampering about as we like? No; come near and take the yoke upon you. You must come near, so that the Master may put it on. The master comes near the ox when he puts on a yoke, but how many are there like “bullocks unaccustomed to the yoke,” still wilful in the service of Christ? You are not safe to go about without a yoke. A man cannot serve two masters; but he had better have a master, and that master not himself, mammon, nor the world, but the Lord. “Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls.” My friends, happiness is with the obedient, rest with those that are meek and lowly. “O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments!” saith the Lord, “then would thy peace have flowed as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea,”

I beseech you, O evangelical people, take a larger view of your religion—if I may use that term. Do not think of it merely as the way of pardon, and take it up as the path and avenue to some bright haven hereafter. Consider well the path of obedience. Look you to the way of usefulness. What is that in Isaiah xxxv. about the highway and the way of holiness in which the redeemed of the Lord shall walk? “No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.” What have you to do with singing, you that serve the flesh, you that love the world, you that dishonour God? Let his servants lift up their voice; let those that walk in the way of holiness sing unto Him, and “everlasting joy shall be upon their heads.” This is the way of privilege; this is the way of peace and of inward comfort. The very difficulties of the service increase the comfort, if you carry them to the Lord.

“In the service that thy will appoints,
 There are no bonds for me;
For my inmost heart is taught the truth
 That makes thy children free,
And a life of self-renouncing love,
 Is a life of liberty.”

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

COMMUNION ADDRESS.

BY DR. OSWALD DYKES.

THERE is no need to remind one another at this solemn hour, gathered where we are round the table of our Saviour’s dying love, with what feelings of reverence and humility it becomes us to approach the sacred ordinance. For there can be but one feeling in all our hearts—a feeling of trembling; ah! of holy fear, lest we come unready and unfit; lest, coming to this sacred ordinance round these memorials of Jesus’ love, there should be amongst us so much as one in all this great company unworthy to appear; so much as one upon whom the Lord’s eye must be cast with disfavour and with judgment, as his eye was cast on that single traitor at his table; and lest that one should be myself. Let each one of us put to his own heart this solemn, searching question of the first table of Communion: “Lord, is it I?” Those of us who have longest known the Lord Jesus, and who have reached the deepest intimacy with Him, and have done the most in his service, although we may not accuse ourselves of conscious disloyalty or hypocrisy, have yet to abash ourselves in the very dust when we come to his solemn table, because of our felt unworthiness. And the singular, sacred honour which He is conferring upon us at this hour, in gathering us here beneath his banner of love, is itself a very earnest and urgent voice to our hearts, calling us to shame for our sins, and to humility in the presence of so great mercy.

For here we are assembled as the guests of God, as those whom He has admitted to the table of fellowship with Himself as his friends. In these days we have been hearing of the terms, the nature, and the incentives to the service of our dear Lord, and they must have been very unprofitable Conferences, if they have not quickened in all our hearts a sense of our shortcomings, as servants whom He employs in his work on earth; whom He sends forth upon his errands of mercy to men. But we are here to-day in another capacity—in a still holier, nearer, more privileged, and more sacred fellowship with Himself. And the voice which seems to me to reach our ears to-day is this: “I have not called you servants, but I have called you friends.” For we are here as those whom He admits, not to wait at his bidding, and at his feet, but to sit with Him at his table, and to whom He addresses the words: “Eat, O friends! drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved!”

Nay, more wonderful still, He realises that picture which He Himself has given us, in the Gospel, of the condescension of the master, who, when his servant had returned from labour, invites him first to sit down at the table, and goes forth to gird himself to serve his servant. For here we are so large a company who would count it, each of us, I am sure, our supreme honour and blessedness to go and do at his dear bidding, the most menial office or ministry. But here we are his guests. He has spread the family table, and He has bidden us sit down that He Himself may go forth and gird Himself with the towel of ministry; may wash our souls to-day in his precious blood; and may comfort our hearts this day with the strong meat of his own flesh broken from us, and refresh our weary and afflicted spirits, with his love which is stronger than wine. He comes forth to serve us, and in that ministry of his He puts such signal honour upon our undeserving heads—coals of fire upon our heads—as may well crush us to the dust at his dear feet in lowliness and self-abasement, in utter self-reproach and condemnation. For if the words of his censure and reproach be terrible to the conscience, all the more terrible, surely, are the gracious words in which He comes to comfort and to honour his unworthy followers.

Surely we have cause, all of us, to-day, to feel thankful that when He comes it is to serve. He meets us with no reproaches, but our hearts reproach us; we condemn ourselves; we remember how poor our ministry has been, how full of fault, of neglect, of omission, of sin, of inconsistencies. We recollect a thousand things about which we could write bitter, bitter things against ourselves. But not one of them doth the tender Lord write here this day. Are there any of us who have come to-day, trembling, almost afraid to come? Any in these pews who have had to do violence to their own self-distrust, to the upbraiding of their own wounded spirit and accusing conscience; who have feared, as they took their seats, lest they should meet scant welcome? Oh, dear broken-hearted brother, sister, the Lord who cometh forth hath no reproach. He comes to meet you with as gracious a welcome as if you had been what your love desires you had been—faithful in all things. He comes a King to meet his guests. It is a day of banqueting and of feasting; but of upbraiding He hath none. With both hands full, He comes. He comes to-day amongst us, and it seems to me, as He passes round through all our ranks, from pew to pew, and soul to soul, He not only hath the word, “Be of good cheer, thy sins which are many, are all forgiven,” but He hath also this right royal, and loving word, put once by a king to a petitioner at his table: “What is thy petition, and what is thy request? It shall be granted unto thee, even to the half of my kingdom.” For the Lord Jesus uses this blessed table as the ministry of grace and help to inquiring and longing souls; not only the assurance of the forgiveness of our sins by the symbols which He puts afresh into our hands, but the opening up of the whole of his rich love to us, bidding us ask what we will and it shall be granted us.

Therefore, while we wait here at his table, and while we seek to eat and drink in memory of Him, let every soul be opening out the whole of a large and longing desire to Him. Each of his hath his own need. Oh, dear heart! that knowest thy complaint, speak it to thy Lord. Oh, mourner! who hast thy regrets, tell them to thy Lord, that He may solace thee. Oh, faint-hearted worker! that art despondent at thine ill success, tell it to thy Lord, that He may break thy loins for labour. Oh, weak heart! that feelest so faint in the fight with temptation, that art so conscious of shortcomings, tell it to thy Lord, that He may bid thee be of good cheer, for his grace is sufficient for thee. Whatever thou hast to speak of, let it all flow forth at his blessed feet, and let us all ask Him for something to send us away richer Christians, stronger for labour, fitter to endure, with more consecration, more love, than we have ever left his banqueting-house with before.

If I might venture, amid the multiplicity of needs that we have, and which our Lord is ready to supply, I would mention two things which I think would be appropriate for us to ask at the close of a Conference like this. In view of all we have been hearing this very morning, shall we not ask the Lord, now and here, through this gracious communicating of Himself to us, that He would give us more perfect consecration of ourselves to Him?—consecration for service, that from this table we may be able to go, surrendered in heart, and will, and talent, and means, and strength, and time, and life, as we have never been before. Surely these emblems remind us how He, making Himself an ungrudging offering, kept nothing back from us. He gave Himself even to the last drop of life-blood for sinful man—for you and me. By this self-offering of unreserved surrender, of consecration of Himself upon the altar of his cross, to the justice of the Father, for your life and mine, He pleads with us this day that there should be no reserve in our surrender of ourselves; that whatever we have been heretofore keeping back, we should keep back no longer; but, as we lay ourselves at his feet, we should do it with our whole hearts, saying: "Lord, who didst give Thyself for me, I give myself to Thee. Thou didst keep back on thy cross nothing that was thine, I keep back nothing of which Thou hast need. Take me, use me, exhaust me, and spend me in thy service, Lord of mine."

The other thing we may ask to-day from Him is a richer, fuller measure of brotherly love. We are gathered here, a large company, at the table which is not ours, but his. It is the family table of the household of God; it is the meeting-place of the brotherhood of Christ; it is the meal spread for all who are the Father's children. It is the place where we pledge one another in the wine-cup that seals our individual salvation, taking each other by the token to be our brothers, man to man, and woman to woman. Let us see that, as the bread and wine pass round, and as they go from hand to hand, we do, indeed, long to realise our genuine unity, not only with our neighbour next to us and with those gathered in this house to-day, but with the whole living Church of Jesus Christ, the wide world over. It is one of the blessednesses of this Sacrament that it does knit in one by a common bond, not of man's forging, but our Lord's own prescribing, the whole company that call Jesus Lord. It is for us to see that we enter into the meaning of it, and to desire in our hearts to have a genuine, sincere, practical, catholic love for all Christians. Not for those only who hold our creed, or belong to our branch of Christ's Church, those who think as we do, or work as we like to work, but those the most remote and the most diverse from us in opinion and in outward form, if they all love the Lord Jesus Christ. In Him we have a bond uniting them to us stronger than the ties of life, and more enduring—a bond which consists in that redemption won for us by his single death, and in that life which He wishes to put in all our hearts by the common Spirit given unto us. It is for us this day, as we sit at this table, to try to receive into our hearts the fulness of that life of Christ.

We are to eat and drink forgiveness first; but with forgiveness we are to eat and drink life—life for our souls, the life which is strength for duty, joy in tribulation—the strength of the bread and the joy of the wine—Christ our Strength and our Joy in one. As we realise Him, and as we feel that we receive Him, as we open our hearts to embrace Him, as we take Him in all his real and Divine riches, a whole Christ to be ours, our Saviour and our Portion, just in that degree shall this table be to us a table of true communion and refreshing and joy to our spiritual life.

A little while we sit at earthly tables, and then the deep shadows shall flee away. I said we were brethren round a family table. Alas! it is a table that has no Head. Since the Lord went away, the table of Communion in the household of God has been a table of orphans, bereft of their natural chief. The good-man of the house is no longer here; and for that reason we have no lordship at his table or in his house. We have none here to be intercessors or mediators for us. We are all brethren, and we are all equal. We have each the same access to the same Father, through the same sacrifice of Jesus. We are brethren in adversity, without our Leader. All the more, therefore, should we hold together, clasp hand in hand, honour each other for our work, hearten each other in it, and keep far away divisions and alienations and jealousies.

But the table which tells us of the Lord's absence, tells us, also, of his return. In these dear memorials we have a pledge that He is not to be always an absent Head. And yet, thank God, He is not wholly absent even now. We thank Him for the real presence at this table—the presence of the Master by his Spirit in our hearts. But this is no substitute for the personal Lord. Bread and wine, though consecrated by Himself into memorials of his person, are not his person. They tell us that He has not forgotten us in his absence; that, as of old, He breathes forth upon us, and says to us: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." It is a presence, real though spiritual, and real because spiritual. But I say it is no substitute, no adequate compensation for the personal presence, for which the hearts of the saints cry out. Let us keep the memorial till He come, thankful that in that day we shall need memorial feasts no more, for we shall see Him as He is, and we shall be satisfied with his likeness.

FRIDAY EVENING.

CHAIRMAN'S REMARKS.

How short does our time seem to have been for considering these vast and glorious subjects which have been brought before us. It is only a glance that we have been able to take; but we trust a very suggestive glance, and one that shall have its after-results in the life of every one of us. We trust that the coming year, which has been referred to in prayer, may be, indeed, for every ransomed child of God here, a year of better, higher, holier, more devoted service than any that have preceded it. What ought to be the result in the service of the Church, so far as represented here, of all that we have seen and all that we have heard, all that we have learned, or might have learned in these three blessed days? What a responsibility rests upon every one of us who have enjoyed the unspeakable privilege of gathering together in this manner, of sitting at the feet of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and of beholding something of his glory and of hearing his Word.

Prospects of Service.

BY REV. CECIL LILLINGSTON.

A friend said to me a little while ago, in giving me a gentle and loving rebuke as regards some melancholy speech which I made referring to the past, that the lesson taught by our Lord with reference to Lot's wife was a lesson for the child of God as much as for the people of the world; and that was that she did not look forward, but that she looked behind. The lesson which I would derive from that and to which I would call your attention to-night is this—that it is the best, the safest, and the most suitable position and attitude, for every Christian to be looking forward to the prospects of our service. The service of our Lord and Master will be better service, more faithful service, more earnest service, in proportion as we do not imitate Lot's wife in looking back, but as we take the position of those who are looking forward to the Lord's coming and to the glory which shall be revealed in Him—the prospects at the end of our service.

I do not think there is very much in our service to please us when we look back. There is much of shame, much of failure, much to cause us sorrow. We have served Christ so little, and we have served Christ so badly. We have served Him often with such mixed motives that, when we look back, we shall have only shame and sorrow. Even our present service, though it is a joyous service, a glorious and privileged service; yet still there is a weariness of the body connected with that service, and there is the terrible thought pressing us down, constantly, "Lord, who is sufficient for these things?" But when we look forward—then the whole prospect is undimmed; there is not one streak of cloud that comes over the bright azure of the glorious sky which is above us. The sunshine of sweet and glorious promise and expectation comes out in all its fulness to warm our hearts, to stir up all our spiritual energies and activities. For we shall be with Christ, and "see Him as He is." Do let us remember this—that our safety, our activity, our power of resisting all manner of temptation, will very often depend upon our habit of looking to the prospects of our service.

I remember when I was a boy there happened to be two things going on outside my father's house. There was a very deep well being sunk, and at the same time some repairs were being made to the roof of the house, which was a fairly tall house. There was a great ladder, in order that the workmen could go up to the roof. This ladder happened to be very near where the well was being sunk. One day at the dinner-hour, although strict commands had been given to us boys not to venture near that ladder, my brother and myself went near it, and my brother dared me to go up some of the steps. Disobedient to orders, but not liking to be challenged to do a thing and not do it, I went up. I got about half way up the ladder, and then I began to feel that trembling, miserable feeling of giddiness which is a very dangerous feeling when you are on a height. I looked down and saw the pit of that well, which was very deep, and in horror I thought, What if I should fall? I got worse as, a moment afterwards, I saw my father coming round the corner, remembered my act of disobedience, and thought that it would incur punishment. Just at that moment I was in great peril, and I suppose I must have looked very terrified. My father saw it, and, with a cheering voice, he gave me one command, "Look up, my boy; you are safe, if you look up." I obeyed, as, under the circumstances, I could do nothing else, and, step by step, I climbed to the top, until I was safely on the ledge of the roof, and was able to find my way through a trap-door safely down the inside of the house.

Now, I believe the best advice which I can give to many Christians here to-night is—Look up, and keep looking up, as you go step by step. You often want to go up: "Nearer my God to Thee." And what is your way, sometimes? There are a great many Christians trying to look up, but looking down all the time into the pit of hell, from which they are not quite sure that they have been delivered. There are others who seem to think that they have got an angry Father, when He is a Father of tenderness. Dismiss all those thoughts. Take this thought, children of God: my glorious position is to look up to the prospect when I shall be with the Lord for evermore, and when I shall be like Him. "He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as He is pure."

Our position as Christians, as regards this life, is not intended to satisfy us. God does not intend us to be satisfied here in his service, glorious as it is. Paul gives us this in that wonderful chapter, 1 Cor. xv. verse 19: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Therefore, he takes his stand on that wonderful resurrection chapter, which is connected in the case of most of us here with the most sad and solemn, and yet, in some respects, glorious moments of our lives. He tells us that our rightful and true position is this—to look forward to the prospect which is at the end of our service.

I think I have found a tendency in the present day amongst some to look on Christianity as a philosophical and ethical system, very well suited for the present day, and satisfactory in itself, if we follow its morals and try to understand its ethics. But, as to the future, that is so vague that we had better not occupy ourselves much with that. Away with that thought, children of God! Our home is not here; our Master is not here. The ringing cry which is in the heart of every true Christian is, "Forward, upward, onward! I must set my affections upon things which are above, not on things on the earth; for I am dead, and my life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is my life, shall appear, then shall I also appear with Him in glory." That is our philosophy, those are our ethics—the prospect of being for ever in heaven with the Lord.

But look, according to the programme, at what these prospects are. The first one is certainly this: We shall be with the Lord. That seems to have been the one thought which was sustaining the Master Himself towards the close of his ministry. It seems to come out constantly, during the last few hours of his life, before He went forth to suffer for us. In John xii. 26, we read, "If any man serve Me let him follow Me, and where I am there shall also my servant be." "If any man serve Me, him will my Father honour." It comes out again, as the one cheering legacy which He gave to his disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled." He goes on, "If I go away, I shall come again and receive you unto Myself." Why? "That where I am there ye may be also." That was the prospect before Him; and the prospect which He gives to us. Then you know that wondrous prayer, the prayer of the Bible, our Lord's prayer, with all its emphasis, in John xvii., "Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am."

Just look at one passage more as regards this. What was the hope given to the Church—just in the last visible manifestation which has ever taken place? In Acts i. 11, the angels told the disciples not to look so much at the present, but to look forward to the future. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." So the Church's constant prospect from that moment to this has been the seeing of Jesus and being with Jesus. Is not that our hope—to be with the Perfect One; to be "for ever with the Lord?" Have we not sometimes here had moments of ecstatic joy? Perhaps some hour of sorrow has immediately preceded it; but, when we have bowed our heads, and in earnest private prayer have wrestled with God, He has, as it were, withdrawn the veil for a moment, and we have felt the immediate presence of Christ. Imagine that lasting for ever! Alas! it is only now spasmodic. Alas! we often find ourselves without the possibility of realising the presence of Christ. But our prospect is this unbroken, constant enjoyment of his presence. His children shall see Him, and be with Him, and shall go no more out.

Take the next point—conformity to the character of Christ. What a joyous thought it is! It is this thought that is given to us by John in the third chapter of his First Epistle, "We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." I will not dwell upon this. It is the constant cry and longing of our hearts now—to be more like Jesus. We want to see Jesus; we want to be with Jesus; but we want, above all things, to be conformed to his image. Paul gives us that in that same wonderful chapter, 1 Cor. xv. verse 49: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

Just take that one thought—How shall we be conformed to his image, in perfect holiness, seeking the will of God in everything? No need then, for the daily repentance and daily washing which now we need. We shall be quite holy then. Then there will be unity of character. I believe that is the one great thing which thee children of God feel more and more the want of, and the prospect of their service is that unity of character shall be fashioned after that of Jesus. Now, you know, we are mulattos, and there is a great deal more of the black than the white, I am afraid. "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." We realise it again and again as we come nearer to Christ. How little there is of Christ in our character. Then, too, there will be exceeding gentleness. Is there anything which mars (and I say it with great solemnity) the work of the Church of Christ so much as the want of gentleness in believers? If we could but get the gentleness of Jesus! If one outcome of this grand Mildmay Conference of 1885 were this: that every child of God, henceforth looking forward to be like Christ, should begin here upon earth to get more of the gentleness of Jesus! Then there would be love.

The other thing we shall have as our prospect is more service. I do not know whether you all feel as I do. If I want any work done, I do not go to the coldest member of my church: I go to the warmest, and to the one who is already doing the most. He will add on to what he has already. Just so, the Lord will give us more work. Perhaps some of you have felt that there were times when you could not do much; then you got warmed up at some Mildmay Conference, and now you are in the thick of it. I believe that is true very often. The greatest punishment you can inflict in the Queen's service is to give no more employment. If a captain loses his ship through carelessness, he won't get another in a hurry again. If a commander loses his detachment through carelessness, he won't see active service again in a hurry. If a diplomatist makes a great mess of it, I do not think he will be employed again. I do believe that real service means that we shall have much more service than we have now.

We talk of "the rest of heaven;" but what is that rest going to be? I remember the time when I had the notion that it meant sitting on a form all day long and singing hymns. Now, I have learned this from the Word of God that the prospect for service is more service, and more willingness to undertake it. There are three kinds of position in service which we shall occupy. We shall be judges. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. vi. 3, "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" Then we shall be kings and priests. We shall go into quarters of some kind or another, and all belong to royalty, and that will be more service, and that for every Christian.

So we find the joy in this service. How often our work is hindered now, because we go about it in a cold, dead manner. There are some Christians whose only manifestation of the Christian life, when you talk to them about it, is a sigh. That is about all you can get out of them. Ask them: "Have you had your sins forgiven?" and there is a deep sigh, as if it were a very sad thing. When you get to heaven, you will never meet a sighing Christian. You will go round the streets and round the squares and you will never meet one. The prospect is joy around us—joy on the right hand and on the left—serving the Lord with gladness of heart.

He will have his people for service. One thing we can see is this—only a spiritual people can have it. You see a man: he has a rich uncle, who is expected to die and leave him £10,000 a year. He is not dull and spiritless. He looks forward to the prospect. You hear it said that he is a great man, because he has great prospects. Have we not prospects? Are we not heirs—"heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ?" Remember that in that most spiritual chapter of all the Bible we read, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present life are not to be compared with the joy that shall be revealed in us." It is all about Jesus. It is all centred in Jesus. He is to be, and is now, the centre of all our prospects. Take out Jesus from the Christian's prospects, tell the Christian of all the philosophical and rational glories that you can think of. He would say, let them be annihilated, but only give him Jesus—Jesus in the desert, Jesus in the wilderness, Jesus in the closet, Jesus with hard toil and poor fare. So our prospects are all centred in Jesus. We are training for this prospect. Everything that happens to us in life is training us for that glorious time. We have our sores—they go deep sometimes. We have our joys, we have our disappointments, our shame, and our disgrace. It is all part of the schooling—all part of the training for home.

Then take another thought—that the very prospect itself, the very fact that we have this prospect, has in it an educational work for our present life. I want to end as I began, by showing you the practical side of this question. Do not let us say it is so glorious to think of heaven, and to be "with the saints over there," as we sing, and not let it have any practical effect on our lives. The prospect ought to have a constant effect upon all our lives. The service is to be strengthened, ennobled, and made more real by the prospect. What will it do for our service? It will make us more diligent in our service, for we have to work very hard here. This is the time of glorious service, but the realisation of the prospect is coming. You see Christians with folded hands; they do not feel called upon to do much. Their prospect is uncommonly shaky and cloudy: you have to go and probe them and probe them again before you find out whether they have any prospect at all. Children of God, if you want to keep your prospect bright you must be diligent, and, if you have it, then you will be diligent in service.

Another thing: it will make it a more hearty service. How wretched is our service, because of the mixed motives. If we could only act always upon one motive, how grand our lives would be. I wish we could get hold of a miser, and study him for a year. I do not know any people who are so grand in one sense, and yet so awfully miserable, as misers. The out-and-out miser is a man of one motive—to get money and stick to it. Children of God, that must be exactly our position as we realise our prospect. Our one motive must be—all for Jesus. It will do something more, it will make us very patient. How impatient we are at the suffering and sorrow; how impatient with those unconverted; how impatient with Christians who are very "stupid;" how impatient with the light that God gives us, and the pardon He puts upon us. Look at the prospect; is it not a glorious one? That gives us patience!

The sun has passed his meridian for many of us here. We have got to two o'clock in the afternoon; some of us to four; some to six; some to nine, and some to the stroke of twelve. Looking at this vast audience, the prospect is certain that many here will not meet at Mildmay again. We will not mind that, if we have the bright prospect. Perhaps the Lord will come before that Second Advent Conference in the Spring. Perhaps He may call us away. Should not that make us patient?

Then will it not make us very ambitious? What is the prospect? Why, the prospect is, that He will give us, according to our service, more work to do. The man who made use of his talents had ten cities given him to rule over—plenty of hard work, then. "Well done, good and faithful servant." Let that prospect be with us when we wake in the morning; let it go with us throughout the day. Then, when the end shall come, and the darkness shall pass away, when the dawn shall burst into the fulness of light, and we see the King in all his beauty and sweetness, knowing our deep unworthiness, we will cast all behind, if only we can touch the hem of his garment, He will turn round and raise us up, and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant." Will not that moment make up for all our tears, and sorrows, and struggles here?—the prospect of being known by Jesus, and of being with Him for evermore?

Characteristics of Coming Service.

BY REV. W. FULLER GOOCH.

The child of God bears a distinct relation to the past, the present, and the future. In Philippians iii. we find this very distinctly brought before us. The Apostle says there, verse 12, "That I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." There is a definite experience of the past; a distinct starting-point from which every child of God dates his first knowledge, his first anticipation of the prospect of service. "I reach forth;" "I press toward the mark." There you have the Christian's present—a consciousness of present defect and of present need; a conscious longing for something better, something more than has yet been attained. And then, "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." There is the future, the coming crown, the sure reward, the nearing glory, the consummation of the prospect of which we are thinking to-night. A familiar poet has said:—

> "Trust no future, howe'er pleasant,
> Let the dead past bury its dead;
> Act, act in the living present,
> Heart within, and God o'erhead."

Like most poetry, this is only partial truth. A future of our own making we may not trust; futures which are but speculative we dare not rest upon. The future set before us in the prospects of service to-night is a future kept by God's own hand, resting upon God's own Word, radiant in God's own light, and sure as God's own existence. We may safely trust it. It is pleasant indeed to contemplate it; we may rest upon it; for as surely as we know the Saviour here and now, we shall know and see Him as He is in the glory-land.

We are sometimes told that it is very selfish and very mercenary for us to be at all animated in the present service of Christ by what is to come in the future. No, it is not mercenary; it is not selfish. It is what the Master has placed within our reach; it is that the attainment of which will bring not glory to us, but to Him. Did not the saints of old look forward to the prospects of service? What led Abraham to leave his fatherland? That Canaan that was set before him. What made the patriarchs glad, self-sacrificing, earnest, and devoted? They looked for a city which has foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. What made Moses glad to give up the treasures of Egypt and to suffer reproach with the people of God? He had an eye to the recompence of the reward. What made many endure torture beyond our power to conceive? They hoped for a better resurrection. Nay, we follow in the steps of our dear Lord Himself. He suffered—He endured the Cross for the joy that was set before Him. So, in our measure, as the servants of Jesus, we are to be animated not only by what we now enjoy, but by what is set before us—the prize of the high calling of God in Christ.

I should like to speak very practically, if briefly, upon this subject. There are five prospects given us in the programme, and there are five characteristics of those prospects which I would ask you to glance at. First of all, let us think of them as very bright and glorious, far more so than any tongue can declare. What must it be to dwell above, at God's right hand, where Jesus reigns? What must it be to have sin taken out of us, and to be made perfectly like our Lord? We cannot say. But this we can say: it is the brightest future that can be set forth; it is the most glorious prospect that heart can anticipate. Very much of the service of Christ now, on the part of his people, is not very bright or glorious. One thinks of the brethren and sisters away out yonder in Africa, and in other parts of the mission-field, where they can have no brotherly sympathy, or hearty greeting and co-operation, like that we are joining in here at Mildmay; where they seldom grasp a hand that bids them a brother's greeting. There they suffer; they toil; they are in peril; they are often, some of them, in want. Like Paul, many of God's people, at home and abroad, are "troubled and perplexed on every side;" they are in difficulty; they suffer scorn and reproach. But they look away from all that. They say, "We may well spend a night for Christ, because of the golden day that will soon dawn; we may well lose now, for the gain which is laid up for us there." Every Conference, as we gather together, we can all of us, I dare say, think of some who were with us the year before, but who are gone now. How blessed is their position compared with much of the service down here! We wish not to die. If the Lord will, we pray to be allowed to tarry till He come. But methinks there is that for those who have gone before, which, indeed, answers to the words of the hymn:—

> "One hour with my God makes up for it all."

When circumstances are distressing and depressing, and we are called to suffer disappointment and loss, let us think of the prospect before us—bright and glorious beyond comparison. How Paul loved to dwell on the word "glory," in the sense of its future prospects for the believer. You remember how he writes to the Church at Rome. He speaks of believers as "vessels of mercy, which God had afore prepared unto glory." He says, "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Writing to the Corinthians, he stands, as it were, in silent thought by the grave; he thinks of all the darkness and gloom that naturally belong to the grave, and he says, "It is sown in dishonour, but it is raised in glory." He writes to them a second time, and he tells them that "this, our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." He writes to the Colossians, and says that the sum of Christian experience is this: "Christ in you the hope of glory." He adds, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory." He tells the Thessalonians that they are "called to the kingdom and glory of Jesus Christ." He writes to the Hebrews: "God is bringing many sons unto glory." Then he speaks of "the glorious liberty of the children of God"—the glorious Church we shall be when Jesus presents us to Himself yonder. He tells us of the glorious bodies we shall have when these vile bodies of our humiliation are made like unto Christ's own glorious body. Oh, it is glory upon glory when we think of the prospects of Christian service.

Well, then, let us remember a second thing about them; these prospects are definite and real. We are sometimes told that they are very intangible and visionary; but they are not; and this is why we know they are not. The Christian has an experience; the child of God has an inner life; that inner life has its discernments, its prospective powers, its spiritual senses. I see with this eye of my body, and what I look upon with my eyes I know is there, because I see it. I take something with this hand; I know it is there; I feel it. I hearken with the ear. I know there is a voice, for I hear it. If we are God's believing children, in our inner life we have an eye—it is the eye of faith. We have an ear; we have a hand; we have a foot. We see Jesus crowned with glory and honour. We could as easily refuse to believe our own existence on this earth as refuse to believe that Jesus is now at the right hand of God. We have seen Him there; we have heard Him with the ear—the ear of the soul. He has whispered in our heart again and again, and He has said, "Thou art mine." These are truths. The infidel knows them not; the worldling despises them. We cannot argue upon this with an infidel, or at least we do not care to do it. We say, "Come, taste and see that the Lord is good." These things are definite; they are real because they are experimental.

Yes, and these prospects are only the fulfilment of what our experience is now. We have now the earnest; we have now the firstfruits of the Spirit. We sometimes quote a passage which is in the Epistle to the Corinthians—"We know in part." Christian people often lay the chief emphasis upon the last two words of that quotation. They say, "We know in part," and then some begin sighing, because they do not know more. But why not lay the emphasis upon the first two words—"We know in part." You tell me that I shall be with Jesus for ever Thank God we know something about being with Him now. You tell me that we shall be perfectly like Jesus; how little we are like Him yet. How humble we have been here to-day, as we have thought of not being like Him. Still, can we not say with good John Newton: "I am not what I ought to be; I am not what I might be; I am not what I wish to be; but, by the grace of God, I am what I am." There was a time when we had no conformity to Christ. Praise God, our hearts do know something of trying earnestly to walk in his steps. And, then, rejoicing in the Lord—many of you know the joy of the Lord to-night. But all these things are only the beginning. Our God is not a foolish builder. Having begun to build, He will perfect that which his own hand hath commenced.

We notice, again, that these prospects are practical and influential—not dreamy ideas; not turning us into cool, calculating visionaries. Nay, they are linked with present fidelity. Nay, more—the degree in which we shall enjoy these prospects depends upon the degree of our fidelity now. We may becloud those prospects: "Hold fast that which thou hast; let no man take thy crown." Well may we, as we think of appearing before the Lord, and as we think of what his promise holds out to us, "gird up the loins of our mind, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought to us at the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ." No man will do much for Christ; no man will deny himself much in the service of Christ until his eyes are opened to see what is before him, and what the Lord holds out to him as a faithful servant. These things lift up our hearts. Our treasures are there, and, as we perceive our treasures yonder, they help to make us live as those who are strangers and pilgrims here.

Then, briefly notice that they are gracious and merciful prospects. Let us not have the legal spirit about us; let us not get the spirit of merit into our own hearts. God forbid! What first linked us with those prospects? What first gave us any reason to hope for them? Grace, grace. These eyes would have been closed to the Saviour, closed to heaven, closed to glory if the Spirit of God had not graciously opened them. What keeps us in the way; what preserves us as we look forward to those prospects? Grace. I thought of Hezekiah this evening; was there ever a nobler worker than he—a man whose heart was more consecrated than his? See how he reformed Jerusalem; how he was the instrument of reviving God's work; how he prayed, and God heard him. The Lord left him for a moment, to try what was in his heart, and where was the noble worker then, where was the prevailing suppliant then? His heart was lifted up within him. Where would the best here to-night be if his Lord left him for a moment—the purest heart here? How defiled it would be in an hour, in a minute, if the grace of God were withheld. We shall never reach the kingdom if grace does not bring us there. And so, what is it that inspires us, and enables us to serve the Master? It is grace.

> "Grace all the work shall crown,
> Through everlasting days;
> It lays in heaven the topmost stone,
> And well deserves the praise."

And should the Master give any of us a crown to-night, our first thought would be to throw it at his feet, and say:

> "Master, all the crowns are Thine;
> Thy grace hath brought us here."

Lastly, these prospects are nearing fast. Oh, yes, we are not prophets, though we study prophecy, and thank God that ever we were led to do so. Though we are longing for the coming of the Lord, we are not fixing the time for Him to come; but this we know, it cannot be long. We think of the analogies of past dispensations. Already this dispensation has lingered beyond any that have gone before. We think, too, of the signs of the times—not only the dark and perilous ones, but the cheerful ones. We see the nations opening, and the glad tidings being preached; we hear the multitudes crying from the north, south, east, and west, "Come over and help us." We say it is God's grand revival before He sends His Son. We say it is the Gospel for a witness in all the earth, and then the end shall come. And the instincts of our spiritual nature tell us that these prospects are nearing. You have heard people say sometimes that they think they are going to die. "Why," you ask, "do you think you are going to die? Well, I have a presentiment; it has come over me somehow that I shall not live long." We do not want all these presentiments; we can leave that with God, and not trouble ourselves about them. Still there is something within us that lays hold of us; and as I see God's children everywhere waking up to the grand truth of the Second Advent; as I see everywhere a longing for Jesus that seems to be beyond what we have known in the days gone by, it tells me that God is waking up the spiritual instincts of His people's hearts, and it seems as though the blessing of the Lord seals every soul and says:—

> "Hold on, 'twill not be long;
> My coming draweth nigh."

Blessed Master, we long to love Thee more, to serve Thee better. Oh, that this Mildmay Conference may be a means of quickening these poor, dull, laggard lives of ours; but come, come in thy glory, and let us be able to hold fast until we see Thee; and then, whatever glory Thou in thy love shalt give to us, we will say, "All the glory be thine."

The Lord's Heathen.

CLOSING APPEAL

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Some months ago, when young Stanley Smith was travelling with me in the railway train in Scotland, he heard that the Lord had laid it upon my heart to go back to that country. I suggested that he and his comrade, Mr. Studd, might make it a party of three. I had to write to him as to the subject we would take to speak upon as we entered each town. The subject suggested was this, "The Evangelisation of the World." He replied, "It is a big order, but not too large for our Master." And that, friends, is the subject that I have to speak upon in the closing moments of this Conference. It seems a big subject, but it is precisely on the lines laid down by the Lord Jesus. Nothing less would have been on the lines of the Lord Jesus Christ. His command was so plain that our youngest child in the school can read it and understand it. It was not: Go to India, or to China, and certainly not to any part of our native country; it was, "Go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

A few weeks ago there was a meeting in this place on Missions. There was a missionary here who had been for years working amongst the heathen, and successfully working. He wrote, after that meeting, that never until that night had he been able so to recognise the torpor of Christians at home with regard to the heathen. I am astonished, sometimes, with myself, when I have thought of the years that I have lived, many of them preaching the Gospel in different parts of my native country, at the thick scales over my own eyes, that must have been ugly in the sight of the Lord Jesus, who gave the command to go into all the world and preach his Gospel to every creature. Africa, China, India, and the islands of the sea, might have been in another world. And I believe it is so with a great number of Christians up to this very hour. Else let any minister of the Gospel on this platform, or in the hall, explain to me how it is that England, and Scotland, and America are doing next to nothing for the heathen?

Well, you say, but we are doing a great deal more than our forefathers did; we have done a great deal more these last few years than was done fifteen years ago, and a great deal more these last two years or so than was done before. Be it so; but let us put it all together and contrast it with such meetings as this, where we can enjoy ourselves and be refreshed in such comfort day after day, and be fed on the choicest of the wheat, and honey, as it were, out of the honeycomb. Contrast this, I say, with the beggarly crumbs that all the riches of Protestant America, and England, and Scotland, have given to the heathen. I do not include the Protestant nations of the Continent, for they think that they do not do nearly as much as we do. Contrast, I say, what we have ourselves, with what we send to the heathen, and surely we cannot be obeying the command of the Lord Jesus.

We have had a great deal of talk these last fifteen years as to how to reach the masses at home; yet, up to this evening, we have in a great measure failed to reach them. Perhaps, you say again that a great deal has been done, and there has been much success in London and our large towns, especially in Glasgow. Many have been converted. A great many missions have been started outside the churches. That is also true; but I suppose that, up to this evening, in the city in which we are met, we shall not be far wrong in saying, if we take Lord Shaftesbury's statistics, that out of the masses of working men—I do not speak of the women and children—there are not much more than two per cent. who go to any place of worship. We build churches, and many of them are built to be half, or more than half, empty. We have to pile up the misery. Our people are coming in from the country, able-bodied agriculturists who would be fit to go straight to Canada, and to the agricultural districts of America or Australia. But they are coming and settling down, by the law of gravitation, in London, Manchester, and Glasgow; piling up the drunkenness and misery, and the crowds of starvation children. It seems as if God, when we do not obey his word, is allowing us once again to build a tower of Babel with human beings. So that we have now five millions or so in London, and, if this goes on, the next few years will show us some ten millions of these human beings piled up in this vast city. All the time the Protestant Churches of our land and our city, almost every one of them, are barely able to hold their own. I do not think, indeed, we are holding our own.

See how the ten thousand disciples lingered in Jerusalem at the feet of the Apostles, until the Lord permitted that murder of Stephen. I may not be agreed with by you all, but I dare say I will by most here, if I say that I believe they had lingered at Jerusalem too long. They were scattered by persecution and death, so that they left the Apostles there, every one of them, men and women, and went preaching the Gospel everywhere. For the first two or three centuries, the preaching of the Gospel went on, not by ministers merely, or elders or Apostles. It went on by the men and the women, and by every individual Christian; that was the normal state of the early Church. We have lost our hold of that, and, as Rev. Henry Brooke said yesterday on this platform, it is only recently that we have come back to see that the whole Church must be the obedient servants of their Lord. That is a blessing which God has vouchsafed to us for the last few years, but we are not half alive to it yet. We have our Communion tables surrounded by a great number of professors who never go out into the great harvest-field. They receive the Communion and the instruction, but they do not obey their Lord's command.

You all know that it is only within a very few years, though our male missionaries have been in India amongst the 250 millions for generations, that the scales have fallen from their eyes, and they found out that they could not get into the zenanas. The discovery came to them, I believe, by the Holy Ghost, that it would still be possible to save a zenana woman's soul, though she could not be reached by male Europeans. If Christian women from England and America could be sent out, the thing was possible. That, I say, was only the other day. Is it not possible that the scales are on our eyes yet, and that we have not got hold of Christ's idea; that we have not yet grasped the thought of Christ's longing when He saw the multitudes as sheep without a shepherd; how He had compassion on them, and said, "Pray ye to the Lord of his harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." But what have we done? We have quenched the Spirit. We could have got many more labourers; we could have got the Christian women. The Holy Ghost said, "Yea," but our word was "Nay." So we have allowed generations of these zenana women to die in darkness, because we would not consent to send Christian women to tell them of the Gospel. Is it not possible that at this very meeting to-night we might have great searchings of heart, even on this platform? We are none of us too old, if we have not got any infirmity, to go to India, or China, or Africa. It was a blessed thing when young Stanley Smith and Studd and the others went to China, and it made a great sensation. It will make a bigger sensation if some of the old ministers of our large towns consent to go. Somehow the command of the Lord will have to be obeyed. If you think of it, and consider what I am saying, you will agree that it is not being obeyed.

Here is a young Brahmin who has been attending patiently, all the days of the Conference. He is here as a representative of 250 millions of our fellow-subjects. He is the man from Macedonia. He has come out of Asia into Europe—he is on the platform now—and he cries to you: "Come over, out of Europe into Asia, and help us." May the Holy Ghost send that cry into the heart of every brother on the platform, and every brother and sister in this place. And mark you this: a man may be filled with the Holy Ghost, may be resting quietly and calmly in Christ; a man may have what our Salvation Army friends call "a clean heart," and he may yet be blind to the voice of the Lord Jesus. I believe the Apostle Peter, even after he was restored by the Saviour, and heard the question, "Lovest thou Me?" after he had been filled at Pentecost with the Holy Ghost, after he had been in prayer on the roof of the house and saw the vision of the sheet let down from heaven—I believe, after all that, he was blind. He could not see that the Gentile heathen had to be preached to. I have been, I think, many years of my life, as blind as a bat, I might almost say—taken up with the things that I could see by travelling 200 or 300 miles to London, or to Scotland, or perhaps to Ireland or America, where one could speak in the Anglo-Saxon tongue. Here was Peter blind to the needs of the heathen, and it is a great warning to men who think that because they may be filled with the Holy Ghost, therefore, they need no instruction.

I watched those two young fellows, Stanley Smith and Studd, as I travelled with them, sometimes sleeping with them. I saw them by day and by night, and watched them closely, and they appeared to me, as much as any men could be, to be bringing forth the fruits of the Holy Ghost. I saw them in many circumstances, and could not see anything wrong in what they did, either in public or in private. But I must confess I never saw a man more teachable, and who could pick up things quicker, than that Stanley Smith. Well now, would to God that the mighty power of the Holy Ghost would come upon all our ministers and communicants in London, who are earnest evangelical men, living a godly life—that it might come upon us all and make us teachable.

Is this command of our Lord to be obeyed? England is not obeying it. America is not obeying it. America may be doing more for foreign missions than we are in England and Scotland. Many of its missionaries are among the first and foremost on the earth. There are blessed American missionaries in the East of Europe and in India, as we all know. But is it true that we are having this command obeyed? An old missionary gave me a letter to read. I should like every one here to read it. It is in a publication I had not seen for some time (The War Cry, for June 20). It is two columns long, and is signed by Mr. Booth. So far as I can see, there is nothing in it that any one of any other way of thinking could take offence at. The whole of the two columns are devoted to arousing Christians to a sense of the fact that the vast masses of the people are being left in darkness, so far as the preaching of the Gospel is concerned. My missionary friend, though he is not a Salvation Army man, thinks this letter should be in the hands of every Christian. It seems to me to be the most stirring thing I have seen for a long time for evangelists and other workers to read. It will convince you that we are living in disregard—I will not say wilful disregard—of the claims of Christ's masses at home as well as abroad. Perhaps the same scales that were on my eyes are on our eyes now, and we are confining the message of the Gospel to a little strip of earth. Things cannot be right. What does Haggai say? "Ye have sown much and bring in little. . . Ye looked for much, but it came to little, and when ye brought it home I did blow upon it;" or, as the margin has it, "I did blow it away." We have our churches and cathedrals in London. Yet see the abominations that are done amongst the higher classes of society, and the drunkenness and filthiness of the people, and the love of money in the Church. Demetrius was a fellow-worker of Paul, but he forsook him. Yet he had not been a drunkard or a thief. What had taken him away? Just the love of the world. Away out in China they are throwing their idols to the bats; but here in London and in my native town [Liverpool] we are rearing up idols and bowing down to money-getting. We are engrossed with money-getting. There are converted men and women now hearing me who, if they take the advice of the Lord Jesus Christ, will, perhaps by half-past ten o'clock to-morrow morning, have their accounts lessened at their bankers. There is many a Christian man of business who is in spiritual slumber, because he has too much money. When he was a young man—a clerk or a journeyman, he was an earnest Christian; but he has prospered, and worldly prosperity is poisoning his very soul. We are setting up Nebuchadnezzar's image over again in London. It was made of gold; we are making images of gold now, and bowing down and worshipping them.

The Lord says to the prophet, "Who will go for us?" He replied, "Here am I, send me." What did that mean? It meant that he was ready to do anything, to go anywhere. Which of us is ready to surrender heart and soul, property, reputation, everything to the Lord Jesus, during the closing minutes of this Conference? We have had talk about it these three days; now let us come to the point, before we go home; do not be in a hurry to go home till we have settled this matter with the Lord—heart, reputation, property, everything surrendered to the Lord.

Some parents are keeping their children back from going to India and China; let that be settled. It is no use singing about these things. It is sometimes a terrible thing to sing about the Lord's coming: "Lord, come quickly." What would He find, if He did come? He would find us neglecting his heathen. We pray Him to come quickly, while all the time we are living in disobedience, breaking his command to go and preach the Gospel to every creature. It is good to sing "Come;" but it is also good to be swift in obeying the word of the Lord.

Forgive those words. I saw there was but little time to speak, and my words may have been hurried. I may have appeared to speak hastily; but, my brethren and sisters, do not think I have spoken unkindly or unlovingly. God has laid this as a burden on my heart, and I am obliged to speak of it wherever I go. They asked me the other day to go to Dublin and speak. I told them that, if I went, I could only plead for the evangelisation of the world. The Lord seems to stop my mouth, at present, when I speak about anything else but this one thing. I want you all to share this burden on my heart, to take the Lord's heathen to your heart. Let the Holy Ghost come and break our hearts—the hearts of the pastors and the people, the hearts of the men and the women. And, oh! do not let any man think that he is obliged to go through a certain curriculum in Scotland or in England before he goes forth. God can provide men from the colleges, but He also wants young men and old men who have been through no curriculum at all. He can send them right off to China, and to India, and to Africa, and to the New Hebrides to-morrow morning, and let them learn the language there. That is what He does with the women. We do not ask those who go forth to the zenanas—none of the missionary societies expect them—to pass through this curriculum. Yet they go forth, and carry the glad message of Christ's Gospel to these zenana women. Even in China, the women are more valuable than the men. "Who will go for us?" Who will surrender all to the will of God? Who will obey the command of Christ?

Mr. Radcliffe closed with a most earnest and importunate prayer to God, that He would forgive the backslidings, and the shortcomings, and the blindness of his people, and would lead them to a speedy personal acceptance of the great commission to evangelise the whole world. He also offered prayer for Mildmay and all its institutions, and for Mrs. Pennefather. This solemn and closing gathering of the three days' Conference of 1885 was concluded by the benediction, pronounced by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, the chairman.

MR. AITKEN IN BIRMINGHAM.

I CANNOT forbear writing to tell you what a happy mission we are just concluding in this parish. We commenced on June 13, and, night after night, with one exception, when it was very rainy, our church has been crowded from end to end.

Mr. Aitken's sermons have been with great power—clear, sound, pointed, experimental—we have felt the presence and power of the Holy Ghost in our midst. The after-meetings have been very blessed times; last night some 200 anxious souls remained, and a large majority of them professed to find peace through the blood of Christ. Mr. Aitken's morning addresses on the Spiritual Life have been very full of unction, and the Lord's own people have been richly blessed.

Mrs. Crouch's afternoon addresses to women in the mission-room have been signally useful. Mr. Stephens' work amongst children and young people God has greatly blessed—a large number of our Sunday and day-school children have given their hearts to Jesus. We look back upon this mission with feelings of devout gratitude to God. Will your readers remember us in prayer, that the seed sown during the last fortnight may bear an abundant harvest?

GENEVA.—The reports read at the annual assembly of the Swiss branch of the Evangelical Alliance show that it is gaining ground, and the spirit of Christian union is manifesting itself more in the domain of practical life and works of evangelisation.

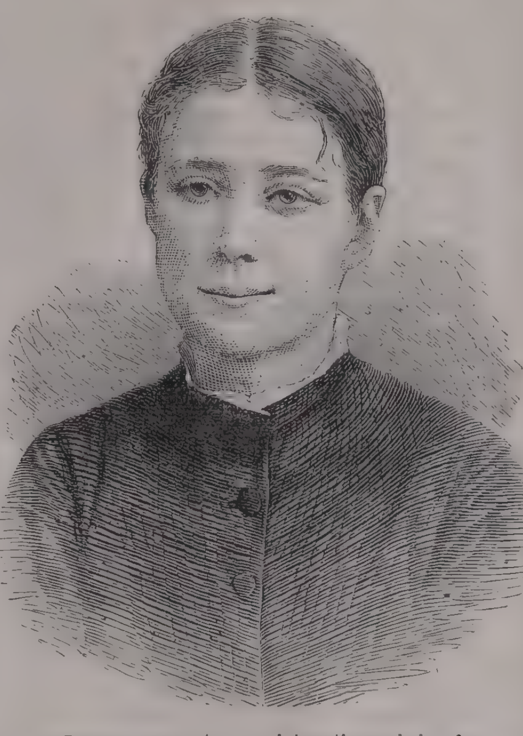
SCHOOLS IN CAIRO.—Miss E. J. Whately desires to correct a little misapprehension regarding the work of her sister (Miss M. L. Whately) in Cairo, which occurs in Mr. Weatherly's interesting account of his visitsto missions in the East. "He observes that the Cairo schools would be more appreciated if English instead of French were the language of Egypt, which seems to imply an impression that no language but English is taught. The language of the country of Egypt is neither English nor French, but Arabic; and to make any tongue but the vernacular the language of a school for the people would be greatly to limit its influence. My sister being aware of this, has all along made the Arabic tongue the language of the school. English and French, however, are most thoroughly taught in addition, as proved by the eagerness with which boys trained in her school are sought for situations of trust where either or both languages are required."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Richard Weaver in Belfast.—A correspondent writes:—"The attendances at the meetings average over 2000, while at the Sabbath services thousands are turned away, being unable to get into the building which accommodates 3000 persons."

Boharm, N.B.—A series of evangelistic meetings, conducted by F. A. Smith, Banffshire Gospel Van Mission, has been brought to a close here. Although a very busy season among the farmers and servants, the meetings were well attended, and numbers professed to receive blessing.

Croydon.—A series of mission services conducted by Mr. George King was closed on Friday week at Salem Congregational Church here. The meetings were deeply interesting; the quaint sayings and original modes of address fixed the attention of the people, while the eventful career of our brother astonished and convinced of God's great power to save. Souls were brought to the feet of the Saviour each night, and the mission was successful in attracting within hearing of the Word rough men who had not hitherto been reached. G. W. Kersey.



Drury-lane.—A very interesting mission has concluded in connection with Whitefield Presbyterian Church, Drury-lane. Mr. Henry Lakin, of Burton-upon-Trent, conducted the services, assisted by the pastor, Rev. W. B. Alexander, and Rev. J. Linnell, of Pavenham.

Banffshire G.V. Mission.—This mission has secured a tent for evangelistic work, during the summer months, chiefly in order to reach several places into which access has not been got by other means. The mission is supported by the freewill offerings of the Lord's people. This summer the expenditure will be greater than usual. Rev. G. S. Muir, Whitehill Manse, Grange, Keith, N.B., superintends the work.

Wolverhampton.—Gospel Temperance services have been held in a large marquee capable of holding 1000 people, kindly lent gratuitously by Mr. Bennett, auctioneer. The tent has been crowded every Sunday evening for about two months; many drunkards have been reclaimed, and others have been led to the Saviour. Mr. J. Fawcett (Chairman of the Wolverhampton Temperance Society) has conducted the services, while several well-known ladies and gentlemen in Temperance circles have rendered excellent assistance, viz., Mr. F. A. Homer, Councillor Joseph Devey, Mr. James Phillips, and Mrs. Wilson, the well-known Scotch evangelist, who is having a most successful Gospel mission in the neighbourhood. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have for many years been greatly honoured of God in winning souls. Friends would do well to invite them to labour amongst them. Their present address is, Elm-terrace, Penn-road, Wolverhampton.

THE KIDNAPPED CHILD.

ON the afternoon of his lecture at Folkestone (June 17), Mr. J. B. Wookey visited the mother of the little girl Hearnden, aged about eleven years, who disappeared under mysterious circumstances about eighteen months ago, from the service of a woman named Johnson, at Folkestone. The child has not since been heard of. A girl aged seventeen had previously disappeared in like manner from the house of the same woman. Mrs. Hearnden lives at a village a few miles out of Folkestone. Mr. Wookey was deeply affected by his interview with her. He says:—"My heart sank within me in the presence of those blanched cheeks and dull eyes that appeared to have shed out their last tears. She looked indeed like a mother out of whose life every smile had disappeared. There was no silver lining to her cloud; no morning to her black night; and there seemed no prospect of joy to her life of settled gloom."

In answer to his question whether she had a portrait of her missing child, she produced the likeness of another daughter two years older, which she said was an exact portrait of the younger girl, with the exception of the two years difference in the age. Mr. Wookey purchased the portrait, which is here reproduced. We ask our friends on the Continent, who have previously rendered invaluable service in similar cases, to carefully study the engraving, peradventure it may give some clue to the whereabouts of the child, if she is still alive.

Mr. Wookey thus concludes the account of his visit:—"God alone knows how I felt in leaving that desolated home; I thought of the hundreds of other little ones out of whose life every gleam of sunshine has been eternally crushed; of parents going down to the grave broken-hearted; and I could but pray that God would give me sufficient grace and strength to spend the remainder of my life in trying to put a stop to this hell-born traffic in the bodies and souls of the young."—The (July) Sentinel.

Y.W.C.A., SOUTHAMPTON.

BY invitation of Major and Mrs. Evered Poole, whose interest in this institution is well known, a gathering, largely composed of ladies, was lately held at their residence, Enfield House, to meet and welcome Mrs. Knight, a lady who, coming from Epsom, has accepted the charge of the Association in succession to Miss C. Jennings, who has been obliged, through ill-health, to resign it. The guests assembled in the drawing-rooms, the meeting being an exceptionally large one for a private house, for it comprised some 160 persons, and in that sense, as well as in other respects, was a most encouraging and hearty one.

Major Poole, in a brief address, expressed the pleasure with which Mrs. Poole and himself regarded the numerous gathering in the interests of an institution, the welfare of which they had so deeply at heart. He especially conveyed their thanks to the heads of the large establishments of the town for so readily facilitating the attendance of the young people in their employ. He stated some of the main objects of the Association, and appealed for enlarged sympathy and co-operation from the ladies present, and concluded by tendering a cordial welcome to Mrs. Knight to her new sphere of Christian labour in Southampton. This was acknowledged by that lady in a few grateful and gracefully-expressed sentences. Other addresses were given by various friends.

The Institute Home has just been refurnished, and a new piano is wanted. Mrs. Evered Poole, Enfield House, Southampton, would feel most grateful to any Christian friends who would help her meet the necessary outlay by donations. She would thankfully receive furniture, or any other gifts for the Home. There are about 250 associates and members of the Y.W.C.A., and she hopes largely to increase the work if the Lord's stewards would kindly entrust to her the means of doing so.

MISSIONS IN NORTH AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—Some account of a recent journey in Morocco and Algiers, undertaken partly with the view of seeing missionary work within these countries and ascertaining what openings there may be for future extension, may be of interest to your readers.

TANGIERS.

I commenced my journey in Africa at Tangier. It is the most northern port in the so-called empire of Morocco, and the residence of the representatives of European powers. The town itself is not otherwise of great importance, and has the doubtful advantage of being more under European influence for bad and good than the larger towns in the interior. The labourers there at present are Mr. Baldwin, with his family, assisted by Miss Tulloch and Miss Herdman (of Bath), all in connection with the Kabyle Mission. They are engaged chiefly in learning the language; this, being a corrupt form of Arabic in which no books have been published, presents unusual difficulties. Arabic is itself one of the hardest languages for Europeans to acquire, and the degenerate patois prevalent in Eastern Africa has special difficulties of its own.

Miss Herdman has already acquired some conversational knowledge of the Tangerian dialect, and is also able to carry on active work among the Spanish Jews of the city, as she has a fair knowledge of their language. She is a most enthusiastic worker, and will, I trust, before long be blessed with some reward for her labours. Mrs. Baldwin is gradually acquiring influence among her poor neighbours by rendering what medical assistance is in her power. She will soon have the help of a trained practitioner, in Dr. Churcher, who is about to join the mission.

Mr. W. Mackintosh, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and his excellent wife are also actively engaged here. Having resided many years in Damascus, they have a thorough knowledge of Syrian Arabic, and have, therefore had less difficulty in acquiring the dialect of this country. In the early part of last summer they made some interesting journeys into the interior. I had hoped to have joined them in a similar undertaking this year, and waited at Tangier longer than I should otherwise have done, in the hope of the weather being suitable. The rains, however, continued so much later than usual that the so-called roads were practically impassable, and camping out most undesirable, especially for those who have suffered from fever as Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh have done.

I hear that since I left, Mr. Mackintosh and Mr. Baldwin have been together to Fez and Wazan, two of the most important towns in the interior. Mr. Baldwin is anxious to commence a station, probably in the former place, at an early date, as the language there is purer than in the coast towns, and if he could be spared to spend some time in the interior, he would probably acquire it more readily than whilst residing with his family at Tangier.

The impression formed in my mind from many conversations and the few observations I could make personally is that, with the exception of the language, there are few of the difficulties and hardships to contend with in this country that are met elsewhere. The country is open to missionary work. Mohammedan fanaticism is for the present, and probably permanently, on the decrease. Morocco is open to Europeans, though the Sultan is conservative, and opposes the introduction of European capital and enterprise. This, however, probably will not continue many years. The door is now open in many places, more so, perhaps, in Morocco than Algiers, and it only rests with the Lord's people to go up and possess the land. I was met by the demand for Bible women at Tangier, Oran, and Algiers; in fact, wherever there is a Mission station ladies might readily and safely work. I am glad to hear from Mr. Glenny, the Secretary of the Kabyle Mission, that he has several ladies ready to go out. I hope the Society will soon be able to change its name to the North African Mission, for I believe there is quite as much work for them among other races as among the Kabyles.

ORAN.

From Tangier I went to Oran, where I made the acquaintance of Mr. Eldin, the French Protestant pastor. The church there does not seem in a flourishing state, though Mr. Eldin is earnest and evangelical. From thence I travelled with M. Bureau, of the Kabyle Mission, to Tlemcen, where the society has a station, and passed several days very pleasantly with him and his fellow-worker, M. Mercadier. Tlemcen is an Arab town, and the principal difficulty will be the French opposition, which, where the officials are ignorant and narrow-minded, is annoying, and sometimes a hindrance to the work. I am inclined to think, however, that active opposition on the part of the officials is decreasing.

ALGIERS.

At Algiers I did not hear of much active work going on at present. The French Protestant Church appeared to be more flourishing than at Oran, and I heard a most excellent sermon from M. Rocheblave, one of the pastors. M. Lowitz, the Agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, is doing his best to spread the Scriptures, but I fancy under very great difficulties. His work is the principal memorial of Miss A. Brenner's labours here. Mr. George Pearse, though continuing to take much interest in all religious work in this country, and especially in the translation of the Bible into the Kabyle language, is hindered from active service by Mrs. Pearse's ill health, which, however, I trust is only temporary.

I was unable to visit the mission stations in the Kabyle country. At Constantine I met M. Maleherbe, the colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society. He is an earnest man, but has a most difficult post. The French, as a rule, care nothing for the Bible; the lower class of Arabs cannot read, and the upper are fanatical or tainted with French scepticism. From Constantine I went to Biskra, one of the first oases in the desert; from thence I hoped to visit the Chawia tribes of the Aures mountains, but was delayed by bad weather, and was only able to see the Ouled Abdi country. This I found most interesting, and entirely unexplored by English tourists. The natives are a most curious and hospitable race, but I am inclined to think not more open to missionary work than some of the Arab tribes, with the additional difficulty of an almost unwritten language. Some of the more northern tribes, who speak Arabic and Chawia, may be more accessible. Arabic Gospels were courteously received by some of the Kaids and Mollahs. One of the Arab oases near Biskra might be a suitable situation for a mission station.

I would commend the labourers in North Africa to the prayers and sympathy of your readers in their present trying, waiting time. I can strongly recommend the country as a missionary field, especially to those who, from any cause are not prepared to face a tropical climate or take up a more distant sphere of work.

S. Zachary Lloyd.

Areley Hall, Stourport.

Dr. Eccles, Hon. Treasurer of the Kabyle Mission, writes to say that he is about to equip an Edinburgh graduate for the establishment of the first Medical Mission in North-Eastern Africa. He will need instruments, drugs, surgical and medical appliances. Perhaps some former invalids or retired doctors will find themselves possessed of articles of which they have no further use, but which would be invaluable to a medical missionary.

"A worker in the field tells me how a keg of biscuits proved most useful in providing a ready dish to set before the many swarthy Mohammedans who come to listen to a Nazarene as he tells them of the true Messiah. Another post brings a letter from a valued sister, who pleads for her numerous patients, for whom she needs soap, and not in small quantities. Some of her medicines are bitter, but it appears that, unlike some natives, they believe only in sweet medicines, hence sugar is a great desideratum. There is a difficulty in the measuring out the medicine. Some Christian manufacturer may be moved to supply the lack by sending a package of metal tea spoons.

"Who will send some old linen, some surgical instruments, a large box of soap, a barrel of sugar, several ten-pound tins of biscuits, articles of camp furniture, a chest of tea, and 100, or even 1000 teaspoons? Let such forward these gifts to the Hon. Sec., Mr. E. H. Glenny, 21, Linton-road, Barking, Essex."

Y.M.C.A., NEWCASTLE. — The members and friends of this flourishing branch of the Association had a very enjoyable outing in the beautiful grounds of Jesmond Dene, near the city, on Thursday afternoon, June 25. There was a sale of work, flowers, fruit, &c., which was also very successful. Tea was provided in Sir William Armstrong's handsome banqueting hall, situated in the grounds. After tea, a public meeting was held, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Collingwood Bruce. Mr. T. Moffitt, secretary, reported that the Newcastle branch now numbered 925 members, 400 having been added to the roll during the last six months.

The Summer Number of The Graphic (1s.) is, as usual, most attractively and artistically got up. A somewhat melancholy interest attaches to it from the fact that the hands that penned the leading tale and produced the large coloured picture are now both silent in death.

Notices.

Mr. Cheyne Brady, Châlet Fenz, Grindelwald, Switzerland, will be happy to see Christian friends sojourning in that locality.

FRANCE.—A writer in Le Christianisme makes pressing and urgent appeal for pastors for the sixty vacant places in the French Protestant Church.

GERMAN MISSIONS.—In the Evangelisch-Kirchlicher Anzeiger, there is an urgent appeal to the evangelical Christians of Germany to send ministers of the Gospel to their brethren, who are carrying on pioneer work in Africa.

GENEVA.—The national church of Geneva has sustained a severe loss in the death of M. Frederic Audéoud, aged 87. He was a member of the consistory for many years, and to the last he showed an inexhaustible charity.—Le Christianisme.

AFRICA.—A despatch from Senegal announces the death of Madame Jaques, formerly Mdlle. Chollet, the wife of the missionary Louis Jaques. It is only a few months since Mdlle. Thérèse Chollet, of Moudon, Vaud, went to rejoin her husband at Senegal.

NEUCHATEL.—An attempt is being made in this neighbourhood to form local sections of the Swiss league against brandy. The abuse of strong drink in all its forms, but particularly of brandy and "absinthe," is terribly prevalent in Switzerland.—Journal Réligieux.

FETE FOR YOUNG CHRISTIANS.—At this fête held in Paris a few weeks ago M. Réveilland advocated the formation of the Leagues of the Blue and White Cross, &c., among the young people of France, reminding them that the future of the country was in their hands.—Le Signal.

PEWSEY.—Mr. Henry Morgan and wife, from Oxford, have visited this town and neighbourhood with their Bible-carriage. Believers were stirred up by their earnest and loving words, while some unsaved manifested deep feeling. The evangelists held two indoor and two open-air services. They visited throughout Pewsey and the neighbourhood with their Bible-carriage four or five days.

MADAGASCAR.—The Jesuits have distinguished themselves in Madagascar, by the animosity with which they have striven to hinder the evangelical missionaries in their work. They have not hesitated to formulate the grossest accusations against the "English Methodists," who, they pretended, had scattered British gold broadcast, in order to ruin the lawful influence of France in Madagascar. —Journal Réligieux.

CARLUKE, N.B.—A fifteen days' mission held here under Mr. Spencer Walton, has been much owned of God. Not a night passed but some remained to the after-meeting to be spoken to, and a good many have professed faith in Christ. The attendance on week-nights was good, and on Sabbaths very large. Mr. Walton also conducted Bible-readings on the week-day afternoons, which were well attended and much appreciated. Altogether the mission has been a success, for which we praise God.

W. D. M.

MELBOURNE HALL, LEICESTER.—The fourth anniversary has been celebrated with great joy. There has been hardly a single Sunday during the past year in which many have not yielded to Christ. The Church-members, which number nearly 800, have been reconsecrating themselves, and are beginning to seek and expect a deep and widespread revival of religion. The anniversary sermons were preached by Rev. Newman Hall and by the pastor, Rev. F. B. Meyer. The crowds that fill the building every Sunday show that the Gospel has not lost its attractive power for the masses of this great industrial centre. The pastor is constantly needing funds to enable him to carry on work at the Prison-gate, and elsewhere.

JULY 2.—2 CORINTHIANS VI.

v. 1.—“ Receive not the grace of God in vain.”—This “grace of God” is not the inward working of his Spirit, but the Gospel message, which is received in vain when it reaches the head but not the heart, and when it is assented to by the understanding but not laid hold of by the will and the affections.

v. 2.—“ I have heard thee in a time accepted,” &c. —In Isaiah xlix. 8, from which these words are taken, they form a promise from God to the Messiah. They are explained here by the Apostle as referring to all who “come unto God by Him.” Promises to Christ are the property of all those who by faith receive Him. “All are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's” (1 Cor. iii. 23).

v. 3.—“ That the ministry be not blamed.”—This does not mean what we understand by “the ministry,” the order or collective body of teachers in the Church, but the word is well rendered in R.V. “ministration,” and as such it would apply to all Christians, for to the reconciled (see 2 Cor. v. 18, 19) has been committed “the ministry of reconciliation” The expression “ambassadors for Christ” (ib. 20), which might seem opposed to this, really confirms it, for there is no word for “ambassadors” in the Greek; it is literally, “we are on an embassy for Christ” It is the work, not the office, of ambassador which is spoken of. It was to disciples, not apostles alone, that Jesus said, “As my Father sent Me, even so send I you;” on which words Canon Westcott well observes that they must be “regarded as the commission of the Christian society, and not as that of the Christian ministry.'

v. 14.—“ Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.”—Not to be limited to marriage, though that is included. The yoke is the symbol of service (1 Tim. vi. 1). Alford renders it, “Become not incongruous yoke-fellows with unbelievers.” The “Speaker's Commentary” says, “A rather stricter rendering would be heterogeneously yoked.”

JULY 3.—2 CORINTHIANS VII.

v. 1.—“ Perfecting holiness.”—This does not mean bringing holiness to perfection, but “accomplishing” or carrying it out in practice. It is the same word that occurs Heb. ix. 6, “accomplishing the service of God.”

v. 2.—“ Receive us.”—The Greek is literally (as in margin R.V.) “make room for us,” “in your hearts” being understood.

v. 4.—“ I am filled with comfort; I am exceedingly joyful in all our tribulation.”—The article occurs in the Greek before both “comfort” and “tribulation,” thus referring back to the “comfort” and “tribulation” spoken of in the first chapter. It might be rendered literally, “I have been filled full with this comfort; I am overabounding with this joy upon this affliction of ours” That is, “coming upon”—as we might almost say, “on the top of.” The special joy came on the top of the special sorrow.

v. 6.—“ God . . . . comforted us by the coming of Titus.”—As we had a description in chap. i. of the special sorrow which overwhelmed him in Asia, so from this to the end of the chapter we are shown the cause of his special joy.

v. 14.—“ I am not ashamed.”—This should be, as in R.V., “I was not put to shame.”

v. 15.—“ How with fear and trembling ye received him.”—“ Their penitence seems to have begun even before his (Titus's) arrival, and it almost looks like the after-fruit of Timothy's mission. . . . They dreaded the consequences of their previous conduct, as we may well imagine, when Titus presented himself with another letter from the hand of one whom they knew, by infallible proofs, to be the bearer of a divine commission.”—Speaker's Commentary.

JULY 4.—2 CORINTHIANS VIII.

v. 1.—“ We make known to you the grace of God which hath been given in the churches of Macedonia.” —“ This liberality (of the Macedonians) he introduces as grace of God given, i e., as a gift of the undeserved favour of God. Thus, while holding up human excellence as an example, he shuts out beforehand all human merit.”—J. A. Beet.

v. 4 —“ Praying us with much intreaty” (that we would receive the gift).—These latter words in parenthesis are now rejected by all critical editors, as having no authority. Without them the sentence will run, as in R.V., “Beseeching us with much entreaty in regard of this grace and the fellowship in the ministering to the saints.”

v. 5.—“ And this they did, not as we hoped,” &c. —“ He had hoped well of them, but on account of their poverty had looked for only slender assistance. On the contrary, however, they made no slight contribution, nor was their gift one of money merely, but of themselves, first and foremost to the Lord, and also to the Apostle.”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 9.—“ For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.”—Christ is presented both as a pattern and as a motive. The passage is a parallel one to Phil. ii. 6. By comparing them we see that the rich condition which the Lord abandoned was the possession of the glory and power of Godhead.. The becoming poor was becoming man, with all the privation and sorrow which He voluntarily underwent in that state, ending with the cross. The riches which this poverty procured are the riches of salvation, pardon, acceptance, participation of the Divine nature, final glory, all springing from his work as man, both in life and death.

JULY 5.—2 CORINTHIANS IX.

v. 6.—“ He which soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully.”—The word for “bounty,” occurring twice in the fifth verse, is in the Greek “blessing,” and the word bountifully, occurring twice in this verse, is in Greek, as given in margin R V., “with blessings.” He that soweth with blessings (to others) shall reap with blessings (to himself).

v. 8.—“ God is able to make all grace abound toward you,” &c —The point seems to be that God can not only make spiritual grace abound, but temporal grace too: that is, He can supply their bodily wants as well as those of the soul.

vv. 9, 10.—The two quotations, one from Ps. cxii. and the other from Isa. lv. 10, are connected thus: the first describes a bountiful man as one who “hath scattered abroad” (R.V.). a metaphor taken from the action of the sower. Then Isaiah lv. 10 is quoted to show that God ministers the seed which the sower scatters abroad: in other words, supplies the means by which his people may be bountiful to his glory.

v. 10.—Instead of “seed sown” of A.V., R.V. has “seed for sowing,” which is much more to the point. God's bounty in temporal things to his people is to the intent that they “always having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work.”

v. 15.—“ Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.”—The “Speaker's Commentary” thinks that to refer this to Christ would be “too wide a deviation from the immediate context.” But Paul's heart was so full of love to Christ that no reference to Him could ever be a deviation, much less a wide deviation, from any subject he might be treating. It is difficult to understand what else he can refer to but Christ.

JULY 6.—2 CORINTHIANS X.

v. 2.—“ Which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.”—This latter expression is the same in the original as that translated ‘Walk after the flesh,’ in Romans viii. 4. It denotes a walk according to the aims, principles, and motives of the flesh. This he wholly repudiates. “That he walks ‘in the flesh’ he allows. All men, even the regenerate, walk in the flesh. They are liable to be tempted by the flesh, and suffer from the weaknesses of the flesh. But the flesh is not in them the dominant power, and he denies, therefore, that his warfare is waged ‘according to the flesh.’”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 5 —“ Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.”—Present participle, implying aim rather than attainment; for, as the next verse shows, he contemplated “disobedience” to be avenged. It is exactly the same expression which is used in Romans vii. 23, of the law of the members warring against the law of the mind, and “bringing me into captivity,” and no more implies there that Paul was brought into captivity, than the same expression here implies that he overcame all the disobedience he encountered.

v. 8.—“ Our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction.”—Literally, “for building you up, not pulling you down.” What a rebuke this statement of Apostolic authority conveys to those so-called successors of the Apostles, who, under the headship of the Pope, have persecuted, and cast down, and destroyed Christians on the ground of Apostolic authority committed to them.

JULY 7.—2 CORINTHIANS XI.

v. 3.—“ Your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.”—R.V. supplies a word omitted in the ordinary text, but attested by the oldest MSS., and renders the latter part thus, “from the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ.” The word rendered simplicity is used for single-mindedness,” and is so taken in the “Speaker's Commentary.”

v. 4.—“ If he that cometh preacheth another Jesus,” &c.—“ ‘The comer’ describes the false teachers as adventitious, a foreign and intrusive element. . . . They were ‘the coming men,’ as though St. Paul had been only their humble forerunner. . . . Jesus preached by the Judaisers was so different from the Jesus of St. Paul that He is called another.”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 5.—“ The very chiefest apostles.”—This is spoken in irony, and evidently does not refer to real apostles, but pretended ones. It is literally, “the supereminent apostles.” He drops the language of irony in verse 13, and says plainly whom he means. “Such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the Apostles of Christ.”

v. 28.—“ That which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches.”—The “Speaker's Commentary” well renders this “the daily onset upon me, the anxious care for all the churches,” and adds, “He does not mean actual hostility, but a pressure as urgent as that of attacking enemies.”

JULY 8.—2 CORINTHIANS XII.

v. 1.—“ Visions and revelations of the Lord.”—“The man in Christ” of whom he knew fourteen years ago caught up to the third heaven is evidently himself; but, as he will not glory of himself, he puts it in this way, in order to draw more strongly the line of distinction between what he might teach from his own knowledge, and what had been thus revealed to him when taken, as it were, out of himself. When critics speak of Pauline theology as if it were Paul's view of Divine things, they ignore these “visions and revelations of the Lord.”

v. 7.—“ A thorn in the flesh;” &c.—It is now generally admitted that this should be rather rendered “a stake for the flesh.” The allusion being to the painful punishment of impaling. The “Speaker's Commentary,” after a very full examination of the whole question as to what this “stake for the flesh” could be, concludes, “There are not sufficient data for determining what peculiar ingredient characteristic of Satanic malignity there was in the Apostle's affliction. but it would seem to have been something calculated to overwhelm him with ignominy, rather than to excruciate him with pain. It is consolatory to know that, however hard it was to bear, the grace of Christ enabled him ultimately to rejoice and glory in it as a means whereby the power of the Lord more fully tabernacled upon him and invested him with the true strength for doing his Master's work.”

“HARD ON THE PIG.”

I REMEMBER once saying at a mission tea-party to a lot of men, whose swinish behaviour in the public-house, when another lady and myself had gone in to invite them to a mission service, had greatly disgusted me, “You working men know how to behave to a lady like courteous gentlemen, everywhere but in a public-house; you would never demean yourself by cadgering: but once go near a man in the ‘public’ and it is always ‘Gie us tuppence for a pot of beer’—just like a pig beginning to grunt for wash the moment you approach his stye,” I added, with some asperity, remembering my Saturday night's sufferings. Up rose a hoary-headed doctor and said, very solemnly, “I think that's rather hard.” The men looked delighted, for my words had gone rather disagreeably home. He paused, and looked round benignantly on the offended audience, and then added, dryly, “Hard, I mean, on the pig.” Instant fall of countenances all round. “Did you ever hear,” he went on, “of a pig going into a public-house at all? And did you ever hear of a pig taking a drop too much? And, above all, when did you ever hear of a pig going home and knocking about his sow?”

This was too much for an English audience; a roar of laughter dispersed the sore feeling, and nine of the drinking men acknowledged the justice of the home-thrust by signing the pledge that night.—Ellice Hopkins.

EXTRACTS.

"Simple and child-like hearts, that have newly entered into the joy of salvation, ignorant of scientific theology, but hungering and thirsting for God, turn to the writings of John with never-failing desire, and find in them green pastures and living waters. To a large extent it is the same with those who have reached the most advanced stages of Christian experience, whose spiritual nature has become deepened and expanded by the manifold teachings of God. Here the simplicity of youth and the ripest and holiest wisdom of age agree. I have taken pains to inquire of many belonging to both classes how they have been guided in their reading, and what they have found most fruitful of spiritual blessing and delight; and almost every answer has included—at least—the Gospel of John, often named in a tone of personal affection, as men name a dear friend."

From "John, whom Jesus loved."

"In our homes we are ourselves responsible for the lighting of our lamps at the proper time, for the supply of oil to them, for the brightness of the reflectors, and for everything else connected with their shining; the lamp has neither will, nor choice, nor faculty of consent or resistance. So, too, it was with the lights of the Tabernacle and Temple. But it is otherwise with Christian churches; the material of which they are composed is not dead, but living; and the grace of the Lord must be met on our part by faith and prayer and hearty consent. He does, indeed, work in us to will, as well as to do of His good pleasure; but it is a working in human hearts. He is not far away from us; He is in our very midst; and He only waits our asking to give us all we need in order that we may shine as lights in the world."

From "Thy First Love."

"Two men may do the same thing so far as the outward appearance goes; for example, may give to the same charity, or kneel in the same place of worship, or say Amen to the same prayer. You may not be able to discern a shade of difference, and yet the 'works' may be as opposite and as wide asunder as heaven and hell. The Lord claims to 'know' the works of the Laodiceans, in the profoundest and most penetrative sense, inwardly and hiddenly as well as outwardly. 'Thy works,' in all that they are and all that they mean and involve, lie open under Mine eye, in the broad, bright sunshine, as they do not lie open even to thyself."

From "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock."

"Some of God's hired servants are called upon not to work, but to wait. A poor old sister in the workhouse waited for orders from Christ, and could only hear Him saying, 'Lie still and cough.' Many are called upon to glorify God in lives of meek submission spent upon sick beds on the edge of the grave. Let them not murmur. 'They also serve who only stand and wait.' It is not theirs to run with the thousands who speed over sea and land to do the Lord's bidding; but by their saintly patience, their constant trust, their joyful unworldliness, they may be made an abiding blessing. And, doubtless, great reward will come to them in the day when the meek shall inherit the earth, and the merciful shall obtain mercy."

From "Calls to Christ."

"It was never God's plan that the children of Israel should spend those dreadful forty years in the wilderness. He led them up to Kadesh-Barnea within a very few months after they came out of Egypt; and had they been obedient they would have gone into the land at once, and that without passing over Jordan at all. But on the border of that land they murmured and doubted, and sent up spies to see if the Lord's promise was true, to judge for themselves whether they could possess the land. They fell into unbelief there. And when the spies came back, in spite of the earnest remonstrance of faithful Joshua and Caleb, the Israelites rebelled against the Lord, and would not go up to possess the land. Then it was that the Lord turned them back; and for forty years they lived only to provoke and tempt Him."

From "Out of Egypt."

"The simplicity and naturalness of the Bible are most striking. Where else can be found such graphic pictures of parental and domestic life? The straightforward delineation of its most conspicuous characters; its record of the sins of God's people with the same impartial pen as is used for the setting forth of their virtues; its lofty moral tone; its sublimity of thought; as well as its superhuman authority—all bespeak its unique character. For like the Master, of whom it is the constant and consistent witness, its words are with authority. It never speculates or halts in its teaching, but drives straight to the mark in its ever recurring 'Thus saith the Lord,' in the Old Testament, and in the 'Verily, verily, I say unto you,' of the Master."

From "In the Volume of the Book."

"'My son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him.' Take his yoke upon you: it is not galling, it is easy; take his burden upon you: it is not heavy, it is light. Yes; his service is a reasonable service, it is perfect freedom. This choice you will never repent. Believe me, the ways of wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Believe me, or, rather, believe Him who cannot lie—'Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.' Have you made this choice in your heart? Then, in the next place, make an open avowal, a public profession of it. Yes; come out from the world, take your stand openly upon the Lord's side. Let your conduct speak this language:

'I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Nor to defend his cause.'"

From "Addresses to Young Men."

"Just as Annan was going to enter the enquiry-meeting the hall door was closed in his face, and he reeled down the steps, exclaiming 'Great God, am I shut out of salvation for ever?' Away he went to the house of a friend, who assured him he might find an entrance into the hall by another door. In breathless haste he returned to seek the door, but in vain. These are small matters; but to an awakened soul such things seem to speak with the voice of God. At the midnight hour he entered my room and stood before me, his eyes wild and red with excitement, and his countenance black and terrible. His whole body, a frame of iron, shook and quivered. Knowing something of the man I feared he was about to lay hands on me, and take vengeance for some words of reproof. Very different was the case. Robert had now no blows but for himself; and with words of keen and cutting self-condemnation he asked the question of questions, 'What must I do to be saved?'"

From "The Christian Hero."

"You notice that the Book of Ruth contains the history of a Jew who went into a far country; in fact, I might say that the first chapter of this book is the fifteenth of Luke over again. We get a Jew backsliding, and through the means of that Jew's backsliding you will find that a poor Gentile girl is brought out of the Gentile country into the land of blessing. Then this girl marries a rich Jew, Boaz; and there we get a picture of the Lord Jesus Christ marrying the Church. Then after the rich Jew and the poor Gentile are united, you see the blessing turns back to the Jew. And I think that is just what the New Testament teaches of the way in which God is going to deal with the Jew by and by. He has backslidden, and the Gentiles are blessed; the Church of God will be united to Christ, and then the Jews will be blessed again."

From "Ruth, the Moabitess."

"It is resurrection power that saves us; and resurrection power can only be shown where there is real death. So in the case of Lazarus, wherein the Son of God was to be glorified. Jesus tarried four days until Lazarus was dead not sick merely, but dead. Then He came to Bethany; and resurrection power had the opportunity of manifestation. The dead one was made alive; the Son of God was glorified; and joy and gladness filled the home. Reader, is the blessing delayed in coming to you because the Lord is waiting for you to see yourself dead: not sick merely with sin, but dead—condemned already under the curse of the broken law, and without a spark of the life of God in your soul? There is one of two conditions for all: Dead or Alive. There is no middle ground."

From "Life, Warfare, and Victory."

"One day a discussion on the evidences of the truth of Christianity arose among the stone-cutters. Duncan Matheson was the champion of the Bible. The leading sceptic, beaten in argument, assailed religion through the inconsistencies of its friends, declaring that Matheson was the only consistent Christian he had ever met. This compliment to his external morality, instead of pleasing his vanity, aroused his conscience, and he secretly charged himself with sheer hypocrisy in defending the truth, to whose divine power he felt in his heart he was an utter stranger. Another day, seeing a fellow-workman look sad, he expressed his sympathy, and found the man was distressed about his sins. Matheson took him aside, and although himself ignorant of the righteousness of God, and justification by faith in the Lord Jesus, directed him as best he could to the path of life. But this act recoiled on himself; and his conscience, now constantly awake, began to upbraid him. 'You're a hypocrite,' said he to himself; 'you point others to Christ, and all the while you are treading the way to hell yourself.' Then followed a fierce struggle between light and darkness; his soul was tortured almost to madness—a crisis was at hand."

From "Duncan Matheson."

"I tell you, when the Spirit of God is on us, the world looks very empty; the world has a very small hold upon us; and we begin to let go our hold of it. When the Spirit of God is upon us we shall just let go the things of time, and lay hold of things eternal. This is the Church's need to-day. We want the Spirit to come in mighty power, and consume all the vile dross there is in us. Oh that the Spirit of fire may come down and burn everything in us that is contrary to God's blessed Word and will."

MR. PAYSON HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

At the close of the fourth week of the mission here, we can look back with joy and thankfulness. We already see unmistakable evidences of a great spiritual work. Numbers of young people have received a rich blessing, and will date their conversion from this time. During the meetings I have spoken with many children, and have heard and seen much to assure me that deep impressions have been made, and that young hearts have been won for the Saviour. Some of these cases I may mention.

Alice H—— and Lydia H—— cried very much, having been impressed with the touching account Mr. Hammond had given of a little boy who had been persecuted because he had "a place and time to pray, and read the Bible every day." They also wept because they felt their need of a Saviour. Lydia said, "Will God blot out our sins from his book?" She felt happier before I left her, and she told me there was a hymn we had sung together when we met before going to the children's service that night which had two choruses, and she could then only sing the first, "I want to love Jesus," if she had sung the second then, it would have been telling a falsehood. Now she could sing it, and say, "Oh! now I love Jesus." A little more than a week after this conversation with her, I saw her at one of the meetings again, and she was crying bitterly. I asked how it was, for I had thought she had accepted Christ. She told me it was because she had not been serving God as she should. I asked if she had done anything that was displeasing to God, and not Christ-like, since the Wednesday night when she had said she loved Jesus, and would try to serve Him. She acknowledged that she had, and told me of something that had occurred that very day. She had disobeyed her mother. She promised to ask her to forgive her; though it would seem hard, yet she would do it "for Jesus' sake," and she would ask God to forgive her too.

Annie B—— said she had given her heart to the Saviour a fortnight since, she had then felt how unworthy she was, and thought about Jesus having been so good to her, and how He loved her so very much. When she went upstairs to bed she knelt down and asked God to forgive her, and to help her to love Him and serve Him. She gave very satisfactory evidence of having given her heart to the Saviour, and of trustful confidence in Him.

Lizzie N—— was much impressed, and dates her conversion from the first of Mr. Hammond's meetings she attended. For a long time I have taken special interest in her, knowing she was seeking salvation and peace through the Lord Jesus Christ. In a letter to me, dated Feb. 20, she wrote, "I have tried to give myself to the Lord ever since I have been a member of the Scripture Union, but I do not know whether I have succeeded or not." The decisive step has now been taken. She has found Christ as her Saviour, and now rejoices in his love, and desires to live to serve Him. She has a calm, clear, steadfast gaze as she looks at me, and speaks of her happy experience.

Ada N—— will certainly remember with joyful gratitude Mr. Hammond's meetings in Sheffield. She says she can never thank him enough for the good he has done her. She gave her heart to Jesus at one of the meetings. She feels the witness within; and described it as something which makes her know she is a Christian. There is a strong desire to "grow in grace; she sings, so to speak, all the day, and longs for the night to come, that she may go to the service, counting the hours to the time when she shall be seated in the chapel. So occupied is she with this one great subject, in which she finds so much happiness, that one night when walking home alone (after I had left her) she wondered why people seemed to look at her so much. One lady and gentleman noticed her so evidently that she wondered what it was. Presently she discovered that she was singing aloud, "I want to love Jesus."

Never do I expect to forget seeing her, in tears of deep sorrow, at the first of these meetings. That night she asked forgiveness, and felt that God forgave her. The next night she was at the meeting, looking so bright and happy, a true picture of sorrow turned into joy. The night after that she went again to the meeting, and was very anxious to speak to some other children, saying she felt as though she knew exactly what to say. In a letter to Mr. Hammond, she told him she had wanted to love Jesus for a long time; but ever since she had attended his meetings she had decided to live for Christ. It has been pleasing to notice the joy and happiness beaming in her face ever since that night of decision, whenever I have met her. Two or three children have spoken of her as greatly changed.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY said at the Annual leeting: "It would be a positive blessing if we could ave a Medical Mission like this in every poor district London. Surely we will be stirred to support oroughly and heartily this noble Mission. Such an stitution is the very thing required."

Funds to carry on the work are much needed. Contriutions will be thankfully received by Dr. R. CHAMBERS, , Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, N.W.; also by the reasurer, Dr. E. PARKER YOUNG, 30, Westbourne-quare, W.; also by MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of The hristian.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North ea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all e year round in providing our tables with fish. These en, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety orm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, undreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some nall share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so ghly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE

arrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy nd pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to hile away the weary hours, affording relief in case of ckness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull nd monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a rand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime ation like England; and I believe that the results of eir effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only pported liberally by the public, be of untold value in e future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the nchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by tter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, rove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers about to become so, the extra care they require, and when friendless) the help that the Mission must give wards paying for their infants at nurse during the rst few months of the mother's return to service or ther occupation, causes the work to be unusually ostly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' ommittee) at her private address as above, or to essrs. Morgan & Scott.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

FINSBURY PARK.

THE increasing stream of young men from the City to the suburbs, while it leaves ample work for the Association in the City, makes continually larger demands for the multiplication of branches, and the extension of their work in all the suburban districts.

One of the suburbs most populous in young men is Finsbury-park, on account of its manifold railway and vehicular accommodation.

Here a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has been established, under singularly favourable circumstances. At a moderate rental, the lease of premises built for a Club has been secured, affording (in addition to Library, Reading, Refreshment, and Class Rooms) a large and commodious Hall, where an excellent Evangelistic work is carried on under the direction of an experienced and efficient Secretary and an indefatigable and vigorous Committee.

The outlay in starting this important work has been £1,000 for the first year, after which it is confidently expected that it will be self-supporting.

We shall be very thankful for contributions from all who feel the importance of providing in London Christian care and counsel for the thousands of youths who are daily coming from the provinces to the Metropolis.

R. C. MORGAN, President, 12, Paternoster-buildings.
J. T. AUKLAND, Treasurer, "Grasmere," Woodberry Down, Finsbury-park, N.
H. HOLME, Chairman of Committee, 9, Florence-road, Finsbury-park, N.

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

SYRIAN COLONIZATION FUND,

41, PARLIAMENT STREET (Entrance in Cannon Row), London, S.W.

IN view of the greatly increasing distress among the Jews, and of the earnest appeals addressed to us, we desire to carry out the work of providing employment for Jews in the Land of Promise.

Intolerable oppression is driving Jews out of Roumania, Russia, and other countries. They seek in the Holy Land the shelter denied them elsewhere.

In Jerusalem there are nearly 20,000 Jews, of whom not one-tenth can obtain work. There are several thousands in Galilee and elsewhere in Palestine in great need.

We ask for means to enable us to give work to more Jews at Jerusalem—where some are already employed on and near the City—till increase of Funds shall give us the means to enable them to form themselves into Colonies on their own responsibility.

Also to help the Jewish families in Galilee who have asked our aid in forming a settlement there under favourable conditions.

In order to secure the crops, and avoid having to wait till harvest of the year after next, we ask for speedy help.

The Cyprus Colonists have been sufficiently provided for.
On behalf of the Committee,

SHAFTESBURY, President.
E. A. FINN, Secretary.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers Society."

CHURCH of ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

Instituted in 1844, and now supplying nearly 130 earnest and faithful workers to visit among the poor and outcast of London.

The Readers go from house to house and from room to room, with the Bible in their hands, and seek by loving personal contact and teaching to rescue, comfort, and encourage those amongst whom they labour.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to maintain this religious and social work.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.

CASE of Miss M. A. McDONALD, MORTLAKE.

This case was first brought under my notice in September last by the recommendation of the Rev. C. W. Marshall. The following are the leading particulars of the case, from memoranda in my Patients' Book :—

"Mother had died of Asthma and sister of Consumption."

"Illness commenced with a cold three years ago, which had resulted in affection of the lungs, gradually increasing."

"Cough now very violent, with expectoration of thick, heavy phlegm, sometimes green, sometimes streaked with blood; fluid blood sometimes raised."

"Acute pains in side and chest, hectic flushings, inordinate action of the heart."

"All the secretions unhealthy, and other symptoms indicative of disease of the lungs."

"Gradual loss of flesh in face, chest, arms and hands, and strength gradually declined."

The patient had been to Richmond Hospital, also to Brompton, without benefit—under treatment for Phthisis.

There was not much visible benefit from my advice for several weeks. A belladonna plaister was ordered to allay the irritability and pain in the region of the heart; but in less than two months there was a great improvement in every way. Three months since I received a letter, in which she says :—

"I am convinced there is no other treatment that is equal to yours. I did not like to write and say I was well till quite sure of it; but I have felt nothing since the end of the year, although the weather has been very trying. I am now enjoying as good health as I can wish."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to GOD, their own FATHER and MOTHER, and true Bibl Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and te For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children th great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminste Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enable PARENTS to teach one child or a family of twelve children, TEACHERS to teach a class of twenty or a school of fiv hundred, EDUCATED LADIES to teach all ages, or MINISTERS without study to conduct a quarterly examination s that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here i the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and lear about the system at the

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,

Kindly allow me to commend to your thoughtful attention and sympathy the Annual Record ust published of another year's PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK in connection with the above ission.

Partly in consequence of the extra expenditure incurred in fitting up our new Commodious Home for ischarged Prisoners, and partly from enforced absence through ill health, our finances are more than 1000 behind. This is a serious deficiency at this season of the year, when so many of the Lord's people are way from home, for rest and recreation; but, relying on the assurance of the Faithful Promiser, we await elivering help as in all the past.

The Report can be had free of charge on application.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HATTON,

4, Ampton-street, Regent's-square, W.C.

RISH CHURCH MISSIONS TO THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIETY FOR IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS are under the necessity of APPEALING most urgently to the Friends of the Society for elp under the following circumstances:—

The Receipts of the Society for the past Six Months have been £2,000 below those of the corresponding period of last year. A large reduction in the Staff of issionaries and Agents in Ireland has, therefore, become necessary, and has been ordered by the Committee to take effect from the 1st August. The retrenchments thus fected will, however, only meet one-half of the deficiency, which, if continued at the present rate of decrease, will necessitate such further reductions as will practically bring large part of the operations of the Society in Ireland to a close.

Under these circumstances, the Committee requested Four Gentlemen who have not been intimately connected with the administrations of the Society, and who are, erefore, in a position to form an independent opinion, to constitute themselves a Special Sub-Committee, to investigate and report upon the Critical Financial Position of e Society, and upon its General Management. They were:—

THE REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.
THE REV. GILBERT KARNEY.
THE REV. H. SHARPE, AND
MAJOR-GENERAL HAIG, R.E.

The following are extracts from their Report on the Financial Position of the Society:—

"There can be no doubt that recent changes in the Connemara Mission have caused misgivings in the minds of many of the Friends of the Society, and so reacted nfavourably upon the Funds.

"With reference to this subject, the Sub-Committee will only say that after careful consideration, they are of opinion that these changes were not only right, but evitable, and that no other course of action was open to the Committee than that which they have been most reluctantly compelled to adopt. They further express their nviction that these changes will tend eventually very much to the improvement of the character of the work in that part of Ireland.

"Meanwhile, one thing at least is clear: a work begun, as this was, in faith and prayer, and which has for so many years enjoyed tokens of God's signal blessing, ust not be allowed to fall to the ground. The Sub-Committee are distinctly of opinion that the General Committee have acted with faithfulness and decision throughout e trying circumstances of the past year, and that they may, in dependence upon God, confidently appeal to the supporters of the Society for the help which is now so rgently required."

The Committee have received letters from his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin (Lord Plunket) and from the Lord Bishop of Tuam, cordially endorsing their action in aking this Appeal.

The Committee would, therefore, point out that the need for special help is of the most urgent character, and would call upon their Friends to come forward without lay with such Liberal Contributions as will enable them once more vigorously to prosecute the Missionary operations of the Society in Ireland.

Remittances should be made payable to WM. PASLEY, Lay Secretary, and cheques crossed RANSOM & Co.

FRANCIS MAUDE, R.N., Chairman of Committee.

11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C., July 1, 1885.

The following Contributions have been generously promised:—

NATURAL HEALING.

GENERALLY the causes of disease are of the most simple character, and we may suppose that attention to hygienic measures and natural laws would speedily eliminate the disturbance. Of this, however, very few think. It were far better in many instances to do nothing medicinally, because Nature would work on in her own way, and correct the defect, if some simple, favourable external conditions were afforded. There are many ways in which we can assist Nature in her work; for instance, if we cut our fingers, the only share we take in the work of healing is to join the severed parts together, covering the wound with a false skin to keep out foreign elements, and Nature accomplishes the rest. So in more serious affections, it is always best to let Nature effect the healing, and for us to assist only by affording more favourable conditions under which she can work.

If we can bring to bear upon the deranged system the like agents which Nature employs, it is natural enough to suppose that we are on the road to securing more rapid results than by simply leaving Nature alone. When the system has been weakened by false treatment, or the ailment has been neglected too long, it is incumbent upon us to use such natural methods as are calculated to effect restoration. It is then that Magnetism, which is one of Nature's chief and most potent forces, becomes invaluable. It affords, at once, better conditions under which the recuperative powers can work more effectually, and whereby the cause of the mischief is gradually rectified, and eventually overcome. Nothing foreign to the healthy development of the system is introduced, therefore nothing irritates even the most delicate organism. Quietly the normal, harmonious balance which should ever exist in order to health, is restored, and the various symptoms, perhaps arising from a simple functional irregularity, are eradicated.

The sum of our argument, therefore, is, that all symptoms traceable to some slight defect in the working of one part or another of the complex human frame are amenable to a remedy which can, and doės, assist Nature in her unceasing efforts to remove the causes of ill-health. The Magnetic method is eminently calculated to effect this change, because it is one of the chief, omni-existent energies of Nature, and that most readily applied.

No doubt the diversity in the nature of the cases in which Magnetism has proved beneficial, is surprising to those who have not studied its modus operandi. We are prepared to make allowance for anyone holding such an opinion, because we ourselves have often been astonished at the wonders wrought by Magnetism, yet we can easily explain the ground of its successes.

The following is one of the facts we adduce to prove the soundness of our statements, and for further examples the reader is referred to our seventh biennial report, just issued, which we shall be pleased to send post free to any address:—

FROM MISS STEWARD, St. James' Cary-crescent, Torquay.

"June 18, 1885.—I have much pleasure in adding my testimony to the beneficial results of your Treatment, by means of which my voice has been restored to me after two years and a quarter almost entire loss of it, caused by an attack of bronchial congestion. My general health is also much improved."

Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy, and may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 1,000 names may also be obtained.—B. MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve. And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer.

LONDON SCHOOL BOARD PERSECUTION.

If ever there was a Board endowed with mighty powers, that Board is surely the School Board for London. It practically controls the education of the children of the poor of this vast metropolis, and indirectly influences the education of the whole of the poor children in the country; for, with its unlimited command of the public purse, it can not only build enormously costly schools, and coerce those schools that are supported by voluntary effort, but its administration is copied by the majority of provincial School Boards, so that in effect the policy of the London School Board is the policy of all the Boards in the land. Under its by-laws it can enforce the attendance of children at school till the age of fourteen, and infraction of this provision may be punished by fine and even by imprisonment of the parent.

The power of enforcing attendance should be exercised with the greatest possible consideration for the necessities of the poor. There is in our midst an appalling amount of destitution, Poor-Law statistics to the contrary notwithstanding; and this is increasingly affected by the long-continued depression of trade in the country. The amount of poverty is much more extensive now than when the Education Acts were passed, and if the existing depression could have been foreseen, we very much doubt whether the particular by-law, fixing the age at which children could leave school at fourteen, would ever have been sanctioned. Under present circumstances it can be neither humane nor wise for the Board to appear as prosecutors for enforcing attendance in cases of severe hardship.

Two such cases were recently reported in the daily papers. In one, the parents were summoned for not sending to school a boy over thirteen years of age, and who, it was admitted, was a fair scholar. It appeared that the father had been ill and out of employment for a long time, and the boy helped to support the family by earning a few shillings in a situation which of course he would have to relinquish if sent back to school. Under the circumstances, to press, as the School Board did, for a magisterial order to send the boy to school, seems to us an act of very great harshness, and we are not surprised that Mr. Lushington, the presiding magistrate of the Thames Police Court, regarded it in the same light. He considered it "most arbitrary conduct on the part of the School Board officials in trying to ruin these poor people, for it was nothing better."

In the second case, heard on the same occasion at the same court, the boy had actually passed all but the highest standard examination, and the magistrate remarked that "the officials of the School Board seemed to press unduly upon those who were struggling to keep themselves respectable and eke out a bare existence, while others were allowed to run loose." We cannot regret that the magistrate decided in each case to dismiss the summons, and we feel sure that his action will be endorsed by all who know the extremities to which the poor of this metropolis are driven in order to keep body and soul together. The amount of suffering is already heavy enough, in all conscience, without the addition of such needless and tyrannous prosecutions.

We admit that in discharging its arduous duties the Board has had to contend with great difficulties, in which it has had our sympathy; but we feel that, if prosecutions must take place, then much greater discrimination should be exercised in the selection of cases than appears to have been exhibited in the above reported instances. We have always upheld the right of every child in the land to be educated, but we insist that there is a prior right, and that is, the right to live; and the School Board would do well to recognise this primary right, or there may come about a reaction against the whole policy of the Board.

A CRYING DANGER.

In a noble passage in "Sesame and Lilies," John Ruskin has given it as his opinion that, if there is to be any difference between the education of girls and that of boys, the girls' training should be less frivolous. He urges the necessity of care that her books be not "heaped up in her lap, out of the package of the circulating library, wet with the last and lightest spray of the fountain of folly."

It would, indeed, be well if we could say that only the spray of foolishness damped the literature of the circulating library. Unfortunately such is not the case. Not only are many of the volumes in circulation of a decidedly injurious tendency, irreligious, and even immoral in tone; there are others behind them which are utterly unfit for the reading even of degraded men. The worse than Greek paganism of some of our recent novels, with its substitution of unholy passion for love, and of a brutal and calculating selfishness for brave self-denial, is likely to do more than passing harm. An unclean spirit seems to be taking possession of many modern writers, with the result that much of our popular literature is becoming tainted by a gross and debased materialism.

Quite recently a popular author, whose stories are pre-eminently selected as light reading by women, pictured the heroine of one of her volumes as mourning over her dead hero, and visiting his grave to dream only of decay, and of the possibility of the loved form being transmuted, and taking its place "many legged, in the beetle." One might suppose that perhaps this was the only fitting termination which the author could conceive for a life which contained in itself—brilliant colouring notwithstanding—the essential elements of corruption, were it not for the fact that the hero is only one of a stereotyped series, and that in each of them the same characteristics appear, and are painted as admirable,—brute force being misrepresented as manliness, and selfish lust as love.

Even in our so-called "religious fiction," unhealthy elements are beginning to make their appearance. Scepticism and doubt serve in the religious novel for the coarser traits of character in the other. Looking at some of these productions, even from a lowered standpoint, one is forced to agree with Mr. Ruskin that "the weakest romance is not so stupefying as the lower forms of religious exciting literature." That these things are harmful, there is no room for doubt; for they have the taste of "the husks which the swine did eat." After all, they are English books, and their writers, though they may greatly offend in some respects, have, at any rate, some regard for common decency. If the circulating library contained nothing more injurious, one might be content to wait for an improvement in the public taste, there being fashions in literature as in other matters.

Unfortunately, however, of late, the floodgates of foreign garbage have been opened upon us, and one of our publishers does not hesitate to send out for the delectation of those who cannot overstep the barrier of a foreign language, unabridged reproductions of the vile writings of a literary school whose only ambition seems to be that of minutely depicting depravity so revolting that one would naturally expect to find their volumes met with a cry of execration and disgust.

These shameful publications find their way into the hands of young people in houses where the parents are not careful to see what the library-box contains, and one is afraid to contemplate the result, for we fear it would be impossible to read some of the pages of such volumes, and to retain a pure mind. Even to homes where the parents do exercise some supervision over the supply of literature, the evil things are sent in their yellow dress simply, as "the most recent foreign literature;" they are, therefore, admitted without suspicion.

Not very long ago the attention of one of our leading librarians in a large provincial city was called to the presence upon his shelves of a volume so immoral as to be remarkable, even in a national literature notorious for its depravity. With many professions of ignorance and of thanks, it was removed. A few weeks afterwards, however, it was seen in its place again. There was a demand for it, and the librarian simply had an eye to business in maintaining the supply, and in circulating that which might bring ruin to many a young soul.

An American contemporary calls attention to the terrible evils which result from the sale of cheap illustrated papers of a low, and, in some instances, immoral kind, pictures and literary matter in most cases being of a most objectionable and injurious nature, while the advertisements are of a still more openly vicious description. Such literature has an immense circulation in America, and we are rejoiced to find that the respectable press is taking up the matter with a view to the suppression of journals which encourage vice and pander to depravity, much of which would not exist were it not for the immoral influence of such publications. In North Carolina the circulation of the vile journals has been utterly prohibited by the State, and it is stated that the work of suppression has been commenced in New York.

Some of these wretched publications are regularly and openly on sale in this country, and are largely imitated here. As they can be considered only as "more deadly to the soul than strychnine is to the body," as our American friend tersely puts it, we hope that means will be found to suppress their circulation here also. For years back our "penny dreadfuls" have been bad enough, but of late there has been visible a still worse element of vicious publications, the reading of which is likely to affect most injuriously the morals, not only of those who purchase them, but even of those to whom they are exposed in the public streets. If one of our societies would give some thought to this subject, many a young life might be saved from depravity and death.

It behoves Christian parents also to keep a most watchful eye upon the literature that reaches the hands of their sons and daughters, and to take care that the circulating library is not the medium to them of knowledge derived from publications as dangerous as they are depraved. James Bowker

THE PROTECTION of WOMEN AND GIRLS.

A FEW weeks since it was believed that a Liberal Government would have promoted in the Commons the passing of the "Criminal Law Amendment Bill," for the better Protection of Women and Girls, which had passed the House of Lords. The Bill was to have been committed to Sir William Harcourt's management, and as a Government measure it would have been exposed to Opposition criticism. All this is now changed. Sir William Harcourt, who, if we are correctly informed, was no friend to the Bill, is out of office; his Permanent Under-Secretary is dead; Sir Richard Cross assumes the responsibilities of the Home Department; and Lord Salisbury, who took a leading part in the Select Committee of the Lords for the Better Protection of Girls, is now Prime Minister.

These changes are not unfavourable to the hopes of the Social Purity Reformers, for Lord Salisbury has himself recommended legislation, and is believed to be favourable to raising the age of protection to seventeen years; while Sir Richard Cross bears a character for kindness and morality, which is more than can be said of some statesmen who have been in the service of the Crown. There is one clause (the 9th), for the regulation of the streets, which is foreign to the general purpose of the Bill, and which will be vehemently opposed in some quarters; if this clause be pressed it will endanger the passing of the Bill, on the protecting clauses of which, if the age could be raised, all friends of social purity are agreed.

The powerful pen of our contemporary, The Pall Mall Gazette, has been enlisted in this service. The Editor states that he appointed "a special and secret Commission of Inquiry, to examine into the whole subject." The report of this Commission is appearing in the columns of the Gazette, commencing from Monday last. He describes it as "an authentic record of unimpeachable facts, abominable, unutterable, and 'worse than fables yet have feigned or fear conceived.'" Such an unveiling would be most undesirable, were it not imperatively called for; but as it is certain that no legislation on behalf of morality or for the protection of the innocent victims of fraud, violence, and rampant vice, would be obtained without such exposure, it becomes indispensable that the cloak which has covered the "abominable and unutterable" should be now torn away.

We extract the following portions of the leading article which prefaces the first of this series of revelations, given in Monday's issue of The Pall Mall:—

"'Am I my sister's keeper?' that paraphrase of the excuse of Cain, will not dull the fierce smart of pain which will be felt by every decent man who learns the kind of atrocities that are being perpetrated in cool blood in the very shadow of our churches and within a stone's throw of our Courts. It is a veritable slave trade that is going on around us; but, as it takes place in the heart of London, it is a scandal—an outrage on public morality—even to allude to it. We have kept silence far too long. . . . . There is now an end to that conspiracy of silence by which, after every inquiry, 'the door was each time quickly closed upon the question, as the stone lid used to be shut down, in the Campo Santo of Naples, upon the mass of human corpses that lay festering beneath.' That 'stone lid' is raised now, never again, we may hope, to be closed until something has been done. Under the ruthless compulsion of publicity even those but 'indifferent honest' will do more good than many of the most virtuous when the evil could be hidden out of sight.

"That much may be done, we have good ground for hoping, if only because so little has hitherto been attempted. A dull despair has unnerved the hearts of those who face this monstrous evil, and good men have sorrowfully turned to other fields where their exertions might expect a better return. But the magnitude of this misery ought to lead to the redoubling, not to the benumbing, of our exertions. No one can say how much suffering and wrong is irremediable until the whole of the moral and religious forces of the country are brought to bear upon it. Yet, in dealing with this subject, the forces upon which we rely in dealing with other evils are almost all paralysed. The Home, the School, the Church, the Press are silent. The law is actually accessory to crime. Parents culpably neglect even to warn their children of the existence of dangers of which many learn the first time when they have become their prey. The Press, which reports verbatim all the scabrous details of the divorce courts, recoils in pious horror from the duty of shedding a flood of light upon these dark places, which, indeed, are full of the habitations of cruelty. But the failure of the Churches is, perhaps, the most conspicuous and the most complete. Christ's mission was to restore man to a semblance of the Divine. The child-prostitute of our day is the image into which, with the tacit acquiescence of those who call themselves by his Name, men have moulded the form fashioned in the likeness of God.

"If chivalry is extinct and Christianity is effete, there is still another great enthusiasm to which we may with confidence appeal. The future belongs to the combined forces of Democracy and Socialism, which when united are irresistible. Divided on many points, they will combine in protesting against the continued immolation of the daughters of the people as a sacrifice to the vices of the rich. Of the two, it is Socialism which will find the most powerful stimulus in this revelation of the extent to which, under our present social system, the wealthy are able to exercise all the worst abuses of power which disgraced the feudalism of the Middle Ages. Wealth is power, poverty is weakness. The abuse of power leads directly to its destruction, and in all the annals of crime can there be found a more shameful abuse of the power of wealth than that by which in this nineteenth century of Christian civilisation princes and dukes, and ministers and judges, and the rich of all classes, are purchasing for damnation, temporal if not eternal, the as yet uncorrupted daughters of the poor? It will be said they assent to their corruption. So did the female serfs from whom the seigneur exacted the jus primæ noctis. And do our wealthy think that the assent wrung by wealth from poverty to its own undoing will avert the vengeance and the doom?

"If people can only be got to think seriously about this matter, progress will be made in the right direction. Evils once as universal and apparently inevitable as prostitution have disappeared. Vices almost universal are now regarded with shuddering horror by the least moral of men. Slavery has gone. A slave trader is treated as hostis humani generis. Piracy has disappeared. Intestine war is now almost unknown. Torture has been abolished. May we not hope, therefore, that if we try to do our duty to our sisters and to ourselves, we may greatly reduce, even although we never entirely extirpate the plague of prostitution? For let us remember that—

> 'Every hope which rises and grows broad
> In the world's heart, by ordered impulse streams
> From the great heart of God.'

And if that ideal seems too blinding bright for human eyes, we can at least do much to save the innocent victims who unwillingly are swept into the maelstrom of vice. And who is there among us, bearing the name of man, who will dare to sit down any longer with folded hands in the presence of so great a wrong?"

These words may seem to be, as they certainly are, very strong, and overwhelming in their dread suggestiveness. And yet to anyone who performs the painful task of reading the unspeakably awful details that follow, even they appear tame and inadequate in the last degree. When in a recent issue we compared modern London to Sodom of old, and ventured on the opinion that only by some tremendous fire of public exposure could any hope of purification arise for our city, we little dreamt that this fierce fire was so soon to be kindled. God grant that He may have sent it in mercy, to avert the still more terrible fire of righteous judgment with which He might well visit us.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

In Paris there are said to be at present 3800 governesses out of employment.

The Jesuits have bought the house in the island of Elba inhabited by Napoleon after his second abdication. They intend to found a college there.

M. Hermann Krüger, whose health has compelled him to leave Lessouto, has been charged by the French Mission Committee to consider the foundation of a Protestant Mission amongst the natives of Algeria.

The International Congress of Freethinkers, convoked at Rome, was a miserable failure. It was only international in name, for Italy, France, Spain, and South America alone were represented. Nine-tenths of their anti-clerical notabilities were absent. No one came from England, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, or Portugal.

Protestants in Mahé.—For several years a small congregation of evangelical Protestants (converted Hindoos) has existed in Mahé, a French territory of India. This small community was connected with one of the mission stations of Basle. At the request of several fathers of families in Mahé, the society at Basle decided to open an evangelical school there, but they had much trouble in gaining the permission of the French authorities. At last the governor of Pondicherry gave his consent, and the school was inaugurated in 1881. It now numbers a hundred pupils.

Berlin.—Mr. Julius Rohrbach continues his evangelistic work in connection with the mission and coffee-room, 8, Bremer-street, Moabit, Berlin. His third annual report tells of steady progress in the midst of a suburban population numbering nearly 45,000, chiefly working-men, for whom only one Lutheran church is provided. The Sunday services at the mission are largely attended, and many, it is believed, have been brought to Christ in the various meetings. A new branch has been opened at Charlottenburg, for which help is needed. Mr. Donald Matheson, Queen's-gate, S.W., acts as treasurer for the mission. Christian travellers through Berlin are invited to visit Mr. Rohrbach.

A Remarkable Awakening.—Atlanta has been visited with a great tidal wave of spiritual awakening such as was never seen in that city before. It came through the International Convention of the Y.M.C. Associations, and it came upon all as a surprise. Since the Convention closed meetings have been held every night at private houses. Forty thousand dollars have been subscribed for a Y.M.C.A. building. Among the converts are Henry Grady, a well-known contributor to The Century, and Major Howell, his associate in the editorship of the Atlanta Constitution, who lately declined the office of consul at Manchester. One of the most influential members of the most fashionable club has resigned, saying, "My money shall go for good after this;" other leading members stopped drinking, and a prominent liquor dealer has given up his business.—Christian Leader.

BIBLE-CARRIAGE IN AUSTRALIA.

DEAR BROTHER,—We wrote some time ago telling of the great success the Lord gave us in commencing the Bible-carriage work in the colony of Victoria. Eight months have gone since the opening at Geelong; we have travelled the country in the mining districts, circulated thousands of Testaments, hundreds of Bibles, and many thousands of Gospel books, which are doing the desired work in the hearts of the people, to the glory of God.

We have not had better work, or more attentive intelligent crowds listening to the Word of Life, during the many years of labour in England, than we have had in the up country mining districts of Victoria. Already the new Bible-carriage has seen some hard service, the hot sun opening the broad panels of seasoned timber with which it was built, and the heavy rains during the winter months soaking through the canvas covering as it stood in open yards or market grounds. Eternity will show the fruits of this work, from the many tokens of blessing continually coming to us as we toil on in weakness, made strong by the mighty God of Jacob.

During the past sixteen weeks we have been labouring between the great mining city of Sandhurst and a place called Eagle Hawk, where a population of Cornish miners is located, four miles from Sandhurst. The power of God has been upon the professing Christians especially; they wonder how we live. We go forth selling books cheaper than they can be purchased in the colonies, and making no collections, and taking nothing of the Gentiles, giving the Gospel free, without money and without price. God gives his blessing, while the Bible, opened out in simplicity, becomes a new book to old professors, and sinners hear and live. We are now on the way towards Melbourne, having been a round of two hundred miles through the country before beginning work at the great city.

Leaving Frank Webster to see the carriage on its way to an agricultural township called Thyneton. I return to Ballarat, where I have had another carriage built of lighter material than No. 1, and more convenient to drive into the small townships, yet with as large a platform for preaching the Word, and more room, because of dispensing with the large inside cupboards. Beautiful as the texts of Scripture are on the first, No. 2 will preach as it goes, equally as loud.

We have an intimation that our brother and fellow-soldier in Christ, Harry Hind, is coming out this English summer. He and Brother Brewster worked together in England and Wales. Should he come for Bible-carriage work, they can take No. 1 carriage to Sydney, with a tolerably good stock of Bibles and books, and open the field of "New South Wales," a purpose that occupied my mind long before leaving England. The Lord permits the work to expand and develop as we travel on. There is an immense opening for work for any whose eye is single and whose heart is right with God, for the honour and glory of his Son.

The Lord has given me to build a good dry wooden shed, iron-roofed and zinc outside, for the safe-keeping of boxes of Bibles and books, some of which He has enabled me to purchase, and some He has sent free through the kindness of gentlemen in England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, interested in this great work of speaking the Word both by the circulation of Scriptures and preaching. A Christian man in Ballarat, leaseholder of market ground here, has rented me a piece of ground for the sale of books and preaching the Gospel. Some of the young Christians have already got into harness in the work, and will be very useful in working No. 2 carriage while I am away with Brother Brewster in Melbourne working No. 1.

We praise God for his goodness, help, power, and blessing, being made strong in the daily strength which He supplies for this glorious work, spreading the savour of the name of Christ to a perishing world.—Yours in Him,

JOHN HAMBLETON.

CLUBTOWN.

AN INCIDENT IN A YOUNG PREACHER'S EXPERIENCE.

By REV. H. MARTIN KELLOG.

HIS head throbbed painfully, his pulse was high, the heat of the room oppressive. All was sunshine and bloom without; the farmers were busy in the fields; the world seemed bright. He left the room, and sauntered down the road, not knowing or caring much whither he was going. He overtook two ragged urchins fighting. He began to talk with them, and they became interested. He told about little boys who swore and became bad men, and good boys who went to Sabbath-school, and grow up to be good men. They did not know that it was wrong to swear, nor much about God, the Bible, or the Sabbath. Their shyness worn off; they asked questions and took in the replies. They walked on with him. Soon they reached a cluster of miserable little huts, with plenty of long-eared, lank dogs, cadaverous fowls, squealing swine, and miserably clothed, unwashed, ugly looking beings, and half-naked children, that seemed fit companions.

The urchins pompously led the way to the open door, and exultantly exclaimed, "Here's the man what talks good." They looked, the man swore, and ordered him away; the woman swore and stamped her foot; a hideous old woman swore and screamed; the dozen children set up a deafening yell; the dogs barked and snapped; the pigs squealed; the hens clacked, all in the front room! For a moment bedlam reigned, and the prospect was forbidding enough. A few calm words from the young man brought peace to the troubled household. The room was the worst place he had ever seen human beings dwelling in.

Mr. Henry (as we will call him) said that he had recently come to preach in the white church in the village, and wanted to become acquainted with the people in their homes. The old woman interrupted him with an oath: "Wall, ye've jist come to the wrong place, I kin tell ye. Don't ye mock us"—shaking her fist threateningly—"by calling us yer pepel. What ye've cum here for? We's don't want the likes av ye here. Ye git out!"

"I am right in calling you my people, if you'll be my people, come to hear me preach, and let me come to your house to talk and pray with you. I see that you are poor; so am I. But Christ preached the Gospel to the poor, and so do I."

The old man speaks up: "That's it. Ha! ha! say that agin. That's old Parson Brown, out an' out; jist his talk zackly, twenty years agone, when I heard them things. Them's my sentiments. Never mind the old woman; she's half crazy. Talk on, ole chap, talk on."

Mr. Henry began to talk again, when a man suddenly darkened the door with another growling dog, but on seeing a stranger, rushed off like a deer.

"Ye fool! cum in. This 'ere man's big, he's a Gospel spouter, he's done ye gude; cum in!" And she runs out after him across the road to a haystack, but he don't "cum." She calls back, "I's got him caged."

So Mr. Henry went out, followed by all the human crew, and sits down upon the hay, soon to find himself surrounded by a score of human beings hungering for the Word. He opens his Testament and preaches the truth as it is in Jesus, simple, fresh, unadulterated by worldly wisdom, science or metaphors. Never was a more interested audience in cathedral with lofty ceilings and coloured windows and flashing chandeliers, than that little ragged, ignorant crowd by the haystack. At first some jeered and swore and threatened, only to be silenced by the old woman, who was a tyrant mistress. After two hours' talking and reading he proposed prayer, and they all knelt with him most reverently. As he petitioned the throne of grace for their instruction and salvation, they were subdued to deep emotion. Some wept aloud, some groaned in deep contrition, some cried frantically for mercy.

As he rose and bade them farewell, they all gathered round and shook hands with many quaint expressions of endearment and entreaties "to cum agin soon." Returning to his boarding place he related his singular adventure. "Why, they are the Prones. A more miserable set of beings never lived. They are the terror of the whole neighbourhood! It's not safe to go near their place after dark. It's known far and near as 'Clubtown,' because of their desperate character. It's a sink of iniquity. You were lucky to get away alive." Such was the intelligence he received about them.

In a few days he made them a second visit, and never was a minister of the Gospel more cordially welcomed. Long and interesting was the interview. On rising to leave, the old woman says: "Can't ye cum out an' hould meetin' here some nite; we'll git a big crowd. Lots want to see ye. We don't want to cum to the big church with them stuck-up folks. They'd be skecred, so'd we. We want you all to ussel's. We's mighty poor creatures, God knows, but ye say Christ died for jist sich as we, so won't ye cum?"

Who could resist such an invitation to preach the Gospel? He told them that he would come out the next Sunday afternoon if a suitable place could be obtained. After several houses were discussed and rejected as unsuitable, some one suggested a neighbouring grove, and one man said that he would get the consent of the owner. On Sunday afternoon, though the heat was intense, the mercury running as high as 105 degrees in the shade, Mr. Henry and an elder of the church drove out three miles to the grove. They were happily disappointed in finding over a hundred people expectantly waiting, quietly sitting upon board seats ranged around a high platform, which were placed there by volunteer hands. Hearty were the exclamations of delight as he shook hands with them all, and then mounted the extemporised pulpit. One uncouth fellow shouted out, "Hurra! we's gude as stuck-up folks now; we's got a parson an' church of our own, God bless him. Ha! ha!" with approving Amens from the crowd.

Eager was their attention to his exposition of the parable of the Prodigal Son, especially as he told about the prodigal's return, and welcome to the father's feast. Then the elder gave a short exhortation, and two or three of the rough men arose and tremblingly asked for prayers, and that he would preach some more. Several prayers were fervently offered, deep emotion prevailed; all felt the presence of a higher Being. A unanimous vote was taken to have continued services. To shorten this long story, I will summarise the sequel. Mr. Henry preached in that grove every Sunday afternoon during his stay there, to increasing audiences. "The Clubtown Church" became extensively celebrated, and many "stuck-up" folks from time to time came from curiosity. A Sabbath-school was organised, which comprised all the regular audience, from the grey-haired grandparents to the babe in its mother's arms. Christian ladies were found to take classes. It was named the "Henry Union Sabbath-school." "Clubtown" gradually gave way to "Henryville," and the character of the hamlet changed as much. The houses assumed a very decent appearance, the people were more tidily clothed, and arose to a height of respectability previously unknown. Blasphemy and Sabbath-breaking gave way to prayers and religious reading. Many could not read themselves, and would get some one to read aloud. They loved the grove meetings, and reverenced the young preacher. Many struggled to break off vices, and some rejoiced in practical regeneration.

Such was the work begun, and yet progressing; for this is no idle tale, no fancy sketch, but the narration of fact, with the omission of many interesting details. Who can tell the end? the amount of good accomplished? how many jewels the Judge shall on the final day count among them? What Christian need despond at the apparent barrenness of his endeavours? Should we not obey the injunction of Christ to go into the by-ways and hedges and compel the world's poor to come to the Gospel feast?—Gospel Union News.

SEEKING SIGNS.

By Rev. H. J. Gamble, Upper Clapton.

Sermon preached on Sunday, June 28.

I AM not addressing myself, at this time, to those who disbelieve in miracles, but to those who believe in them "over-much." In a tract recently sent to me by its respected author, Admiral Fishbourne, which may be regarded as a fair representation of the views of many, the following passages occur :—

> "Had not the Church, in accommodating itself to the Pagan world, withdrawn from obedience to the Word, resisted the Holy Ghost, &c., it never could have overlooked the express and unmistakable terms of the Church's great commission, of which actual holiness and Divine healing were essential characteristics ; nor would it have sought to disciple the world with a Spiritless Paganism, or a mutilated Gospel, shorn, not only of its prime characteristic Divine life, but also without the promised 'mighty signs and wonders,' greater than those wrought by the Lord Himself, that were to authenticate the Divine origin of the Gospel, as similar signs had testified to the Divine Master."
> "The blindness of the universal Church to the necessity for Divine signs, as credentials to a living Church, can be accounted for only on the supposition that it is influenced by other than the Divine Spirit."

Here are plain, dogmatical statements which might have been put quite as clearly, and yet less offensively. It is a serious matter to tell a Christian brother, who differs from you, that he is influenced by "other than the Divine Spirit." But let it pass, and with it this painful illustration of the want of Christian charity :—

> "Many who reject Divine healing do so rather than accede to God's demand for the holiness of heart indispensable for a full cure."

Now, in opposition to those who maintain that miraculous gifts are the heritage of the Church, and are only lost through unbelief, I have to submit the following thoughts.

A word or two as to the nature of a miracle. It used to be defined as "a violation of the laws of nature," but it is thought that a more exact definition of it is "a phenomenon which suggests the working of a Personal Power, producing results not explicable by what we observe in the ordinary course of nature." Whether it be possible or not depends on the existence of a God—a personal intelligence who acts upon it, not only in the ordinary way, but in an extraordinary way, employing forces of which we know nothing, influences which we little thought to exist.

To those of us who believe in "God Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth," there is no difficulty in believing in miracles as before defined. The difficulty would be not to believe in them—to suppose it possible that God has no other methods of working than those with which we are acquainted ; that there are not unknown as well as known laws. For, as has been often pointed out, to think that God never modifies or overrules the action of familiar laws is really to ascribe less power to Him than to man, because man is always doing this ; as, to use a simple illustration, when a steamboat is driven against the wind and waves. Surely what man does on his little scale, God does in his grand way whenever necessity arises for his so doing.

We cannot expect, however, that this will be frequently done—that it will be a common, much less an every-day, occurrence. There is nothing more wonderful, or essential to our comfort, not only than the reign of law, but the uniformity of its operations ; that the order of nature is, on the whole, settled order—not liable to many disturbances ; that the same causes continue to produce the same effects, and that, therefore, we can make our calculations and know how to shape our conduct. The world would be a scene of anarchy if not ruled by law, even though under the control of the Great Lawgiver, and of scarcely less confusion if He perpetually interfered with it.

Still, there are and have been such interferences, as we learn from Scripture, which is a record of God's miraculous power. In reading the Scriptures, however, I am struck with the paucity of the miracles. Until Jesus Christ came, who, as the Great Lord of Nature, showed his mastery over it, and held all its elements in his kingly hand, there were comparatively few signs and wonders. There is not a trace of miracles in the patriarchal age—2500 years—as Dr. S. Cox points out. The age of miracles begins with the mission of Moses. Then there is a partial suspension of them, and subsequently they appear on a larger scale, and are wrought more frequently, to be followed by their entire cessation for 400 years prior to the advent of Christ. All this is pointed out by the very able Scripture expositor just referred to, and is worth considering.

According to the faith healers, God would, but for unbelief, work miracles every day—more, probably, in one year, than in the six thousand years that have gone. John the Baptist came preaching, but no signs and wonders attested the work of the greatest that had been born of woman. It is computed that the Saviour wrought thirty-three—the supernatural power dwelling in Him, continually flowing forth from Him. And yet, perhaps, He as much attests his miracles as they attest Him ; some think, rather more. They were the manifestation of his glory, the proof of his compassion for human misery, and they evidently convinced some of his Messiahship—Nicodemus, to wit. And yet He condemned the sign-seeking age in which He lived, and called the perpetual craving for the miraculous the mark of an evil generation. And He clearly puts the moral before the miraculous, as a sign of his Messiahship, when, after enumerating the works He had done, He adds, "and the poor have the Gospel preached to them."

But not only did Christ work miracles Himself, when He sent the seventy forth on their mission. He endowed them also with miraculous power, or, to speak more strictly, permitted them to work miracles in his name—exercised his power through their instrumentality. So, again, the Apostles "tarried at Jerusalem until endued with power from on high." And the Apostles again imparted the miraculous gift by the laying on of hands. Here and there, as with Stephen and Philip, and John Mark, Paul's helper, we have an exceptional case ; but, otherwise, they ordained elders, and it was from the elders that Timothy received his gift, and others theirs.

But it is contended that the same gifts belonged to all believers, an appeal being made to Mark xvi. 17, 18 : "And these signs shall follow them that believe ; In my name shall they cast out devils ; they shall speak with new tongues ; they shall take up serpents ; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall in no wise hurt them ; they shall lay hands on the sick (literally the infirm), and they shall recover." Such is the famous passage so confidently appealed to, with regard to which Canon Cook is very strong as to its genuineness, but it is very doubtful whether it is genuine.

If you look at the Revised Version you will find a blank space left by the Revisers between the 8th and 9th verses, and the following note in the margin : "The two oldest Greek MSS. and some other authorities omit from verse 9 to the end. Some other authorities have a different ending to the Gospel." Now, I submit that this throws such serious doubt on its genuineness that we may well pause before accepting it. And though some able scholars have decided in its favour, an imposing array of names, as a whole more distinguished, might be cited as opposed to it.

Leaving the scholars, however, to contend about it, we may ask : "Is there any corroborative evidence in its favour ?" I turn to Matthew's Gospel xxviii. 18—20, and I find there no power to heal given to all who were to preach the Gospel, and, strange to say, neither Luke nor John give the commission to the Apostles at all. I pause, therefore, before accepting so exceptional a passage as proving that the gift of healing was bestowed on all who believed, especially when Paul in writing to the Corinthians implies that it was not so— "Have all gifts of healing ?"

There are strong reasons for regarding all miraculous gifts as having ceased in the Christian Church, some of which I proceed to lay before you.

(1) They were gradually withdrawn from the Church. It seems as if when their end had been accomplished they naturally declined. The middle of the second century is about the time when it is computed that Christianity had gained a firm footing, and the signs, therefore, would be no longer required to establish its authority. A confident appeal has been made to the testimony of the Fathers as proving their continuance ; but nothing can be more contradictory than their language, for they both assert and deny their existence. The explanation of this probably is, as has been suggested, that it was Apostolical miracles they spoke of as ceasing ; others, and strange ones many of them were, as still being wrought. Chrysostom says : "Argue not, because miracles do not happen now, that they did not happen then. In those times they were profitable, and now they are not" (Hom. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3).

Augustine writes in a similar strain : "Why, say they, do not these miracles take place now, which, as you preach to us, took place once ? I might answer that they were necessary before the world believed, that it might believe" (De Civ. Dei, xxii. 8). He adds that miracles were wrought in his time, but not so public or well attested as the miracles of the Gospels.

No doubt there were many who professed to work miracles at that time ; but where is the proof that they did so ? Let it be produced. Whilst, on the contrary, there is direct evidence from testimony, of Apostolic miracles having declined. "Oh," it is said, "they have been lost through the unbelief of the Church." But, pray, when did this unbelief begin ? I have always thought that the first and second centuries of the Church were pre-eminently distinguished for piety and zeal—it was the age of confessors and martyrs ; that, however dark the night of the Middle Ages, most saintly men were to be found. I have, further, understood that, from the time of the Reformation until now, there have been in the Church of Christ men of the highest spiritual attainments—some of them pre-eminent for faith—whose lives have been fully consecrated to the Saviour. Were they so full of unbelief that they could not heal the sick ? It is simply incredible.

(2) There is an intimation, and something more, in 1 Cor. xiii., that miraculous gifts were to cease. A brief reference was made to this in my last discourse, but time only permitted me to quote verse 8, "Love never faileth ; but whether there be prophecies, they shall be done away ; whether there be tongues, they shall cease ; whether there be knowledge, it shall be done away."

As I expected, I have been told that I mutilated the passage, and that the words should have been added : "When that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away." I will add them now. Observe the reasoning of the Apostle : Paul found the Corinthian Church split into parties, and filled with spiritual pride in consequence of its great gifts, and wrote this beautiful chapter to show to it a more excellent way." If, indeed, he tells them, there was one miraculous gift they should specially desire, it was "the gift of prophesying," not the gift of healing, but greater than any gifts were spiritual graces. Of these, one was pre-eminent—love. The miraculous gifts, he affirms, were to cease when the Church, which was at that time in a state of infancy, should arrive at maturity—be perfected—just as what was suitable for a "childish" mind was put away by the "man"—but faith, hope, and love were to abide.

The sole reference to a future state is at verse 12, as Paul, after his wont, diverges, and carries his thoughts forward to the absolute perfection of heaven. But it is to destroy all the force of his reasoning, and of his earnest exhortation to "follow after love," to regard the cessation of miraculous gifts as simply taking place in heaven. What need was there for him to tell them that ?

(3) The continuance of miracles, their perpetuation to the close of time, involves a contradiction. It is, in part, its rareness that constitutes a miracle, a sign, a wonder. If the healing of men by faith were of common occurrence, the commoner it became the less significant it would grow. Multiply your number of miracles, and, in proportion as you multiply them, you diminish their influence. Even the miracles of Christ, though the later ones were greater than the earlier, appear to have produced less impression, for the hostility against Him increased after his raising of Lazarus.

(4) Miraculous gifts are not needed at the present day. In the times of the Apostles, God gave by them "testimony to the word of his grace," and that testimony having been given suffices for all time, as valuable now as then. Besides, there is better evidence now. "No one," says Admiral Fishbourne, "can be fully assured as to the reality of Divine truth, except by Divine attestation. This we have in the witness of the Holy Ghost and in Divine healing, which latter all, in and out of the Church, can witness."

But is there not a better attestation than that of Divine healing for the body, in Divine healing for the soul? We show the objector to the Gospel the drunkard made sober, the thief made honest, the sensualist made pure, the blasphemer praying, the slaves of sin, free, the spritually dead, alive; and does the faith healer mean to affirm that any bodily cure which he has effected is half so convincing of the power of the Gospel as these? When Dives prayed that Lazarus might be sent to warn his brethren; when he pleaded, "If one be sent to them from the dead, they will repent," he was met with the stern reply—"If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded if one rise from the dead."

For anyone to contend at the present day, when Christianity has become its own evidence, when proofs of its divinity of every conceivable kind are multiplying year by year; when it stands, like "the angel in the sun," in the very centre of light; when tens and hundreds of thousands give testimony to the cure of spiritual diseases, so dire and awful that they throw all physical evil into the shade; when those who were fouler than any leper are cleansed, and more paralysed in will than any paralytic, whose withered arm hangs helpless by his side, become firm in purpose, and resolute in their choice. That healing of bodily sickness is needed to attest its divine origin, is to appeal from the greater proofs to the lesser.

What are the crutches sent up to the platform at the Faith-healing Conference, or the mysterious disappearance of some long-standing disease, a case of common occurrence with the medical profession, in comparison with such testimony that Jesus is a Saviour, the Gospel divine? We do not want "doctors, clergymen, ladies and gentlemen to testify to the reality of the cures wrought upon them to help us to receive the Gospel," when we have far stronger proof of its Divinity than any that they can offer. For what were the "greater works" which Christ promised to his disciples that they should do? By no possibility could they surpass his miracles. The "greater works" must, therefore, be sought in a spiritual direction—in the marvels they wrought through preaching the Gospel—their works in this respect surpassing those which He wrought when on earth; "because," said He, "I go to my Father." His power, after his atoning death, and his ascension to the right hand of Power, having received of the Father and poured out on men the gift of the Holy Ghost, was on a higher plane than in the days of his flesh on earth.

And it may be well to remember that these words were addressed, not generally, but specially, to the Apostles. "He that believeth on Me," cannot refer to the general body of Christ's people, for the gift of working miracles has always been limited in its extent. One great error of interpreting Scripture, that which I believe lies at the root of the faith-healing heresy, is that of men appropriating to themselves promises which Christ made to the Apostles.

Still further: Miracles, as a rule, do not carry with them such power of conviction as moral means. They left Pharaoh with a hardened heart, and led very few of the Jews savingly to believe on Christ. After an age of miracles only 120 disciples were found in the upper room at Jerusalem, and Jerusalem remained ungathered and unsaved.

One great result of miraculous gifts did indeed follow in the Apostolic age, but it was not after bodily healing. It was when "the gift of prophecy was exercised," and one came into the midst, and when the "secrets of his heart were made manifest," fell down and worshipped God, and declared that "God was with them of a truth."

Did not Paul say, "The Jews seek after a sign, but we preach Christ crucified?" Was it not "by manifestation of the truth that he commended himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God?" Has not the Gospel spread to a most marvellous extent amongst the heathen, though our missionaries, apart from the use of means, have never pretended to heal the sick? In short, is not the modern appeal to miracles as confirmatory of the Gospel, the substitution of material evidence for moral proof, taking us back to the very infancy of Christianity; attaching more importance to the senses, to the eye, the ear, the hand, than to the reason and conscience, and raising again with renewed force the old controversy about miracles? There is nothing whatever, then, I repeat, in the New Testament to imply that the power of working miracles extends beyond those on whom the gift was originally conferred, and yet, because Jesus Christ gave this power to the seventy, and to the Apostles, to whom also He "gave the power of the keys and to remit sin," here is a class of men, some of them coming we know not whence, and many of them teaching doctrines of a most erroneous character, and most of them, I suppose, never called by the Church to do the work of an evangelist, coolly appropriating to themselves these wonderful gifts. Hear Admiral Fishbourne again:—

> "There is no authority for preaching the kingdom that does not embrace 'signs and wonders' in the power of Christ. Therefore they are a necessary part of the Gospel; so no sufficient extension of Christ's kingdom can obtain unless there is a full declaration of the commission given to all Christians with its Divine authentication by signs and wonders."

Indeed! Has Christ said to all his disciples, "Preach and heal?" Every Christian may, and certainly ought to testify of Christ and his salvation, but must he possess the qualification of performing signs and wonders, and claim an interest in the prayer recorded Acts iv. 29, 30? "Shut your Bibles, close your lips, descend from the platform, all ye evangelists who cannot heal the sick!" Does the Admiral mean this? If not, what does he mean?

The greatest pretender to miraculous power has been the Church of Rome, and the evidence for many of its miracles is apparently as strong as that adduced by faith healers. In The Lancet of June 21, 1885, Dr. Buchanan, Professor of Clinical Surgery at Glasgow University, writes thus: "I have no doubt that some of the persons who went (to the Grotto of Lourdes) lame and crippled were restored to the use of their limbs, and were relieved of pains and aches." He thinks that such cases can be accounted for by a sudden change of the nerve condition, and gives an account of two cases in his own experience, in one of which he said to the patient, who had been confined to her bed for a lengthened period: "Get out of bed at once!" She declared she could not move (and for months she had not even altered her position in bed without help). He said, "You can move quite well, come out of bed!" When, to the surprise of her husband and sister, who looked perfectly thunderstruck, she came out of bed with almost no help and stood alone. He then said, "Walk across the floor, and without demur she walked without assistance, and said, "I can walk quite well, I knew you could cure me. My pains are gone." This was in October, 1875. The lady was in February, 1885, in fair health. Dr. Buchanan, like a wise man, says that he does not pretend to explain the case, but that it was just as miraculous as any of the cures alleged to have been performed at Lourdes or elsewhere. He gives another equally remarkable case, which I cannot now quote, and with perfect frankness says "that there are other reported cures," the official reports of which he has not seen, and which, therefore, he can neither affirm nor deny, to which the explanation as above is not applicable. "They are," he adds, "beyond my understanding." Exactly so—as was said in a former discourse "We are surrounded by mysteries." Nay, I go further, I do not contend that God always acts according to well-known laws or that He binds Himself by them.

The supernatural is around and about us. Not all the rationalism or scepticism of the age, not the clear and penetrating light which science pours on every wonder, not the discovery of the impostures that have been palmed on the credulous, can effectually dispose of all the marvels which are recorded, and to which testimony that has not been shaken is borne.

We have, it is true, got far beyond the age of myths and legends, and the superstitious fancies of our ancestors have, for the most part, died out. Still there are dreams, and visions, and magnetic forces centering in certain indviduals, enabling them to perform wonderful things, and there is evidence for all this, so perfectly trustworthy that we are constrained to admit that there are more things in the world than our philosophy dreams of, experience verifies, or reason confirms. But this only shows the need of exercising a sober judgment and a becoming modesty, and is very different from associating miraculous gifts with the preaching of the Gospel now, ascribing them to faith.

It is easy to understand why these gifts were useful at its first preaching, and why they should not be needed at the present time. They were claimed by the Saviour, who thus called attention to Himself and proclaimed the benevolence of his mission. Medical art was almost unknown in his day, though in the house of seclusion—"the infirmary" of the leper—you have the germ of the hospital of modern times. But Christ found the sick, poor, and sorrowful uncared for, and desired to convince men that He cared for their bodies as well as their souls. The evidence once given is as satisfactory now as then, perhaps, even more so; because at this distance of time we can look at it more dispassionately. Nor do we deny the influence of the Gospel on the bodies as well as the souls of men, or doubt that much disease would disappear and much more abate in its violence if men lived as "soberly and Godly" as the Gospel teaches them they ought to live; nor do we doubt the value of believing earnest prayer in connection with sickness; or in God's answer to it, when that prayer asks for what is according to his will. This is one thing; it is quite another to contend that the Gospel is not "fully preached" without "anointing" accompanies it, and that sickness would be cured if there were more faith, distressing, beyond measure, those not healed, by the cruel accusation of a lack of faith and defective holiness, and inflating some with a spiritual pride that is intolerable.

Let those who have found comfort, peace, and healing from this doctrine remember that life is not over yet, that they little know what strange things may yet befall them, what extremity of anguish they may have to bear, and, if at any time sickness and suffering should visit them, let them, when awakened to their error, not lose faith or hope in God, but remember that He delivers in sickness as well as from it. And let those who teach this doctrine remember that there is another side to it—the cruel disappointing of the hopes they have raised, and the still crueler insinuation that defective faith and holiness have been the cause of it—"want of full obedience and full surrender to Christ." These censorious judgments upon others are really too bad, and deserve severe rebuke.

A gentleman, unknown to me, whom I met in the City the other day, in referring to the case mentioned in my first discourse, of a lady in my congregation who had been cured by faith, but had suffered a relapse, actually said to me, "Probably your unbelief affected her!" "My unbelief?" was my amazed reply. "Why, she has not heard me preach for years, nor have I ever conversed with her on the subject."

In conclusion, let me say, to prevent misrepresentation, that I am a firm believer in the power and love of our heavenly Father; that I believe that "natural laws" are not blind forces that hold us in their relentless grasp, but God's laws, all of them under his control: that I believe He has interposed, and can do so again to modify and overrule them; that it is right for us to pray to Him, but that all our prayers must be in subordination to his will; and that his will, not our faith, has the ordering of our affairs; that, without working any miracle, God can in various ways give deliverance from sickness, and that our dependence on Him cannot be too humble and sincere. But I further believe that we are to look for his working along the line of the ordinary laws by which he governs the world, that we must use the means He has provided when we exercise faith in Him, and not expect Him, for the reasons already assigned, to work miracles for us.

Of the true piety and humility of many faith healers I entertain no doubt. Nor do I question many of the wonderful results that follow believing prayer. But let the faith healers record their failings as well as their successes (though, if they did so, they have an easy escape; "it was your lack of faith," they say), and let them not wantonly accuse those who differ from them of a lack of holiness and faith.

Above all, let us care more for the healing of our souls from uncharitableness, envy, pride, and every form of sin, and there is one prayer in which surely we can all unite:—

"Heal us, Immanuel, we are here
Waiting to feel thy touch;
Deep wounded souls to Thee repair,
And, Saviour, we are such."

May God give us all such healing, and bring us at last to that world where the inhabitant shall no more say "I am sick," for "the people that dwell there have been forgiven their iniquity." Amen.

Note.—This sermon, unlike the former, has been revised by its author, who is aware of some slight inaccuracies in the first discourse, but from no fault of the reporter. Those who heard the last will observe a few passages which were omitted whilst preaching—the preacher having been physically unfit to deliver the whole discourse; some others have been partly re-written.

TEMPERANCE FESTIVAL, NEWCASTLE.

THE fourth annual festival of the North of England Temperance Festival Association was held on the Town Moor, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Wednesday and Thursday, July 1 and 2, and was a great success. The weather was very fine, the heat of the sun being enjoyably tempered with brisk and refreshing breezes. These gatherings were inaugurated to counteract the evil of the races formerly held on the same ground, but now removed to Gosforth Park some two miles northward. They owe their continued and unbroken success mainly to the efforts of Councillor W. D. Stephens, President of the Association, and the band of energetic workers which he has organised.

The varied and moving scenes presented on the broad expanse of common-land on both days of the festival were singularly animating and gladdening. It was estimated that more than 100,000 people (many more than on any "Race Wednesday" on record) were thus gathered together on the first day, whilst, on the second day, the number could not be much less. One of the greatest charms of these occasions is the prevalence of the family element. Though numerous and large schools and Bands of Hope excursions were present, there were also thousands of bright and happy children romping about under the care of their parents. Blue ribbons were conspicuous from their great numbers. In short, the promoters of the leviathan festival have again demonstrated the fact that the busy communities of a great city can appreciate and enjoy a season of quiet pleasure without intoxicating drink and its evil associations.

During the two days Gospel and Temperance addresses were given, and many games and athletic and other competitions engaged in. One of the most noteworthy features was "the Arab's Treat;" each day some 1300 poor children were physically regaled and provided with games, specially arranged for them. Temperance sermons were preached at various places in town, on the previous Sunday. During the festival Bishop Wilberforce and other prominent friends of the cause paid visits to the poor, and altogether the event is likely to leave behind it many pleasant memories.

"MARVELLOUSLY HELPED" is a record of a year's labour in connection with the Theatrical Mission. It is full of interesting facts concerning the good being done among those employed on the stage. A special appeal is made for £3500 to complete the new building now in progress. Collecting cards will be forwarded to those who may be inclined to render aid. These, with copies of this pamphlet, can be obtained from the Director, Mr. Courthorpe Todd, 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

FLOODS IN THE BASSES PYRENNEES.

THE poor peasants of Sauveterre de Blaru are suffering from a terrible flood, which took place on June 10. A friend who lives there writes me that owing to some very hot weather, which melted the snow on the heights, and was then followed by incessant rain, the river rose to the height of ten feet, causing a dreadful inundation of the surrounding country. The people are mostly peasants. Many have lost their all. The beautiful fields of maize, hay, and corn, are now covered with thick mud and huge stones, presenting a sad scene of desolation.

My friend is trying to raise funds to help the poor sufferers, and I hope some of the benevolent public in England may be led to respond to this appeal for help. The need is very pressing, so the smallest contributions, sent at once, will be doubly acceptable and gratefully acknowledged by yours truly, (Mrs.) H. M. Robertson.

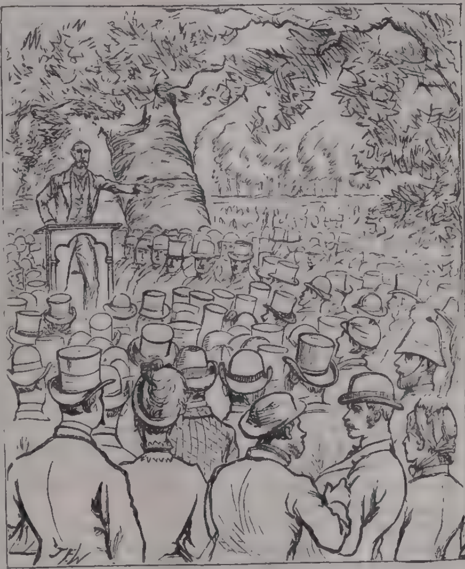
HYDE-PARK MISSION.

ON Tuesday evening of last week at Stafford Rooms, Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the annual meeting of the Hyde-park Mission. The financial report showed the receipt and expenditure of about £430, a small sum compared with the work accomplished. Mr. Charles Cook, the originator and conductor, showed that the work is carried on (1) in Hyde Park in the open-air, (2) in the Metropolitan Music Hall on Sunday evenings, (3) in Hyde-park Hall, where fellowship meetings are held, (4) in the Restaurant, where opportunities are found for individual work. During March, a highly successful mission was carried on, and a number of persons at this meeting testified that they had then been led to decision for Christ. After a number of very stirring testimonies, Mr. R. Paton and Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke, and the Chairman agreed to give £50, if £200 was otherwise subscribed. It is a very important agency for good, and Mr. Cook is an indefatigable worker, who has surrounded himself with a band of zealous young converts and devoted older Christians.



HOMERTON RAGGED SCHOOL AND GOSPEL MISSION.—The seventeenth annual report of this Mission declares that the work has never been more successfully carried on than during the past year. The improvement in the deportment of scholars has been very marked, the Band of Hope has largely increased in numbers, the girls in sewing class have made 350 garments, and a special class has been opened for elder girls. All the other departments of the mission have been well maintained. An earnest appeal is made for more workers for the Sunday-school, and for books for the library. Communications should be made to Mr. Henry Shaw, Rydal Lodge, Charnock-road, Clapton, E.

WORK AMONG CHILDREN.

AT one of his meetings in Sheffield Rev. E. P. Hammond read the following letter received from Captain Armstrong, who is now holding evangelistic meetings in Ayrshire:—

Since the Lord brought me from darkness to light he has led me to take an interest in children. It began by giving an hour every day on my farm to the children of the labourers, and teaching them to read and write, &c. Two of these children were orphans, and I was much concerned for their salvation. One night I asked the Lord to let me know why, after all that had been done for them, they were still unsaved. I opened the Word, and my eyes rested on these words: "What have they seen in thine house?" (Isaiah xxxix. 4). Wondering if I had been living in an inconsistent way before them, I examined myself, but could not remember anything to accuse myself with. Next day I heard a great noise in the house, and, asking what was wrong, I was told that the servants (all professing Christians) were quarrelling about some trifling thing at their dinner. I saw at once the meaning of the words, "What have they seen in thine house?" The two little orphans sitting in the kitchen and listening to the conversation and quarrelling of those whom they had so often heard confessing their faith in Jesus in meetings, were hindered by these stumbling-blocks. I may say that one of these was led to Jesus years afterwards in Maybole Poor House, through the instrumentality of the Marchioness of Ailsa, and fell asleep in Jesus, witnessing faithfully before all of his faith in the Lord who had redeemed him.

After leaving the farm I settled down in Girvan, and began a little school for poor children. It grew to be a large school at last, about eighty scholars, and the Bible was the only book I would teach from, because I felt it was not honoured as it ought to be in daily schools. I therefore determined to teach the children all I could out of it. I believe many of these children were converted to God when very young, but in many cases through their home influences they fell away, and are young men and women now without assurance. I believe the Lord will yet bring them out of the world to praise Him, for his Word shall not return to Him void.

I closed the school a little more than a year ago, and began to speak in other places to children having profited by teaching, receiving many lessons which it was necessary for me to learn before God could send me out to preach the Gospel. It was while working in this way in Glasgow that I attended one of your meetings in James Morrison-street Hall, and was there much helped in dealing with children in after-meetings. Mr. Napier told me that you had taught them it was very necessary to pray with children, and, if possible, to get them to pray themselves; and, if they were not able, to get them to repeat the words. I may say I found this most fruitful. I had often tried to explain the way of salvation to children who were anxious, but it was not always satisfactory. Since I adopted this plan and got the children to pray, the Lord has remarkably blessed it, in fact, I cannot say that I have ever known Him to refuse a truly burdened soul's request for pardon.

The hymns in your book, "Gems of Praise," are excellently suited for evangelistic meetings amongst children, and would, perhaps, be more used by bigger people if they were "smaller." Every time I sing the simple hymns you use I feel refreshed in spirit.

MANSION HOUSE MISSION, CAMBERWELL.—On Tuesday last week, on the occasion of his birthday, Mr. G. W. Linnecar was presented by the congregation with a purse of money to enable him to go to the seaside for rest. He had been working many hours a day painting and repairing the Mansion Hall, for the previous six weeks. The cost of these repairs is met, with the exception of £15. Fifty members have joined the Mission during the year.

LITTLE KATE.

A PLEA FOR THE COUNTRY HOLIDAY COTTAGE.

The glorious sun was shining bright
One happy summer day,
And village children on the green
Were shouting at their play.

The little birds sang merry lays,
The brooklet warbled too;
And o'er the joyful earth was spread
God's canopy of blue.

The smiling fields were clothed with corn,
Bright flowerets decked the sod;
Fair nature silently proclaimed
The goodness of our God.

One child surveyed that lovely scene
With glad, admiring eyes.
She gazed on fields, and trees, and sky,
With rapture and surprise.

'Twas Kate, a little London girl,
Who lived 'mid smoke and din;
And often she was very sick,
And looked so pale and thin.

But Christian friends who seek to bless
Such little ones as these,
Took Katie for one happy week,
Among the fields and trees—

Away from London's noise and smoke,
Its restless, feverish life;
The constant tramp of busy feet,
The eager, anxious strife.

The waving corn bowed gracefully
As Katie passed along,
And from the trees a little thrush
Gave forth a welcome song.

The breezes kissed her pallid cheek,
The merry sunbeams smiled,
And everything combined to cheer
The little sickly child.

Poor Katie danced for very joy,
And clapped her hands in glee;
She longed to kiss the little bird
That sang so merrily.

And as she looked on trees, and sky,
And daisy-sprinkled sod,
All things around, above, beneath,
Spoke to her heart of God.

And she was taught to look above,
To Him who made them all;
Who feeds the ravens when they cry,
And notes the sparrow's fall.

And Katie heard of that bright home
Of which the Scriptures tell,
Where pain and want can never come,
Where saints and angels dwell.

They told her of celestial fields,
Where flowers unfading grow,
And trees bear everlasting fruit,
And living waters flow.

She heard that she, a sinful child,
Might have her sins forgiven,
And dwell, not one short week alone,
But evermore in heaven.

Thrice happy they who seek to bless
Those who can ne'er repay;
They shall not lose their great reward
At the last reckoning day;

For unto them the King shall say,
When crowned with majesty,
"Since ye did good to one of these,
Ye did it unto Me."

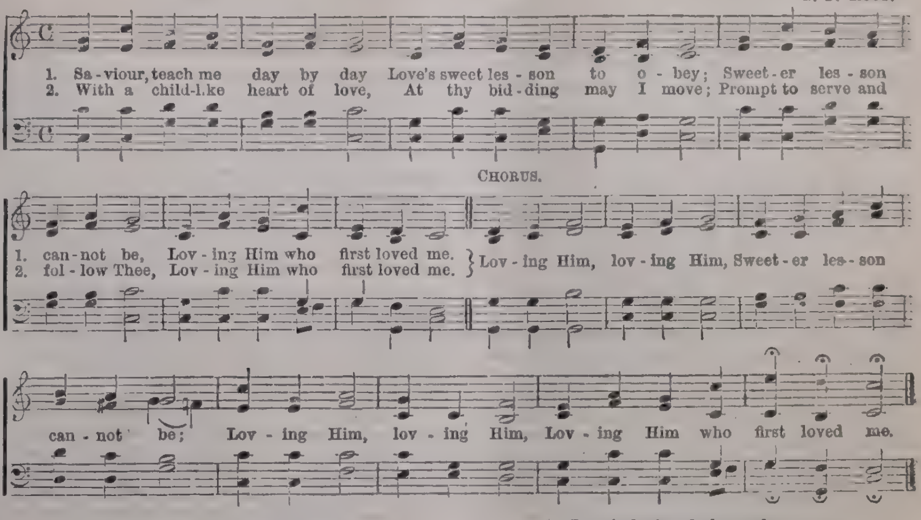
Loving Him.

G. F. Root.



1. Saviour, teach me day by day Love's sweet lesson to obey; Sweeter lesson cannot be, Loving Him who first loved me.
2. With a child-like heart of love, At thy bidding may I move; Prompt to serve and follow Thee, Loving Him who first loved me.
CHORUS.
Loving Him, loving Him, Sweeter lesson cannot be; Loving Him, loving Him, Loving Him who first loved me.

3. Teach me all thy steps to trace,
Strong to follow in thy grace;
Learning how to love from Thee,
Loving Him who first loved me.

4. Love in loving finds employ,
In obedience all her joy;
Ever now that joy will be,
Loving Him who first loved me.

HOW OLD MUST I BE?

"Mother," a little child once said, "Mother, how old must I be before I can be a Christian?" And the wise mother answered, "How old will you have to be, darling, before you can love me?" "Why, mother, I always loved you. I do now, and I always shall," and she kissed her mother; "but you have not told me yet how old I shall have to be." The mother made answer with another question: "How old must you be before you can trust yourself wholly to me and my care?" "I always did," she answered, and kissed her mother again; "but tell me what I want to know." And she climbed into her mother's lap, and put her arms about her neck.

The mother asked again: "How old will you have to be before you can do what I want you to do?" Then the child whispered, half guessing what her mother meant: "I can now, without growing any older." Then her mother said, "You can be a Christian now, my darling, without waiting to be older. All you have to do is to love and trust and try to please the One who says, 'Let the little ones come unto Me.' Don't you want to begin now?" The child whispered, "Yes." Then they both knelt down, and the mother prayed, and in her prayer she gave to Christ her little one who wanted to be his.

MR. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN.

WE arrived in Sydney about seven weeks ago. God has from the first opened up our way here, and given much blessing on our labours. Rev. James Hill and Rev. Robert Dey, who are now ministers in this city, were formerly pastors in Scotland, and we conducted successful missions in their churches there some years ago. They, therefore, welcomed us heartily, and introduced us to a wide circle, both of ministers and laity.

We are finding it advisable, in this country, to labour in the churches. We are just concluding our third mission in Congregational churches, and already several others are inviting us to visit them. We are much cheered by seeing a deepening of spiritual life among Christians, and a considerable number of young people yielding themselves to Christ. We ask the prayers of your readers.—Very truly yours, J. Mountain.

180, Burton-street, Sydney,
New South Wales, May 15.

The Christian Messenger of Sydney reports highly of the meetings held by Mr. and Mrs. Mountain, and records considerable results.

BIBLE SEARCHING IN RUSSIA.

THE lull of peace after the alarming war-cry induced me once again to leave home, and to seek out some of the barren places of the earth. Passing through Berlin on my way it was a joy to meet with some of the labourers who bear the Master's reproach "outside the camp." My first visit in Russian territory was at Lodz, a large and populous manufacturing district. After spending some days in happy fellowship with those who bear the standard of the Cross in that place, I travelled on to Warsaw and then to Wolhynia, a province to the South of Poland, which has only recently been brought under cultivation chiefly by Germans, Bohemians, and Poles. They had a Conference at Neadorf about sixty wersts from Tschitomir, and the people came from great distances, and seemed hungry and thirsty for the Word of Life. We had large gatherings in the hall, and also under the oak-trees in the forest; many souls will date their new life from those days.

The Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures had enabled me to place into the hands of many colonists the Bible; and then we had Bible readings, such as many workers in England would travel a long way to attend. Picture to yourselves a large hall full of people, about 1,200; perhaps 200 had Bibles in hand. The subject was, "The Blood." A text being mentioned there were many eager searchers, and then it would be read aloud and distinctly, and comments made by one and another. The closest attention and deepest interest were manifested by all, many an eye filled with tears and many a heart overflowed with gratitude for the marvellous and full provision for every human need in the gracious gift of God. The distribution of the Scriptures, combined with simple instructions how to read them, are much needed in foreign lands. Mr. Moody's plan of searching the Scriptures, by taking a subject, is very helpful in places where the Word is little known.

There are large countries within easy reach of England where the Lord's commandment may be fulfilled by any man or woman whose heart is aglow with the love of Christ. What holidays may not be spent in the forests of Hungary, Bohemia, and in the Steppe-land of Russia, by men and women ready to spend and to be spent for God. Our time is short; opportunities are fast passing away.

Yours, in the Master's happy service,
Warsaw. F. W. B.

MR. HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

A VERY hallowed meeting was held on Thursday evening in the Cemetery-road Baptist Church, when Revs. John Calvert, C. G. Holt, E. Carrington, and J. Warren, were present, with a goodly band of workers, and Mr. Cummins, the Secretary of the Band of Hope Mission. Mr. Hammond interested and impressed the children by striking stories illustrative of the Gospel, specially exalting the Saviour, and stirring the young converts to work for Jesus. He referred also to the great Band of Hope Demonstration which took place in the town on Monday, as encouraging the children to habits of temperance.

Rev. J. Warren spoke with gratitude of the decision for Christ of his little son of eight, also of a letter received from a manufacturer, whose daughter had been converted at the meetings. He referred also to an instance of a boy of fifteen coming up to one of the workers and saying, "I can hold out no longer; I am now fifteeen years of age, think of the years I have already lost that I might have spent for Jesus." Mr. Warren further dwelt on the influence of the mission outside, and the usefulness of the hymns used, and the work that would follow Mr. Hammond's visit in nursing these "new-born babes."

At the after-meeting it was delightful to hear satisfactory testimony borne by child after child to the manifest working of the Spirit in their hearts. In a group of three boys, one ten years old, two eight, the converse was very beautiful, and the joy of the angels must have been great indeed when the two boys of eight made it known that they were fatherless, and had found Jesus at the threshold of life, when He was needed so much by them. Numerous like instances might be given to show that the Divine seal is evidently resting on the work of this honoured servant of God here as elsewhere.

In harmony with the foregoing, the writer shook hands at the close with an aged Christian, who declared, with much emphasis, that he was on his way to heaven; that for fifty years he had been a Christian, and how gloriously possible it was for these dear children, while young, to step into the same narrow way, "the path of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day."

A Pastor.

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH AT OLDHAM.

A MISSION is being carried on in the centre of this town by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith; crowds flock to the meetings, and many are unable to gain admission. I was informed by friends at Oldham that this was one of the northern towns wholly given up to pleasure; money-clubs in all parts of the town are founded for this very purpose. I am informed on good authority that from fifty to sixty thousand pounds were drawn out of these clubs last year and wholly devoted to pleasure-seeking. Knowing these facts it was a special joy to me to find two servants of the Lord drawing out the people at seven o'clock in the morning, so as to fill one of the largest chapels in the town. On Sunday afternoon, while one building was crowded to overflow with women, a similar scene was taking place for men only in another building close by, the evangelists crossing over, taking part in each meeting.

On Sunday evening I started early for the meeting, but found the chapel crowded, also schoolroom and vestry, and considered myself fortunate to secure a seat in a class-room close by, where I could hear the speakers, but could not get a glimpse of either. After the large meeting had been dismissed, upwards of four hundred converts of the Mission were gathered together in the upper schoolroom, while Mr. Manton Smith and the Christian workers were dealing with nearly a hundred seekers in the schoolroom.—Yours truly,

A Constant Reader.

PREACHING AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The annual Temperance Fête will be held at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday, July 14. As in previous years, I shall be pleased to meet with preachers and singers at one o'clock on that day, at the Bible Stand in the Palace.

MISSIONS AT THE NOON MEETING.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.

LAST week was peculiarly a Foreign Mission week at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting. On Monday the veteran missionary from the New Hebrides, Rev. J. G. Paton, gave a stirring and fervid account of missionary experiences in the islands of the far south. He contrasted the terrible condition of the islands before the Gospel was introduced, with the state of things now. One of the pleasing characteristics of the native Christians to which he referred was the zeal with which the young men and women converts labour to bring their relatives to a saving knowledge of the truth. If young converts in this country were equally zealous in the same direction, how different would be the position of the Christian Church.

Mr. Paton spoke in very strong terms as to the high-handed action of the French authorities in the South Seas in endeavouring, on any pretext, to annex the islands. He said on one occasion a French war-vessel anchored alongside an island; the officers got hold of a boy, induced him to make a X at the end of a document, gave him £5, and sent him away. It transpired that this document formally ceded the island to the French Government! This is a specimen of their methods of action, and the English-speaking missionaries have been constrained to petition the British Government on the subject. It seems to be a choice between the formal annexation of the New Hebrides islands either by the English or the French. Lord Derby, representing the late Ministry, declined to entertain the proposal of annexation. If France is permitted to annex them in opposition to the protests of Australia, the position of Protestant missions will be seriously affected for the worse.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.

This day Mr. E. H. Glenny was present, with Mr. Liley, who is about to depart for missionary work in Tangiers, North Africa. Mr. Bureau, also designated for Algeria, was prevented from attending through illness. Miss Newman, of Dunmow, Essex, spoke of the urgent need for two missionaries—one of them being, if possible, a medical man—in the island of Timor, near Java, in the Malayan Archipelago, an island 250 miles long by 50 broad, containing a large and uncivilised population. The importance of the place lies in the fact that it is the nearest point to Australia, is a port of call for ships in the sugar and other trades, besides having a station connected with the Australian cable. As indicating the abundance of provision on the island, Miss Newman stated that a sheep is valued at 4d. or 6d., and fowls are worth 2s. a dozen. There is no English doctor on it, and altogether it is in the deepest spiritual need.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 1.

The address this day was given by Rev. G R. Ford, Superintendent of the American Missions in Syria, having his headquarters at Sidon. There are, in Syria, two sections of Mahommedans, representatives of the Greek and Romish Churches, Druses, and various other religious sects. Among the difficulties that evangelical Protestant Missions have to contend with is the zeal of the people for their own religious systems, which it is no easy matter for them to relinquish, in order to embrace the orthodox Christian faith. There is also a political barrier, as the profession of Christianity would deprive them of all chance of employment under the Turkish authorities. The caste exclusiveness of the native sects is another hindrance. Whereas in this country a man who is outside the pale of all Christian profession loses social caste, in Mahommedan lands he loses caste by the adoption of that faith.

Despite these drawbacks, there is not a little to encourage the missionaries. Much foundation work has been done in the past, and the results are now becoming manifest. More has been accomplished in a visible way within the last five years than during the previous thirty-five years. A good test of the reality of the work is the spirit of liberality among the native Christians. Last year their contributions to the cause of the Gospel were double those of the preceding year. Schools are greatly valued. The missionaries desire to make their work self-supporting, and they therefore stipulate that the Christians should raise the money for erecting them; amounts are readily subscribed, not only for building and furnishing the schools, but for a part of the teacher's salary. The old systems of religion are being thoroughly shaken, and the way for a more universal acceptance of Christianity is being prepared. Lately the Turkish Government has issued instructions in cypher to the governors of provinces to throw every possible hindrance in the way of the spread of Christianity. Syrian newspapers, too, are publishing articles on the danger to which Mohammedanism is exposed by allowing Christian Missions to exist in their midst; prayer is desired that these obstacles to the progress of the Gospel may be removed.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.

A deeply-interesting statement was made as to Christian work in Berlin, by Count Bernstorff, Privy Councillor and Chamberlain to the Emperor of Germany. He said he could not, on this occasion bring a message from the Berlin noon prayer-meeting, but next time he hoped to do so, as they purposed to establish one at the beginning of the winter. Germany, he said, was not now an infidel country, though it was flooded with such opinions in the early part of the century. God had visited them in chastisement, but He afterwards sent great theologians, such as Schleiermacher, who exerted a great influence on German religious thought. Schleiermacher was not himself "over the line," and his teaching could not of itself bring men to Christ, but it awakened desires after the truth.

Great progress has of late been made in religious effort in Berlin. One of the most useful institutions is the Deaconess' Houses; these Christian sisters go and minister to the sick poor throughout the great city. The City Mission is another valuable agency. There are many faithful pastors in the city, and their churches are always filled, while those where the pulpits are occupied by rationalists are nearly empty. A marked feature of religious life in Berlin is the great insufficiency of church accommodation. With a population of 1,200,000 there are only 40 churches and 110 pastors. The earnest Christians greatly desire more general efforts to reach the masses of the people by laymen as well as the clergy. These efforts have been blessed in the capital, but in the country there is still much prejudice. Good work is done by the Sunday-schools of the City Mission. The new Y.M.C.A. which sprang out of the labours of Mr. Von Schluembach is doing excellent service. There are already 700 subscribers, 180 of whom are active Christian workers. Among the associates who are inscribed in the books of the Association there are Jews, Roman Catholics, and others. A dancing saloon was taken some time ago, which became at once a centre of religious effort. Classes and Gospel meetings are held, and visitation work is carried on. No aggressive work is at present being done in the East-end of the City, and it is greatly desired to commence an effort in that part.

Mr. George Williams, who presided at the noon meeting on this day, expressed the deep and cordial interest of the English friends in the efforts of their German brethren, and especially of his Excellency, and Countess Bernstorff, who was also present, and is a co-worker with her husband among their fellow-citizens in the capital of the great German Empire.

THE HIGHGATE TEMPERANCE MISSION.—The meetings held lately in a tent here were all largely attended. An unusually deep religious spirit characterised them. The desire of Mr. W. Noble, who conducted the Mission, was in perfect harmony with that of the committee, that the saving of souls should be the most prominent feature of the Mission. It is pleasing to know that many gave their hearts to the Lord, and took Him for all in all in their lives. An important feature was that Christians gave up their special pleadings for the moderate use of drink, boldly signed the pledge, and declared themselves out and out for Jesus; 1213 signed the pledge, 711 adults and 502 young people.

DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION, TOTTENHAM.

THE annual meeting of this institution and hospital, situated at Tottenham-green, was held on Saturday afternoon, in a tent erected in the beautiful grounds in rear of the buildings. With this periodical gathering was connected the opening of the Second Section of the extension, the foundation-stone of which was laid on May 21, last year, by the late Mrs. James Laurie, who contributed £1000 towards the cost. About two years ago Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who presided last Saturday, laid the foundation-stone of the First Section, intended for patients; the second being designed chiefly for the executive department, and as a dwelling-house for the Sisters, who have hitherto been compelled to trench on the hospital space. The First Section, which was opened last year by the Lord Mayor, is occupied partly by adults and partly by children; while in the old hospital building there is still provision for forty inmates of the former class. The aggregate cost of the two sections, now to be in conjoint operation, is nearly £12,000, and it is hoped that the erection of a third, for which the site is ready, will be speedily begun, the estimated cost of this further addition being about £4000. As regards patients, the opening of the Second Section will enable the managing body to receive twelve additional patients.

The annual report states that the Sisters continue to occupy the same spheres of usefulness as formerly—namely, the South Dublin Union, the Cork Union Infirmary, and the Sunderland Infirmary, besides the hospital of the parent house at Tottenham. Their number increased last year from 37 to 59. The total income from all sources was £2874, and the total expenditure £3409.

The director of the institution, Dr. Laseron, having read the report, the Chairman, after expressing his satisfaction at finding on the expenditure side of the balance-sheet no trace of alcohol, said Dr. Laseron had just shown him over the building, and it appeared to him to realise all that was wanted, all possible scientific arrangements which would promote the efficiency of the institution. He thought the money had been admirably spent, and he was exceedingly glad that the directors had got all the money for the new extension, except about £250. The hon. gentleman added that he had private documents which showed that the nurses, some of whom had gone to distant parts of the country, were highly appreciated wherever they went.

Addresses in support of the institution were afterwards delivered by Mr. John McCall, Rev. L. G. Fry, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Sir E. Lechmere, M.P., and others. The Lady Superintendent said a few words with regard to the Christian principle and self-denying character of the work of the Sisters, and alluded to the recent large increase in their number as a hopeful feature. At the close of the meeting the Chairman warmly advocated the pecuniary support of the project of a Third Section, and promised himself to give £500, after which the Second Section was inspected, and Mr. Morley declared it open.

THE RESCUE AND PROTECTION OF CHILDREN.—The Stockbridge Day Nursery and Infant Home is henceforth to be known as the Edinburgh and Leith Children's Aid and Refuge for the Protection of Children. The directors announce that a shelter from cruelty has been provided, to which children may be conveyed for protection. Great interest has been taken in the case of German children, and several letters have been received by the secretary from various German officials tendering their best thanks. All the departments of the institution are progressing, including the Infant Nursery, Boys' Home, Girls' Home, &c. At present there are about 150 children under the care of the institution. Miss Stirling, Merleton, Wardie, near Edinburgh, is hon. sec.

A SCHOOL FOR THE DAUGHTERS OF EUROPEANS was started some seven years ago in Kaffraria, and has been admirably carried on by devoted ladies. It was expected that the school fees would enable the work to be extended to the native girls. This has, to some extent, been accomplished. Unfortunately a Romanist Mission has arrived, and, under a very resolute priest, has attempted to compete with and shut up the Protestant school. The education given at the Romanist school is very poor and superficial, but it is gratuitous. This is too great a temptation for the almost bankrupt European settlement, and the priest gets a large number who would otherwise be sent to the Protestant school. There is no intention of relinquishing it, but it would be very helpful if Christian friends would send help at this crisis for "Umtata Girls' School," to the Central Agency for Foreign Missions, 54, Gresham-street, E.C.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

ON Saturday afternoon the Duchess of Westminster, who was accompanied by the Duke, laid the foundation-stone of the new Assembly Hall in connection with this mission, in Mile-end-road. £6000 has been laid out in the frontage buildings, which comprise a spacious coffee-palace, a book-saloon, club-rooms, and Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Association rooms. Behind the vestibule will stand the new hall, which will be capable of holding 5000 persons, and could be erected for £13,650, provided that a certain tender could be accepted forthwith.

The proceedings of Saturday having been opened with prayer by Lord Radstock, Mr. F. N. Charrington, the hon. superintendent, said the new hall would be similar in size and construction to the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Messrs. Cory, of Cardiff, had given £3500, and Mr. Samuel Morley, £1450, towards the buildings already erected; and Mr. R. C. L. Bevan had promised £2000 on condition that the whole sum required was raised.

The Duke of Westminster expressed the pleasure he felt in seeing the progress of Mr. Charrington's work. He thought it was right that those who had such advantages in the West-end should do what they could for their poorer brethren in the East-end. He was glad to see that so many schemes had been launched for the benefit of the residents in East London during the year, and believed that they could not have too many institutions of that kind. The foundation-stone was then formally laid by the Duchess, after which Mr. Charrington announced that the Duke of Westminster had given £1000 towards the undertaking. Other sums had also been given or promised, including £650 from the people attending the hall.

OBITUARY.

MR. S. F. KENDALL.

WE regret to record the death, about two months since, of our friend Mr. S. F. Kendall, for many years missionary at Sydney, Cape Breton Island.

THE BISHOP OF SALISBURY.

The Bishop of Salisbury died on Monday morning. By his death, says a contemporary, the Episcopal Church loses a ripe scholar, a rare master of English composition, a good administrator, and a High Churchman of the old school.

PROFESSOR SEGOND.

A correspondent of the Nonconformist and Independent at Geneva writes:—"Professor Segond is dead." Such was the sad news which has been circulated through Geneva, and this morning (June 20) his mortal remains were conveyed to their last resting-place at Chene, the parish of which he was formerly the pastor. He was ill for a short period, and almost refused medical help. The Professor was able to revise the last proofs of the new edition of his translation of the New Testament, and then the pen dropped from his hand. To the French-speaking portion of the Christian public, and to all earnest students of the Bible able to read French, Professor Segond's translation will ever be held in high esteem, as the most readable French version that has yet appeared. Some of his renderings have been severely criticised, but it has been found that in many cases they are confirmed by the corresponding new readings in the Revised Version.

GLASGOW SEAMEN'S EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The well-being, not only of the seamen but their families, is contemplated by this Mission. The Committee lately removed their head-quarters from the north side to the south side of the river, a better sphere there presenting itself. In-door and out-door meetings have been held regularly, thousands of tracts have been distributed, a number of library bags given to voyagers, and a great number of seamen have been personally conversed with about spiritual matters, in the meetings, in their homes, in the streets, and on board ship. This first annual report is full of praise to God for success, and looks forward with hope to the future. Mr. William Alexander, 59, Morrison-street, S.S., Glasgow, is secretary.

THE STRANGERS' REST.

THE monthly meeting of the workers of the "Strangers' Rest" took place on Friday evening last, when Rev. John Wilkinson delivered an address on "The promises of the Father." Beginning with the promises to Abraham in Gen. xii., Mr. Wilkinson pointed out the different meanings attached to the "Seed of Abraham" in different places. It meant (1) The Lord Jesus Christ, (2) all men, (3) Israel. The promises made to Abraham about Israel had been ratified by solemn oath, and God's oath could not be broken. Sooner or later they would be fulfilled. Mr. Wilkinson closed his address by pointing out the increased faith that the study of such a subject was calculated to give the Christian.

How different to that happy meeting within was the scene without. On all sides, as we walked down the Highway, came the sound of music from low dancing saloons, mingled with the hoarse shouts of half drunken men and women. On the doorsteps, as we passed, were to be seen the forms of men overcome with drink; of women, ready to ensnare the sailor. As we looked at the work to be done, and thought of the little band of workers we had seen, we said to ourselves, "What are they among so many?" Surely some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will spare an hour or two on a Sunday or on a week-day to help forward the work for Jesus in this sin-stricken part of London. Mr. J. Isaac, the Hon. Sec., would give a most hearty welcome to any such volunteer who will communicate with him at "The Strangers' Rest," 163, St. George-street, E. J. B. T.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

OLDHAM.—Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan have been much owned of God in tent work in this place. Many have professed to receive spiritual blessing, and a number have signed the Temperance pledge.

GLASGOW.—For ten days Mr. C. King has conducted special meetings in Plantation Free Church. They were largely attended. On the closing night it was encouraging to see so many standing up professing to have received good in connection with the mission.

SOUTHPORT.—A largely-attended Convention for the promotion of spiritual life has been held here in connection with the Wesleyan body. The doctrines of consecration and holy living were powerfully enforced by various eminent speakers, and it is believed that many received definite blessing. Evangelistic work was also carried on by Rev. T. Cook and others, with the happiest results.

OTTERY ST. MARY.—The work of the Evangelistic and Colportage Mission during the past year has been one of blessing; there have been several cases of conversion, and these mostly in isolated districts that could not be reached in any other way. Day by day the evangelist and colporteur, W. Morris, goes forth, taking with him the Word of God, into the villages and wayside houses of the neighbourhood. Help is much needed at present, and will be gladly received by Mr. W. H. Reed, Secretary, Ottery St. Mary, Devon.

DUNFERMLINE has again been visited with showers of blessing. We are still praising God for the revival which accompanied Mr. J. M. Scroggie's visit in March; and now the Lord has given us a rich harvest among the children. Messrs. McKeith, Pratt, and Steel of Glasgow have been preaching Jesus with the attractive auxiliary of optical lantern and splendid limelight views of the "Pilgrim's Progress." We believe a great number of the children have found the Saviour. We are specially interested in a number of older lads who profess to have accepted Christ, and we ask the prayers of your readers for them as well as for the younger converts.

R. S., JUN.

WEST SURREY.—The Congregational Church Guildford have published an account of evangelistic services held in the rural districts of West Surrey for the past year. Thirteen missions have been sustained, while college meetings, tent missions, and open-air services have been held in the various localities. Christian friends living in the several districts render willing aid. The Sunday-school services are conducted by laymen from the Guildford church, and the evangelistic work is done by paid evangelists, who visit the poor, and conduct cottage meetings, mothers' meetings, &c., during the week. The work is conducted on purely Christian rather than denominational lines.

MR. STANLEY'S NEW BOOK.*

IN the muster-roll of the world's illustrious explorers, the name of Henry M. Stanley will for ever bear an honoured, and, indeed, a unique place. It has been given to few of these adventurous pioneers of civilisation, Christianity, and commerce, not only to see their perilous labours blossom into ripe fruitage, but to have a prominent share in the consolidation of the hoped-for, but too seldom realised, results. Many a brave traveller has sown the seed of toilsome effort and sacrifice, only to pass away from the scene before the harvest has begun to spring up, which it is given to other hands to reap. Such, indeed, was the lot of some of Mr. Stanley's predecessors in African exploration, to wit, the grand old David Livingstone, whose spirit must now be rejoicing at the rich blessing to dark and down-trodden Africa that has directly grown out of his self-sacrificing endeavours. It is Mr. Stanley's good fortune, on the other hand, to find his services appreciated to the full during his lifetime, and to see the territory he has traversed and explored, erected into a free and independent kingdom, and admitted by the approving mandate of all the great-world powers into the brotherhood of civilised nations.

Mr. Stanley's earlier work in Africa is already well known through his books: "How I Found Livingstone," "Across the Dark Continent," &c. His fame, not only as an explorer, but as an organiser and a statesman, will be greatly enhanced through these two goodly and handsome volumes, which may be said to bring to a close the record of his life as an explorer pure and simple. For we understand that he has been appointed the first Governor of the Congo State, and he will henceforth discharge functions of a different and probably still more difficult kind. The foundations of this Congo Free State have been so well and truly laid, however, that we anticipate for the author, if his life is spared, many years of usefulness in administrating justice throughout the regions he has done so much to open up, and to preserve from the land-grabbers of the unappropriated portions of the globe.

Mr. Stanley's mission when he landed again in Africa in August, 1879, as he tells us in the first volume, was to "sow along the banks of the great river civilised settlements, to peacefully conquer and subdue it, to remould it in harmony with modern ideas into National States, within whose limits the European merchant should go hand in hand with the dark African trader, and justice, and law, and order should prevail, and murder and lawlessness and the cruel barter of slaves should for ever cease." How well these objects have been kept in view and fulfilled, the volumes before us bear faithful record. Whether from the point of view of the adventurous explorer, the historian, the geographer, the man of commerce, the naturalist, or the Christian, they are of the deepest interest and value. Our readers already know something of Mr. Stanley's friendly attitude towards the various Christian missions that are seeking to dispel the moral gloom of the Dark Continent, by the light of the Gospel message. In these volumes we are glad to find ample confirmation of this, as the following extracts will show:—

A UNIQUE RACE.

"Two English religious missions have established themselves at Leopoldville, one to the right and one to the left of the station, on ground belonging to the Association. The one established on Leopold Hill is called the Arthington Mission of the Baptist Church; the other is undenominational, and is styled the Livingstone Inland Congo Mission. Mr. J. T. Comber presides over the Baptist Mission, and Dr. Sims is chief of the other. Both gentlemen take a warm interest in their respective missions; both have been remarkably energetic, and both have distinguished themselves for zeal in looking after the important interests entrusted to their charge. It has been a well-contested race to the great goal. The Baptists were the first to win the race to Stanley Pool; Dr. Sims was the first to navigate any portion of the waters of the Upper Congo. The Baptists were the first to occupy a station above Stanley Pool; but soon after the Livingstone Mission had arranged for a station even at the equator. The Baptists were the first to launch a steamer; but the Livingstone Mission were engaged in building their steamer at Leopoldville at the same date that the other was launched. Where and when this unique race will end no one knows. So long as these missions are supported by the subscriptions of their faithful and loyal supporters, it will, no doubt, be continued until the Congo basin has been overrun, conquered morally, and won over to the Christian fold. Meanwhile the author wishes the two leaders in this daring spiritual campaign against moral darkness, more wisdom, light, renewed courage, and abundant success. They also have passed through dark days, and have been sorely afflicted; but each month the horizon has been clearing, and the prospect is infinitely brighter before them to-day than they could have anticipated some time ago."

Alas, since these generous and hopeful words were penned, the news has come that one of the two leaders—Mr. Comber—has succumbed to the climatic foes of the Congo, that have already slain so many good men and true soldiers of Christ. No doubt Mr. Comber's place in the front rank will be speedily filled up, that the "spiritual campaign" may go on with unremitting zeal. Here is an interesting glimpse of

A MISSION HOME.

"In the broad valley of Lukinga we were hospitably received by Mr. and Mrs. Ingham, of the Livingstone Mission. The Mission cottage was as dainty within as any residence need be. A spacious garden behind it presented a vivid promise; a well-kept court in front was surrounded by storerooms, kitchen, and schoolroom. Under the shadowy eaves were to be seen the Mission children, who have a striking likeness and family resemblance to the black Mission children seen at Zanzibar, Sierra Leone, Old Calabar, and the West Indies. They have the same subdued air, as though they were impressed with the awful mysteries of the alphabet. I think it rather encouraged me to believe that the Congo climate, even in that low hollow of Lukinga, was endurable, when I saw here a delicate-looking lady bear herself so bravely. I utter literal truth when I say that my sojourn for twenty hours was enjoyed with the most exquisite pleasure."

One more extract will show what progress has been made in the development of Africa since Mr. Stanley began his great work:—

"Besides the work of the International Association, of which these volumes are the record, the English Baptists have carried the banner of peace up the Congo beyond the Equator; and the American Baptists, taking up the work begun by the Low Congo Mission, are urging on the civilising work side by side with their English brethren. London and Church Missionary Societies have planted their Christian flags on Lakes Victoria and Tanganika. The African Lakes Company and the Free Kirk of Scotland are earnestly at work on Lake Nyassa, and are advancing on Lake Tanganika. Serpa Pinto, and Wersonian have crossed Africa; Ivens and Capello have performed remarkable journeys to the East of Angola. M. de Brazza has given France a West African Empire. Germany has entered the field of colonial enterprise, and has annexed all the territory in South West Africa between Cape Fio and British colonies in South Africa, the Cameroon's territory, and a fertile province in East Africa. Italy has annexed territory on the Red Sea; Great Britain has annexed the Niger delta, and Portugal now possesses 700,000 square miles of African territory."

In a succeeding issue we hope to make some painfully interesting extracts with respect to the slave trade in Central Africa. Meanwhile we heartily commend to our readers these admirable volumes, which, besides the narrative of the author's travels, contain a large store of valuable information that ought to be in the possession of all who intend to spend any portion of their lives in the region of the mighty Congo. There is a great profusion of excellent illustrations and explanatory maps.

LAY MISSION, OLD FORD.—The seventh annual tea and public meeting in connection with the Lay Mission, Libra-road, Old Ford, was lately held in the Mission Room. The very cramped premises were crowded to excess. One object of the meeting was to augment the fund which is being raised to erect a new Mission Hall. It transpired during the meeting that a site has already been obtained for the proposed building. The secretary, Mr. Christmas, read an excellently-written report, which referred to the success that had attended the open-air services, the Sunday-school, tract distribution, cottage prayer-meetings, Band of Hope, and other agencies. There was a spirit of great union among all the workers. Various donations, amounting to £154 1s. 6d., had been promised towards the £550, estimated as the cost of the new hall.

RICHARD WEAVER AT BELFAST.

THE mission which closed last Lord's Day was, by the blessing of the Lord, a most successful one. He gave his servant strength night after night to lift up Jesus Christ and Him crucified. The Holy Ghost carried the Word home to the hearts of not a few, and drew them to Christ. Many have professed to find peace through believing. Husbands and wives, children and parents, have blessed God that ever Richard came to Belfast. On the Lord's Days, the crowds were great, and many stayed behind to be spoken to. Some professed to have found peace while the evangelist was speaking. Preachers should have faith when the Word is spoken to believe that God will bless it to the hearers where they sit.

Our brother's health is still precarious. His head is very bad at times; but the Lord sustains him.

PURITY MEETINGS IN MANCHESTER.

WE lately closed a series of twenty-six midnight meetings here, which revealed to my accustomed gaze, horrors, and loathsomeness which even twenty-five years' experience had left me ignorant of. Being desirous of taking some effective steps to combat the evils by which we are surrounded, I invited Mr. J. B. Wookey to visit Manchester. We issued 15,000 tickets to the working men, and distributed 150,000 handbills, besides placarding the walls with a pithy extract from Mr. Spurgeon's recent sermon, sounding a note of warning as to the prevalent immorality.

We had 6000 working men in the Free Trade Hall, and hundreds could not get in. Mr. Wookey riveted the attention of his audience for an hour and a half with the most appalling histories of injustice, crime, and oppression. The men were simply wild with indignation at the statements he made, and the devilry perpetrated in the land. I am certain that the influence of that meeting and of four other meetings which Mr. Wookey has held in different parts of Manchester will be powerfully felt at the coming election. It may be relied on that no candidate for Parliament need come here unless he is prepared to stop the traffic in English girls, sweep the Contagious Diseases Acts from the statute book, and raise the age for protection of girls to at least eighteen years.

I advise all cities to do as we have done. Invite Mr. Wookey, and leave him to put his case before the men who will turn the balance at next election. J. W. MacGill.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For great blessing on Gospel services during the past month at Bath, Poole, Kaynes, Coleford, and Horsley.

PRAYER—For the meeting at the Mansion House on Monday, in behalf of Miss Whately's work at Cairo.——For blessing on a fortnight's tent meetings at Bracebridge, Lincoln, by Mr. J. Goodall.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings at Stromness, Orkney.—For blessing on Gospel services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Congregational Chapel, Monmouth.

Y.W.C.A., MILDMAY BRANCH.—An Institute and Home for young ladies in business, was opened at 41a, Pyrland-road, N., last October. The average weekly attendance has been about sixty. The Home was gladly accepted at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide holidays, but only five could be received to sleep. We earnestly ask help to complete the furnishing of the house, and prayer for continued blessing upon all who come. It has been a marked token of God's blessing that everyone who comes to the house acknowledges to have received blessing. That the Home and Institute are much needed is proved by the rapid growth of the Branch, 120 young women having joined in the short time of its existence. Much-needed contributions will be most thankfully received by Miss Lankester, at the Institute.

Letters to the Editor.

THE CHILDREN'S FRESH AIR MISSION.

Sir,—Before your readers fly from London to pleasant holiday haunts, may I remind them of the children of the very poor who remain behind, and to whom the sweet refreshing air and recreation of country life are denied? I plead for the Children's Fresh Air Mission, which seeks out little smoke-begrimed London children, whose qualifications are that both their bodies and their minds hunger in vain for God's blessed country. Their parents are invited to send them as clean and tidy as possible to a London organiser, who sends them by rail to a country village, where, under the care of a responsible resident, they are boarded with cottagers for three weeks—not for a mere day—at five shillings a week each. The new life this brings to feeble little bodies, and the new light to little minds, can be readily imagined.

Last year the Fresh Air Mission sent out 1282 children to thirty-three villages, and, by joining with the Country Holidays' Fund, the work is extending to all parts of London, and we hope that 5000 may be sent this summer. But what is this number out of four millions of people? I shall be glad to send a report to, or receive contributions from, any who are interested in this work.—Yours faithfully, Walter Hazell, Treasurer.

REV. H. BRADFORD, NORTHAMPTON.

Sir,—On March 26 you kindly inserted an appeal from me on behalf of Rev. Hy. Bradford, formerly Baptist minister of Princes-street Chapel, Northampton, who, in consequence of his faithful testimony to our Lord and Master, was dismissed from his pastorate by a majority of 17 in a meeting of his congregation. The appeal was earnestly made that £500 might be collected by May 31. Through the wide circulation of The Christian the sum was obtained by May 17. Mr. Samuel Morley, with his accustomed Christian generosity, contributed £100 in addition to £50 previously given (the £100 promised when I obtained £400), and £10 placed on the stone which I laid on Wednesday, the 24th instant, £2000 having been received within a year. Mr. Coulson, ex-Mayor, and the most zealous treasurer, gave £100 on that occasion. £180 was sent me in response to my application, which should be gratifying indeed to you, showing the wide and influential circulation of your journal. Stamps for two shillings and others for one shilling were sent me by housemaids in the country, with notes lamenting their inability to send more. All those whose addresses were sent have been thankfully acknowledged by me, but several having sent anonymously, let me thank them by this letter.

May I ask those of your readers who may not specially have noticed the former appeal, to help me in raising the sum of £2000 that the chapel may be opened in nine months' time free from debt? The congregation are not wealthy, but thoroughly in earnest. Nothing is so depressing to a minister of the Gospel as to have a debt to clear off, or so disheartening to a congregation who can only support their minister. My desire is, in a town where there are some who say "There is no God," that for generations to come this building, holding 1000 persons, may be a testimony to the truth of God's promiss, "Them that honour Me I will honour"

Yours faithfully, W. King Hall,
Admiral.

TOYNBEE HALL, WHITECHAPEL.

Dear Sir,—In the article, "A Cry from the East to the West," by "A Layman," which appears in your issue of July 2, there is a reference to Toynbee Hall, Whitechapel, which is inaccurate, or, perhaps, more misleading than inaccurate. The idea of such an institution as Toynbee Hall originated, it is true, with Oxford men; but it is not the case, as your correspondent seems to think, that the work there is carried on entirely by Oxford men. I am glad to say that Cambridge, too, has contributed both men and money.

Your correspondent apparently desires the readers of his article to believe that the object of Toynbee Hall is the spread of "the Gospel of Broad Churchism." Such is, however, not the case. The institution is undenominational, and its object is not the spread of any "ism" whatsoever. Its object is, by bringing a body of educated young men to reside, for a longer or shorter time, in the East-end, to establish a new point of contact between the cultured and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, that they may learn to know each other; and, knowing each other, that they may have sympathy with each other, and be mutually helpful.

It is hardly possible for me at present to go into a detailed account of the various kinds of work carried on at Toynbee Hall, with this great main object in view; but I think that, if your correspondent, "A Layman," would visit Toynbee Hall, he would no longer decline to "count" this institution as an influence for good in the East-end.—Yours faithfully,

Sydney H. Vines, Treasurer,
Cambridge Branch Universities' Settlement Association.

BRITISH SAILORS IN SICILY.

Sir,—Every year 12,000 British sailors pass through the Sicilian port of Palermo. There is no house of rest for them, not even a coffee-house. The result is that many of them find their way into the wine-shops, or houses of ill repute, where they are drugged, robbed, and sometimes murdered. Indeed, scarcely a month passes without some such startling event. Not many weeks ago one was stabbed, and another found stripped and nearly drowned in a ditch near the harbour.

It would cost quite £200 to start a Sailor's Institute, and with it an English hospital, which is also urgently needed. The British chaplain, Rev. W. Oxley, is desirous to commence this without delay. He says the captains, as well as the sailors, would be most thankful for a room where they could spend a quiet hour, and write or receive letters. One of the captains expressed much gratitude for the permission to spend his evenings at the Chaplain's, as he had no other resource but the ship-chandler's. He came up to sign the pledge according to the promise he had made his wife before leaving home. After that he brought two other captains to church on Sunday. He mentioned how much he had enjoyed the services: they brought back old times, when he had been a Sunday-school teacher.

There are ladies who will probably labour in this cause when once set on foot. The English residents at Palermo, who have built a fine church, and support their own chaplain, will doubtless contribute according to their means. Mr. Oxley will thankfully receive help for this purpose. He will be very grateful for suitable books or magazines; a use might also be found for old games. All these would be brought out free by ship captains bound for Palermo. Some newspapers posted regularly would be a great boon. I shall be ready to forward any sums given in Christ's name for our tempted sailors in Palermo.—Faithfully yours,

James Gosset Tanner.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—On Monday, June 29, the Quarterly Workers' Meeting in connection with this mission was held at the Seamen's Chapel, St. George-street, London Docks, E. Colonel Handyside occupied the chair. Reports of an encouraging character were given by several workers in the various departments of Christian effort undertaken by this Society. During the evening a testimonial, consisting of a beautifully-illuminated address on velium, in handsome frame, accompanied with a gold watch, was presented to Rev. George John Hill by Mr. George Wade, on behalf of the members and friends of the Seamen's Chapel. The address referred to Mr. Hill's long and successful labours among seamen, and expressed the desire that he might long be spared to continue this important work. A suitable reply was made by Mr. Hill.

MISSION TO KAFFIRS.—The annual report of work done during the past year at Rock Fountain, Ixopo, Natal, by Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Clarke, says:—"We have had more to encourage us during the past year than during the five previous years. The people show interest in the word preached, and have great desire for knowledge." The most encouraging part of the work, of late has been done on the banks of the Elurana, where the Chief has permitted Gospel teaching among the natives of his tribe. One of them now preaches Christ. Others have also been saved, and many have taken the blue ribbon. Drink is a great hindrance, and there are many other discouragements. Help is needed, and may be forwarded to Mrs. S. Fothergill, Claremont, Darlington.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

On Thursday afternoon a small but representative and influential meeting was held by invitation of Mr. Samuel Morley at his house in Grosvenor-street, in the interest of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. Lady Kinnaird, Sir William Muir, Lord Radstock, and others spoke of the helpless sufferings of the Hindu ladies in time of sickness, of the responsibility of England for her great Dependency, of the extraordinary moral influence of Englishmen over the people of India, who look up to us like children, and of the wonderful opportunity for evangelising India through her women. Hundreds of ladies wasting their lives at home might spend them in the daily joy of usefulness among the women of India, with an eternal reward at the end.

Mr. Morley, Mr. George Williams, Mr. T. A. Denny, and others inquired with deep interest into the subject, and the meeting resulted in nearly £3000 being promised in subscriptions during three to five years. The present income of the Society is £12,000 which it is hoped to raise to £25,000. There would still be room for any amount of co-operation from individuals and societies, amongst the 250 millions which constitute the population of our Indian Empire.

A NOTE OF THANKSGIVING.

Each successive year about this time I have been enabled through your kindness to invite the readers of The Christian to join me in a public acknowledgment of the good hand of God as manifested in the progress of the General Mission work, and "Homes" for destitute children under my care. What we call a "thanksgiving fête" is generally held in one of the Homes on the 7th or 8th of July, but this year this cannot take place, as the premises of our London Home are about to undergo alterations. But I hope many friends will join us at the services to be held on Sunday 12th, and Monday 13th, at the Edinboro' Castle.

I have just reached my fortieth year of age and the twentieth of my work, and am filled with wonder and thankfulness, as I recall the loving-kindnesses of the Lord. Actually over 7000 boys and girls have been rescued from peril and sufferings and been placed out in life, while hundreds of the working class population of East London have embraced the Gospel and become the followers of Christ. These are causes for devout thankfulness. Let us unite in ascribing all the honour and glory unto his great name.—Your servant in the Gospel, T. J. Barnardo.

MISSIONS IN INDIA.—We continue to receive encouraging tidings of success in missionary work from various quarters. At Simla the Rev. Gulzar Shah recently baptized eight converts. They had gone up from the plains to be baptized, and, with one exception, were all Mazhabi Sikhs, of the same class as those who have embraced Christianity in western Rohilkhand. The Kaukab-i-Hind of last week reports forty-four baptisms at various places in Oudh and Rohilkhand. Some of the converts baptized at the recent Ajudhya mela have been heard from at Daryabad, and the report given was a very favourable one. In due time we shall expect to hear from others, and we shall be very much surprised, indeed, if some of these people do not open new doors to the Gospel in the places where they live.—Indian Witness.

REV. DR. KALLEY writes from Campo Verde, Tipper Lynn-road, Edinburgh, on July 3:—"Your mention of me in yesterday's Christian as 'the late Dr. Kalley' may be injurious in various ways. Will you, therefore, kindly mention that, thank God, I am still alive, and able, by his grace, to take a deep interest in Madeira, and in those who, on account of Popish persecution, were compelled to expatriate themselves by hundreds in 1846 and 1847? Those of your readers still interested in the history of the work in Madeira may be pleased to have more correct dates than those furnished in your last number. I was there from 1838 to 1846. Mr. Hewetson arrived in the spring of 1845, and remained about fifteen months. He left about three months before the riots, in which I would have been killed if my escape had been delayed for five minutes."

Notes and Comments.

WE would again remind our readers of Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield, Mass., August 5—15. Some of the leading ministers in the United States will take part in it, and many prominent workers in all branches of Christian work throughout America are expected to be present. Mr. Moody is desirous that any Christian friends in this country who have been associated with his work, who purpose being present at the Conference, should give early intimation of the fact, either to himself, at Northfield, Mass., U.S.A., or to Mr. Robert Paton, 103, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

With considerable surprise we find the following in the Exeter Gazette:—

> "The Rev. Dr. Hillier preached his farewell sermons in the Bartholomew-street Baptist Chapel on the last Sunday of June. This is the result of two years of direct and desperate opposition to the rev. gentleman from outside his congregation, and directed by those Radicals and Bradlaughites, whose ire the Doctor raised soon after his arrival in the city, by reason of the resistance which he offered to the spread of, and the force with which he denounced, the Atheistic and Communistic principles that find favour and support in the quarter indicated. Failing in their endeavour to damage the estimation in which Dr. Hillier is held by the members of his flock, these political demagogues and Bradlaughite adherents turned their persecution into another channel. With a peculiar elasticity of conscience, the opponents of Dr. Hillier quickly suppressed their much-vaunted love of liberty of thought, and the result of their continuous efforts is that the Deacons of the chapel are forced to discharge their Minister for want of funds with which to support him. So far, the 'Rads and Brads' have succeeded, but Dr. Hillier will not yet leave Exeter, and he has already been requested by many friends, both Churchmen and Dissenters, Conservative and Liberal, to continue his services in some public room in the city."

It is a new thing for Atheists and Communists to have such influence with a Baptist congregation as to cause the stoppage of supplies and the discharge of their minister. There must be something peculiar in the circumstances of the church at Exeter.

A communication appears in the Nonconformist and Independent headed, "High Nonconformity in Croydon." Nine Nonconformist choirs joined in a festival in St. George's Presbyterian Church. There was a processional entrance, the ministers duly robed, and a processional hymn; a precentor with baton in hand, and distinction made between the different officiating persons. Many Nonconformists, we are told, withdrew. This new departure might properly make them cautious. To promote festivals of religious joy for the regenerated, who are Jesus Christ's, is a demand. But England has made the experiment of pleasing the unregenerate by externalisms, and hiding the fact that true religion was not in appearance but in heart, and after a thousand years' trial the Reformation proclaimed that the experiment was a most disastrous failure.

The surprises of our period are hard to explain. In the Episcopal Church an unobtrusive tide is setting in strongly in favour of spirituality. The evidences of this movement are numerous and most remarkable. Since the time of the Puritans however, the Nonconformists have been the witnesses for spirituality, and often in sackcloth; but no witness has been more grandly fruitful. Is the reverse of this to come?

Another new departure is advocated, about which we write, for the sake of giving information rather than of criticism. A Congregational Institution for the training of Dissenting Ministers has for somewhat less than fifty years been opened in Birmingham. It is proposed to transfer it to Oxford, and to appropriate the revenues given by its founders to the maintenance of it as a distinctively Congregational Hall at Oxford. The Nonconformist members of the University at Cambridge protest against the scheme as a retrograde movement in favour of sectarianism, and irreconcilable with the aspirations and efforts of Dissenters in the opposite direction.

A further ground of difference as to this new scheme relates to the best method of training young men for the ministry. Some hold that students should not be separated in a training college, and should be left free out of lecture hours to mingle in the stimulating life of a university. Others maintain the opinion of earlier Independents, that the best preparation for the ministry is the hallowed influence of a home life, under the fatherly influence of a wise Principal, and where, with literary culture, the influences of prayer and piety can be fostered.

It was said by a clergyman at the Mildmay Conference, that "the Gospel of reconciliation should be preached by all reconciled persons." This is true doctrine. There is, however, a danger of setting it forth as a new one. Methodism accentuated and systematised it more than a century ago. Nevertheless, it is hopeful to hear the newly appointed Bishop of London commending the 5000 members of the Diocesan Society of Lay Helpers, and the Bishop of the newly formed diocese of Southwell warning his clergy against jealousy of lay workers as "suicidal, a crime, and a blunder."

Dr. Ridding also commended the freer use, on week days, of churches, as the poor man's place for psalms and hymns; by which was meant that he should himself sing his spiritual songs, and not have them sung to him. Nothing could be more timely or promising among us than the use, on weekday evenings, of places of worship where the services were made highly popular, and where the poor were regarded as an integral part of the worshippers. Excellent are the uses of mission halls, but it would be an evil time before God and man when the poor of a nation came to think that churches and chapels were not for the like of them.

The other day, in a poor, crowded London thoroughfare, a young man stood with a pretty basket of flowers. His sister, by his side, offered some to the children, who soon flocked around them. Then they sang a hymn, and soon a crowd of weary mothers stood about them, listening to a story of the flowers, taken now and then from the hands of the happy children to illustrate some special truth of God's love. The black pansy, the scarlet geranium, the white pink, each in turn spoke of sin, salvation, and righteousness. The flowers that day had a high mission, for many went into their homes, attaching a double meaning to their beauty, and asking that this flower service might be continued from time to time. Cannot others follow this example in the summer months? It is a home-thrust to bid the black-hearted "Consider the lilies."

A writer in The Louisville (Kentucky) Electra, in an article on "Genius and Religion," says:—

> "It is undeniable that genius has shipwrecked many lives. Who doubts that Burns, Byron, Shelley, Goethe, Paine, Voltaire, Frederick the Great, or Napoleon—who can doubt, now that the details of their lives have been spread before us, that each of these suffered a moral conflict in proportion to his genius? Tossed between the awful fascination of self-sufficiency and tremendous passions, who can wonder that the lamp of some went out in utter darkness?"

Quite true; but on the other hand there have been and are men of genius who all through their lives, and by their deaths, testified their possession of something in addition to genius, i.e., the grace of God. It is hardly fair to attribute to so rare a thing as genius the declensions and errors of some of those who have, perhaps, possessed it. There is good genius and evil genius. We choose the world, and the genius within appropriates accordingly. We choose Him by whom the universe was framed, and, like the universe, we become subject to his will, and cannot suffer "shipwreck." Not genius, but the lusts of the flesh, darkened the lamps of those mentioned above, and whom the world regards as its "lights."

In conversing the other day with a man who had been for thirty years a pronounced and aggressive Atheist, and who had done much to foster Atheism amongst his fellow-workmen, this question was put to him: "When you went over to the side of Atheism, in spite of the example of the godly lives of your parents, was the inducement for so doing the result of conviction, or was it merely to escape, if possible, from the sense of responsibility to a higher power, who might claim from you an account for all your actions and words?" He replied: "I only wanted to feel absolutely free to think, speak, and act as I chose, and so I persuaded myself that there was no God before whom I should ever have to stand."

A second question asked was: "What led you to renounce Atheism and accept the Gospel of Christ?" Answer: "Five years ago I was driven to such utter darkness and despair, having nothing, and no one, to lay hold of, that I willingly, gladly, accepted the knowledge of God through Jesus Christ, and now I know the peace of holding my Saviour responsible for my safety in time and eternity." Third question: "What is it that makes men embrace Atheism, so far as your experience has shown you?" Answer: "It is not hostility to the doctrines of the Gospel so much as an intense love of independence, and the hateful feeling that they are responsible to some one greater than themselves. When once that feeling has been overcome, by the preaching of the love of God in Christ, we become comparatively easy."

We commend to our friends the letter on Northampton, by Admiral W. King Hall, page 15.

"K. M." writes: "Having been ordered to London for surgical advice, and feeling much for those who have to live in the East of London in such weather, I enclose £5 towards the fund for 'A Day in the Country,' wishing it were more." In the name of thousands of poor London children, we warmly thank "K. M.," and hope many will follow his kind example.

A correspondent, referring to a recent note on the advance of Ritualism, remarks that the practice of keeping churches open on week days for private prayer is unobjectionable, and worthy of imitation by others. We quite agree with him.

At a Conference of Ministers recently held the question was raised as to how to preach the Gospel more effectively, so as to win and attract the non-churchgoing, and meet increasing infidelity. A layman who was present was invited to give his views on the matter, and his reply was in substance as follows:—

> Make no apology for the Gospel you are going to preach, as is now so customary. Attempt no explaining away of facts and commandments of God in the Bible that are specially unpalatable to the audience, as being diametrically opposed to their habits of life and thought. Never allow a shadow of doubt to be thrown by yourself on any of the Bible narratives, specially of the Old Testament, but assert boldly as facts whatever the Word of God alleges as facts. Thousands of men are laying near for a sure anchorage, and any minister who will be bold enough to assert, with holy dogmatism, the Bible facts as facts, will fill his church, win unbelievers, strengthen timid believers, and become more established himself. God can take better care of his own Word when fearlessly preached, than we can by apologising for half its contents.

Rev. James Newby, coloured missionary, and his wife, well-known to many Christian friends in this country, are now on their way to Africa, to engage in Christian work. Those who have not read the thrilling and romantic story of Mr. Newby's life, THE PRODIGAL CONTINENT (Morgan & Scott, 1s. 6*d*.), may be glad to have their attention directed to it.

The Norwegian barque Paulus, a missionary ship, put into Grimsby the other day, and was found to have on board a band of fifteen missionaries and five children, bound for South Africa and Madagascar. Among them was a nephew of the late Cetewayo, who for six years has been studying in Stockholm, and is now returning to Africa as a missionary to his own people. There was one missionary returning with his family, another young couple and their child, and a Zulu girl. The rest of the fifteen were single men and women. May we not ask prayer for blessing upon this party of labourers for Africa, and that many others may prepare to follow their example?

"Is So-and-So orthodox in his views?" is a question not unfrequently asked concerning ministers and prominent teachers. "Not what you would perhaps call orthodox, for he is one of those men who does his own thinking." Herein lies then the root of unorthodoxy—doing one's own thinking. The Apostle Paul says in 2 Cor. iii. 5: "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God." To think on religious truths apart from the Holy Spirit is to wander off into many a strange speculation and error. Just now the air seems full of strange thoughts on all the great fundamental subjects of revelation. Some are "thinking" that the death of Christ was not atoning, but the result of his living in advance of his age, and falling a martyr to his opinions. Others again are "thinking" that culture and education are, by degrees, elevating mankind nearer God. Verily, the Bible says truly, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, saith the Lord." Let us say with the Psalmist, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God: how great is the sum of them."

Amongst those who "do their own thinking," we know of a minister who recently presided over a Conference of his brother ministers at their annual session extending over three days. In his capacity as Chairman of the Conference he preached a sermon to them one evening, in which he endeavoured to prove that the time had now come to abolish the Old Testament Scriptures from the pulpit and the Sunday-school. It was a book of obsolete history, and could have no practical bearing on the advanced condition of thought in the present day. Fortunately, he was somewhat alone in his thoughts, and found scarce any supporters. The following day, when the Sunday-school questions were under discussion, a resolution was passed unanimously to continue the use of the Old Testament, and rather to add to the number of lessons drawn therefrom than to diminish them.

At the same Conference this minister presented his resignation of his charge, the state of his Church being that the nearest member lived half a mile away, that for some years there had been no accessions, and the church was slowly but surely dying out. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

In THE ROYAL PROGRESS; or, Bringing the King Back (Marshall Brothers, 1*s*.) Rev. E. W. MOORE makes this pregnant remark: "One reason why the truth of the personal reign of Christ on earth has sometimes been looked upon with suspicion, may be traced to the fact that those who hold it have frequently ignored the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures which most clearly describe it (e g. Isa. xi. and xxxv.) are undoubtedly capable." We might even go farther and say that in order to the establishment of the kingdom of God under the reign of Christ on earth there must be a people in whose inward experience all has been fulfilled. The cow and bear must feed together, the lion must lie down with the kid, there must be a millennium in the soul, if there is to be a millennium on earth. The foundations of every throne are in the hearts of its subjects. We cordially commend Mr. Moore's valuable book.

Mr. and Mrs. William Noble have arranged to sail from Liverpool on Saturday, July 25, in the ss. Servia, for New York, en route for Mr. J. B. Gough's residence, Worcester, Mass. After spending some few months in the States and Canada, they purpose proceeding to the Australian Colonies, viâ San Francisco. Mr. Noble will deliver some farewell addresses at Hoxton Hall. On Monday evening next, July 13, at 8 p.m., he will speak in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presiding. On Tuesday he will be at the Crystal Palace at 8 p.m. On Wednesday, 15th, at 6.30, he will address a farewell meeting in Exeter Hall at the invitation of the President and General Committee of the Gospel Temperance Blue Ribbon movement, with which he has been so closely associated.

It would greatly relieve us if all our correspondents would write as briefly as possible. The best read pages of our weekly issue are these Notes and Comments. They frequently contain the essence of a lengthy communication, which it has taken considerable time and fuel of brain to boil down. If the writers would do this themselves it would probably lengthen our days, and would certainly prove an invaluable exercise to them.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler sailed from New York on July 4, in the ss. Etruria. He purposes spending a few months among his many Christian friends in Europe.

We have received a quantity of correspondence showing the weakness of Rev. A. B. Simpson's argument as to Faith Healing; we regret that we have not space this week for any portion of it.

A correspondent suggests that the unemployed men who stand day after day at the dock gates vainly waiting for a job might be sent out as sandwich men, carrying boards bearing Gospel texts. "The entrance of Thy Word giveth light." We shall be happy to receive subscriptions for putting this idea into practice.

Another correspondent calls attention to the inconsistency of Christian booksellers in selling publications of an unhealthy character. It is very much to be deplored.

We have received a letter from two gentlemen in Manchester, informing us that > "There are exceedingly few in this generation who do believe through the words of the Apostles; but we can say, assuredly, that we believe according to the Apostolic testimony, being thereby one with the Father, Jesus, and the Apostles, walking in the Apostolic faith, obedience, and baptism; and we have received the Apostolic power, which has descended from heaven, gathering together men and women by the Spirit, and gifts of the Spirit are in working operation amongst us. God, in consequence, holds us accountable for that which has been revealed in us. We may mention that the Lord will hold you responsible for the knowledge which has been communicated to you."

It occurs to us to quote as appropriate to the manifesto of these good, but misguided, men—"Not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth." Probably, however, they would reply that they are Divinely commended, as they have fifty-five gifted individuals who speak with tongues. Are the multitudinous mild follies that are in the air, preparing the way for the strong delusion that they should believe a lie, which God will send among men because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved?

The interior of Madagascar is threatened with famine owing to the destruction of the rice crop. We are glad to find that the report that the Hova Premier had been strangled by his enemies is not true.

By invitation of the Lord Mayor a meeting will be held at the Mansion House, on Monday afternoon, July 13, at 3 o'clock, to hear Miss Whately give an account of her Schools and Medical Mission at Cairo. The Lord Mayor will be supported by the Earl of Chichester, Rev. Flavel Cook, D.D, Mr. J. H. Tritton, and other friends of the English Egyptian Missions in Cairo.

HOMES OF HOPE.—These Homes have been greatly blessed in affording timely succour, chiefly to the most pitiable and hopeful of betrayed young women of the respectable classes, many of whom have been rescued from the initial stage of immorality, and restored to the ranks of virtue and respectability. It is sad to read in the report that "the want of funds necessitates the painful task of refusing many urgent applications from penitent girls at a period when timely assistance would prevent their falling into deeper sin." The revelations of immorality in those of tender years are very deplorable, and may well be pondered by all parents. Copies of the Report may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. W. Hornibrook, Homes of Hope, Regent-square, W.C.

The Mildmay Conference.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, June 24.

The Jews.

THIS subject occupied the attention of a very large gathering in Rooms 4 and 5, on the first afternoon of the Conference. The meeting was under the presidency of the Earl of Cavan, who spoke of the attitude of the Church toward the Jews. He pointed out that, until quite recent years, the Church had to a very great extent regarded the Jews, if not with dislike, yet without sympathy. He was thankful for some change in this respect, and was confident the more the Church fulfilled her duty, by walking humbly before the Lord, the more would she manifest loving-kindness towards his ancient people. The attitude of the Church towards the Jews should be more and more a matter of earnest supplication on the part of God's believing people.

Rev. Theo. J. Meyer, in dealing with the second part of the subject—the attitude of the Jews towards the Lord Jesus Christ—said that the Jews were created by and for the Lord Himself. They were the everlasting, not merely an ancient, people. There was a peculiar difficulty in treating of this subject; because, having been expressly created to show forth the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, as yet they had not fulfilled the task assigned to them, though in the end they would do so. To explain the attitude of the Jews towards Christ, he could find no other word than that of Paul; "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Jesus was proclaimed at the very cradle of the nation; in them, it was promised, all the nations of the earth should be blessed, and throughout the ages "the election" had received Christ. When, after his resurrection, He was declared to be the Son of God with power, 3000 on the day of Pentecost, 5000 the day after, and subsequently great multitudes both of men and women of the Jewish nation believed on his name. Still, it was received only by a fraction of the Jewish nation, though, even among that greater part which were blinded, there was expectation, and this, notwithstanding that the Talmudical system had squeezed all the spirit out of the Law. Even in the seventeenth century one who professed to fulfil these expectations found a great many adherents in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and this expectation enabled them to rejoice in the midst of all their bitter persecution to which they were subjected. But a notable change has passed over the Jews in this century. The French Revolution changed their position—now they enjoy the same rights and privileges as the peoples amongst whom they dwell; but, with the death of the Rabbinical system, the expectation of the Jews ceased. All this time the Jews had been in that wilderness of which the Lord speaks when He says, "I will allure thee into the wilderness." To be without God in the world—this was to be in the wilderness; but the persecution that had arisen so recently in Russia and Central Europe marked the turning of the tide. Since then more Jews had been brought to a knowledge of Christ than in the whole 1500 years previously, the number being estimated at between 50,000 and 70,000, amongst these being many men distinguished for their learning. The speaker then referred to the awakened desire of the Jews to return to Palestine and also towards God, but he pointed out that any return to the Talmudical system was altogether out of the question—that it was dead, could not be restored to life, and the question with many now was, "Where do we stand? What are we to do?" There is clearly a revived interest in, and a tendency towards, the study of the Bible, and the Bible will, nay must, lead to Christ. Therefore he looked forward with bright hope to the future; for, while recognising that it was still night-time for God's ancient people, he yet knew that, according to God's own promise, the night should most surely be followed by morning.

Rev. J. Wilkinson spoke on the last division of the subject, "the attitude of the Lord Jesus Christ towards the Jews." He said he had invited the late Dr. Stern to speak at that meeting, and he had said how pleased he should have been to have done so, but for a previous engagement in Scotland; before that could be fulfilled he was called into the presence of the Master. The attitude of the Lord Jesus towards the Jews was expressed in the words of Scripture, "The same yesterday, to-day, and forever." Nothing that happened could possibly change the attitude of the Lord Jesus to his brethren according to the flesh. Jesus said, "he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father also," "I and my Father are one." Therefore, as also He told us that He came to do his Father's will, they only needed to inquire what were the feelings of the Father's heart towards the Jews in what might be called the yesterday of the world's history, to know also the state of Jesus' heart towards them both to-day and for ever. Throughout the Old Testament there is seen constantly moving about among his people the Jehovah-angel, and of his attitude in the past He tells in those words: "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." This and other passages tell of the Father's love, which is also the Son's. In Ezek. xvi. was a wonderful description of the Jewish nation, when God took her and betrothed her unto Himself; yet she rebelled against Him, so that He was obliged to put her away from Him.

Then He puts Himself in another attitude: "I will send my Beloved Son." So Jesus came "to seek and to save that which was lost," and He declared, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." They, indeed, would not receive Him; but now He sits at the right hand of the Father, to give repentance to Israel. God says He means to conquer yet. In their affliction they will seek Him earnestly (R.V.). In that terrible time of which the prophet Daniel speaks, the Jews will be the grand difficulty in the way of Antichrist, who will seek to wipe out the Jews from the face of the earth; but in their extremity the Jews will cry to the God of their fathers. then will the clouds burst asunder over Mount Olivet. He who was nailed to the cross on Calvary 1800 years ago will be welcomed as their Deliverer and King. So wonderful have been God's dealings with this wonderful people that, he believed, a great deal of time in heaven would be occupied in unfolding his plan of redemption. Speaking, then, of how the Father was seen in the Son, and Jesus Himself is represented by the Holy Ghost, he showed that Jesus was also seen in his people; the world, which would not read the Bible, and would not understand it if they did, was continually having Christ presented to them in his people. How grieved was he, after more than thirty-four years of labour on behalf of God's ancient people, still to find so little love towards them on the part of the Church, which, he was convinced, was losing an immense blessing by their lack of Divine compassion. The more, in reading the Word of God, they sought to find out the mind of the Lord Jesus Christ towards the Jews, the more interest would they take in that people to whom Christ came filled with such purposes of love concerning them.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, June 25.

Christ our Leader and Guide in Service.

The large hall was well filled this afternoon again by those anxious to consider the question of the deepening of spiritual life. Rev. E. H. Hopkins, who presided, briefly introduced the subject of the day by pointing out the need for translating such blessed doctrines into the realities of daily life.

ADDRESS BY REV. J. B. FIGGIS.

Having quoted Num. xvi. 5; Isa. xxvii. 6; Zech. iii. 2; and John xii. 24, Mr. Figgis said:—We want both usefulness and fruitfulness, but fruitfulness first, then usefulness. No tree is useful that is not fruitful. There may be much hurry, much zeal, much service, but we will not please the Lord in our service unless we please the Lord in our life. There must be fruitfulness, and blossom is the promise of fruit. It may be, some of those you are the means of converting, shall render grand service yet. It may be that in some who have been doing quiet deaconnesses' work there is stirring a disposition to go forth; it may be the Lord will say by and by, "As thou hast borne witness for Me in Jerusalem, so also shalt thou bear witness in Rome." Some may be pluming their wings in comparatively unknown and humble work, who may yet be sent forth to preach the everlasting Gospel to the ends of the earth. It is good to have the promise, for if there be the blossom the fruit shall follow. Let us remember that consecration to God is the secret of the whole thing, and consecration to God without consecration to one another is an illusion. We long to be up and doing, seeking to win that soul to Christ, to convert this and that one, to edify and build up in Jesus those who have just begun to learn the way.

But how can there be fruit-bearing in a life like ours? Look at that rod, that rod of Aaron laid up there before the Lord. It is a dry rod laid up there, not planted in the garden, but laid up there before Him. What less likely to bring forth blossom and almonds? Can anything be more wonderful? Yes, one thing can. Take, instead of that rod cut from the tree, a brand plucked out of the fire, and with a great deal of the fire still in it, glowing, burning, so that you can hardly hold it, barely touch it. Yet it is of that brand plucked from the fire God said, "It shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit" The worst of us, the weakest of us, the vilest of us, the most steeped in sin, the one who is most conscious the fire is still in his heart, may yet by God's blessing bring forth blossom and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit. That is what God wants to see, not merely wall fruit, but as in the case of Joseph, the branches running over the wall. Not merely fruit unto ourselves, but fruit in others, and so fruit to the praise and glory of God.

God hath said it, and it shall be; but how? "If it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Not till then, not without death. The noblest of God's workers who ever lived, the prince among human servants of our King, look at him. Look at such a man as Paul the aged, the prisoner of Jesus Christ, who laboured abundantly in sufferings and strife and scourging, who lived a life of almost constant martyrdom, and endured hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. The secret of service is suffering, the secret of service is death, crucifixion with Christ. Even such a one as Paul felt he must keep under his body, keep it in subjection to Christ, lest he should be a castaway. There he hung a martyred man before his martyrdom, dying, yea, dead with Christ, as he tells the Galatians, "Crucified with Him;" no longer living, but Christ taking his place and living in his stead.

And when shall this be? When we take Christ as our Leader and Guide in service. Remember that He must be the only Guide; we cannot follow two. And, as He is our only Guide, so must He be our only Leader. Remember you take no lower model for service than Christ Himself. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." It is humility that the Apostle is speaking about there, and he will have no less standard than the example of Him who bowed the heavens and came down. John also tells us we ought to walk as Christ Himself also walked; that we ought to walk with God as much as Christ walked with God when He was here below. God's work never will be done by us till we are ready to lay down our lives in his service; and this world will never be evangelised as He would have it by our witnessing to all nations, clear nd full, the witness He would have borne, till we are ready to die for Him.

Perhaps the word Leader has another meaning. nstead of meaning pattern it means one who eads. Is it not our comfort when we are going o conflict that we have Christ going before us, and securing the victory and passing it over to us? And the same joy is ours in undertaking any work, however arduous, difficult, and seemingly mpossible. We have the Lord with us as Captain, as King, and, following in his wake, no service can be too arduous, and no sin too abhorrent.

ADDRESS BY REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

The special line of thought to-day is: there can be no true service of God till a man or woman has taken his or her place in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is now at the right hand of God. Sonship on the throne is the starting-point of service. It is exactly where our great Pattern and Leader and Guide commenced his service, and exactly there we must commence. Then, we may present spirit, body, and soul, talents, time, and whatever may be committed to us, to Him who has redeemed us; from that moment it is our delight to follow our Lord and Master, and yield them all to God, because God gave us them in Him.

There are many who have believed, who have found pardon, accepted justification as an nstantaneous thing received from God, but who do not understand what it is to yield their body unto God. They speak of being saved and of serving, but they hardly understand the great and infinite reality of which Paul speaks when he writes himself a "slave of Jesus Christ." Paul delighted to offer himself to be bound to the chariot wheels of the Lord Jesus Christ for ever.

It is as sons we must serve. We must understand that slaves of Jesus Christ are true freemen, and of such, in a sense, He says, "This is my beloved son, hear him." When we so go in his name the nations will hear us.

Is this sonship for us? It is; it is for all the redeemed, and it is resurrection sonship. Here we take a position (and I speak it with all reverence) the Lord Jesus Christ, the mighty Son of God, could not take when He came from glory and walked this earth as our pattern. Now He is on high as the risen Christ, and we begin there. We start on a pinnacle the world never knew until the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Taking as our starting-point the resurrection life, that knows no death, no end, no decay, no deterioration, and which is ever advancing towards full perfection. We reckon ourselves as dead with Christ, who died once and for ever, and having died we are risen with Christ once and for ever; and now having died we are alive unto God through Jesus Christ.

All service must be for the glory of God. The moment we speak thus, it is objected, that we are aggrandizing God at the expense of the creature; that God's delight is found only in pleasing Himself. What is the Church of the living God doing that such a slander is possible? The Church of God has induced the slander because she knows not her privilege; and until she does it is not to be wondered that the world does not. You talk, says the world, of the glory of God, as of a Being who sits up there commanding obedience and the service of slaves; but if the Church lived up to her privilege she would know that the glory of God is the blessing of the creature. The glory of God and the good of the creature are always synonymous. You cannot enhance the glory of God, or add to his essential glory, or make Him greater by anything you do, but you can advance your own blessedness by pleasing Him; in bringing glory to God you bring blessing to your own soul.

Remember, then, that as service commenced at the throne, because the Son feels there is no delight except in doing the will of the Father, therefore, from the moment we become true sons and daughters of God, it becomes our delight and joy to offer to Him every faculty and power He has given us. We say to Him, "Take them all." Why? Because we must. Many look askance at the word must: "We know we must serve God, but we dread that God is going to ask so much, we hardly dare offer it all to Him." May God forgive any heart that has so thought of Him; "God is hard, He is asking me for what will hurt me." No, dear child of God, it is blessedly for the best to give to God what God so gently asks. He says, "My son, give Me thine heart," and you will not lose, but grandly gain by yielding it to Him. The moment we understand that God's will is our blessedness, from that moment we shall yield with joy, and learn day by day more and more that his will is the exceeding delight of the creature.

What does God demand? In our syllabus there are six heads of service, and this was necessary, for you have six meetings; but a seventh head should be added, and it is of a practical character. There are preludes, principles, pattern, pathway, privileges, and prospects; the seventh is practice or performance. God would have us render service to Him now. It is service every child of God is delighted to perform. It is service in the house of God. God has no other servants but his children. He wants no other slaves but those who are prepared to take service in the house as sons. And mark, through all the Scriptures God has one great purpose, the erection of a temple which shall be to his glory. We see the shadow of it in the tabernacle in the wilderness, in the temple erected at Jerusalem. This temple is now being erected; and we ourselves are living stones "Whose temple ye are." From the very moment the Lord Jesus Christ returned to heaven the great temple, the Church, began to be erected, and it is still being erected. It is being erected that God may dwell with men. And lastly, there is the final temple shown in Rev. xxi., a temple which God and his Christ shall inhabit for ever. This is the one great end of service. You and I are added as living stones to the spiritual house. We are called to take our work in the house, and it can never be finished till every individual stone is brought in and complete. Then shall be finally erected the great perfect temple, the new creation, in which God is all and in all.

This is the service to which we are called, the erection of God's house. It was so in the Mosaic dispensation, brought to an end at the coming of Christ, and it is so in the Church of the new dispensation. Individually and collectively, as the Church, we form part of the temple of God, and we are called to labour in building that temple. The will of God concerning us is exactly what it was when the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, our Pattern, Leader, and Guide, prayed for us, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth. As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." When our souls are in accord with the will of God, when we understand our great Pattern, Leader, and Guide, going before us, then we know we can have no rest, no calm of soul, till we mount to the heavenlies, and say, "There must not be a hoof left behind, for we know not with what we must serve God till we be come thither." What must you yield? All. And what is your special need? It may be consistency at home; it may be that banking book, that business house, that trying mistress or servant, that trying school, my girl, or you, my lad, going out to the world, that trying service before you, whatever it may be before you, "this is the will of God, even your sanctification." Let us say, "I sanctify myself by setting it all at thy feet." Then there is the Church, and Paul says, "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify it." He will yet present it without spot or wrinkle. Oh, brother, you are part of the Church, and the Holy Ghost would polish you; but you don't like the rubbing, it is so wearing. God grant we may be willing to be rubbed out, but not to rust out. God make us all willing to work out, even unto death, if need be, the mighty will of God, which is the completion of his Church.

Then look forward to the mighty consummation. Behold the Son of God bowing down to the lowest depths, seeking lost souls, never asking his rights, suffering and sorrowing, and bearing our sins; surely we may be willing to bear all things, to spend and be spent, living or dying, if God so will. You are the Lord's, He hath bought you; in God's name give Him his own, and make his service your delight. The moment you do that He will make your wants his care. He has promised to keep you exactly so far as you commit your wants to Him. There is deep meaning in those words of Paul when lying in prison awaiting a martyr's death, "I am not ashamed, for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." Brethren, what have we committed to Him? Let us commit our all, and He will keep it and give it back in that day when we shall see Him and be like Him, because we shall see Him as He is.

Foreign Missionary Meeting.

A large and deeply interesting meeting, on behalf of foreign missions, was held in Rooms 4 and 5, on the second afternoon of the Conference, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Tritton. The company having sung the favourite missionary hymn "Tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King," the Chairman read Psalm lxxii., the closing verses being audibly repeated by the whole meeting, as an expression of adoration and prayer. The Chairman, before calling on the allotted speakers, said:—Since we met a year ago there has been the manifestation of a missionary spirit in our land, which we all feel has surpassed that of previous years. This has no doubt been owing in part to the prayers which have gone up from this place. We recognise the part which our brother, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, has taken in stirring up the young of our land to go forth as missionaries into heathen countries. Those great meetings that took place at Exeter Hall, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and elsewhere, were the means of stirring to their depths the hearts of many young men; we have bid farewell to many whom we loved, and who have gone to distant parts of the earth. But the work is vast, and the simple increase of population over the whole world outweighs, times without number, the additions to the Church of Christ that are made year by year through the labours of those who are now in the mission field. O that the Lord Himself would pour down upon us and upon the natives of the various countries a missionary spirit. We have seen an earnest of this spirit poured out; God grant that the feeling may deepen, and that the duty of evangelising the whole world may be more fully recognised, both by men and women, all around us.

LORD RADSTOCK ON INDIA.

We are here upon a deeply important question, and I do trust that the issue of this meeting may not merely be a quickened interest and more information given as to the various parts of the mission field referred to, but that there will be a fresh opportunity found for linking on fresh needs to Christ, and a fresh outcome of his fulness for meeting the needs of hundreds of millions who yet sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

I feel deeply my responsibility in speaking about India. I think that a great many of us have not realised that India, instead of being one country, is a collection of countries, with a population of about 250 millions, consisting of different races, with different languages and different habits; collected in one large empire under our rule, but with degrees of education and with race differences as great as, if not greater than, what you find in the different nations of Europe. The first thing that strikes the visitor to India is the enormous mass of the population. Landing in Bombay one seems lost in the masses of people, with perhaps one European in every five hundred natives. You then realise what a tiny handful the English race are amidst that great population. Further into the interior you may travel hundreds of miles without meeting more than a stray European here and there. Here then you have this enormous mass of people, all in a state of expectancy. Of course, as the Europeans are the ruling race, the natives naturally look up to them. They are all called "Christians." Imagine to yourselves all the various kinds and classes of people in the English society throughout India, put down as the representatives of Christianity in the minds of the natives. "That man a Christian!" they will say, "Why, he does a lot of things we would not do. Look at him; he lives such and such a life; we don't want that kind of Christianity; we would rather have our own religion." That is one of the first things that strikes you—the appalling fact that a very large number of our countrymen, while they are called "Christians," are by their daily lives dishonouring the name and cause of Christ. This is, perhaps, the fundamental question with respect to missions in India, that those who in the eye of the people represent Christianity are misrepresenting it in every way; therefore you start with a tremendous difficulty. Those who have the opportunity, whether by correspondence or by any other means, of influencing the European population, have a great responsibility. I am glad to say that there are efforts in this direction; a society has been established especially with a view to the evangelising of resident Europeans.

But then there is the great question of taking the Gospel to the natives. There are a considerable number of missions at work. In some towns there are three or four missions represented, while in some large tracts of country there is no sort of Gospel witness whatever. I was at one place, which is 100 miles distant from the nearest mission station—no missionary at all in a large and thickly populated region! You travel by rail, and you see the people crammed into every train, by hundreds and hundreds, going long journeys on pilgrimages to Benares or some other sacred city on the Ganges. Then you see the manifestation of their religious life and their religious activity at every turn. In the towns you find large temples, and hear all sorts of strange noises which the people associate with their worship. They are very earnest in their religious feelings and observances. You see Mohammedans kneeling down in the public streets in Calcutta and other places, going through their devotions without omitting one genuflection or one prayer. So there is a yearning after something. I met a native gentleman in Madras—a very superior man. I asked him where he had been. He said, "Benares." I asked him why he went there. "I wanted to get merit." "Did you get it?" "Ah," he said, "I don't know; I hope so." That is an example of the religious zeal of the mass of the people—millions on millions of them. They are far more earnest about their religion than the English people are.

What are the means taken to bring the Gospel before these people? Speaking generally, a mere handful of missionaries—a number that is perfectly and absolutely inadequate to the need. There is also the question of schools. I am glad to say there is a great development of Christian schools. In the Presidency of Madras there are something like 50,000 children receiving Scriptural instruction every day. But here again there is an utter inadequacy of labourers, so much so that they have to get Mohammedans to teach the Scriptures. Imagine the truths of the Bible being taught by a Mohammedan or a Hindoo; you cannot suppose they will be very efficiently taught. Still, thank God, there is a great preparatory work being done, and the effect is that Hindooism is, undoubtedly, breaking down in all directions. You may go into many cities in India and you will find that an enormous majority of the educated Hindoos are willing to listen to the truth from the Scriptures. I had the opportunity, through the goodness of God, of speaking to educated natives in a number of towns throughout India, and I found them most ready to hear the Word of God. In one place, at Poona, the headquarters of the disaffection during the Mutiny, we had most able men, some of them great Sanscrit scholars, who listened with an interest and receptivity that made me thankful to God. In one or two places we had an after-meeting for natives, where they could be definitely conversed with and brought to the point. Therefore, one cannot help seeing that there is a great preparedness on all hands. Many have got a kind of idea of Christianity through the schools; they say they do not believe in their own religion, but they have not received the Gospel of Christ in such a way as to make them turn to God. They look on Christianity with complacency, but they are not brought to a full knowledge of God in Christ.

Another great branch of effort is Zenana work. I feel that there is no branch more important than this. Remember that practically the men missionaries cannot possibly get at the large proportion of the women in India; women missionaries alone can get at them. Women can get at the men as well; therefore, in many places the Christian women have twice the opportunities of the men. One of the peculiarities of our rule in India is, that the English missionaries are looked upon as belonging to the ruling race, and as people to be treated with great respect, as belonging to that race. Of course there are advantages in that, but, on the other hand, the missionaries do not get at the people as they would do if it were otherwise. Many natives look upon the missionaries in the way in which a boy looks at the schoolmaster. They listen to them, but there is not much social contact, as a rule; their habits and methods of living are so different that the lives of the two are quite distinct. It seems to me that this blessed thought of sending Christian women into the homes of the people is the link that is needed in connection with the social aspects of Christianity. They not only want religious teaching, but they want, as it were, Jesus Himself brought into the difficulties and trials of their life. These Christian sisters can alone go amongst them and sympathise with them, and thus commend Christ to their acceptance. It is becoming increasingly plain that many of the dear Christian workers are not much wanted in England at all. If many of them would leave this land where they are crowding each other out, and go abroad where they could exercise their gifts in a larger sphere, I believe it would be a great blessing to England as well as to those other countries.

I commend the question to you as before the Lord. There are these millions of India practically your children. They are willing to accept what you tell them. I cannot forbear saying that I do thank God for our Civil Service in India to-day. They are not all Christian men, of course, who compose it, but it is one of the grandest services that ever existed, and in its good influence on the natives there is no service to be compared with it. I had a remarkable testimony on this point from a dear old saint, an American missionary, who has been fifty years in India. He is one of the missionaries in Lodiana who sent out the appeal for a Day of Prayer, for twenty-four years before the Week of Prayer was established. He said: "I am an American, and, therefore, I like my own country and my brethren there, but I say there is no country in the world that can send out such a body of civil servants as you have got here." Lord Radstock then gave some interesting particulars as to the progress of mission work among the Santhals, where, during the past eighteen years, there have been many converted to Christ, a large number of schools established, and where there is a remarkable readiness to hear the Word of God. He spoke also of a German Mission under a simple hard-working Christian, named M. Ziemann, who, by mingling with the people, has influenced large numbers of them for good. Reference was made by his lordship to the mela or heathen festival at which a wonderful religious revival lately took place through native agency. Particulars of this movement have already appeared in our columns.

The great question, continued Lord Radstock, is as to the future of Indian missions. Suppose, in a large Indian city, there are three or four, or five different missions—say there are a Free Church of Scotland Mission, an Established Church of Scotland Mission, a Church of England Mission, and perhaps a Lutheran Mission and a Baptist Mission. A Hindoo is converted, and now comes the question which Church he will join. The question arises as between the Established Church of Scotland and the Free Church of Scotland Missions. "Tell me," he says, "what are the respective merits of the different denominations; what is the cause of the division?" You say that it arises from the right of the Queen to the presentation to benefices in Scotland by such and such an Act of Parliament. Of course he says he does not understand anything about this. Then, perhaps, there is a Lutheran Mission, and the convert is told that they follow the Confession of Augsburg. He asks what that is. I am not sure, said the speaker, that we in England all know what the confession of Augsburg is. The claims of other missions are perhaps discussed with the convert, and he knows as little about those as about the others. Of course I am putting the matter in a somewhat crude way, but you will understand that there are enormous difficulties arising out of denominational questions which may be of great importance here, but out there—what are they? The missionary societies feel responsible for the administration of the congregations, and the selection of agents, and the giving of rules. It does seem to me that they have a great responsibility in directing from home the work out there. I do not know how far it is Apostolic. The word church is mentioned 108 times in the New Testament writings, and you will find I think that in every case it refers to a local church that was reponsible alone to Christ as the Head. That, it seems to me, is the solution of the question. I am thankful to say that in nearly every place in India I found there was a missionary Conference. The missionaries meet once a month and confer together; they work in harmony and in sympathy, and they are practically the directors and overseers of the Christian work in these places. I would suggest that missionary committees at home should much more commend their agents to these missionary Conferences, making them, as it were, the basis of union, and discipline, and guidance, rather than discussing and deciding at home questions of the merits of which they must be largely ignorant. We know how jealous the Holy Ghost is of the glory of Christ; in proportion as we are in sympathy with Him, we shall work on the lines of giving to Christ the headship of the Church. It is a blessed privilege to look to Him to guide us in any matter, and not to meddle or interfere too much ourselves. The Lord is working in India, and a great time of preparation is going on. We thank God that while the number of actual converts is limited perhaps to some 200,000, or thereabouts, yet those who have the greatest knowledge of the country recognise that prejudices are breaking down, and there are multitudes being prepared to accept Christ as their Lord and Saviour. One holding a high Government post said to me: "India will be born in a day." Let us, whether by prayer, by personal help or by pecuniary help, as the Lord may guide us, seek to have fellowship with Him in gathering out these multitudes of lost souls and bringing them into the glorious light and liberty of the children of God.

REV. J. G. PATON ON THE NEW HEBRIDES.

We meet with many who say that Christianity has become old and worn out; that it cannot accomplish the great work it once did. They ask us to point to any part of the world where the Gospel is now producing the fruits it produced in the days of the Apostles. I hope to be able to show you that it is producing even now in the South Sea Islands as great results as it did then, if not greater. The Apostles went amongst the most civilised peoples of the day, and many were brought to Jesus through them. Missionaries in modern times have gone, unattended, to these islands peopled by unclothed savages, and there the Gospel has been, as it ever is, the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. It is twenty-seven years since I first went to the South Seas, and now, after an absence of twenty-one years, I return to old England to find Christian work going on in all directions in the churches and outside the churches. It seems to me that there is a movement now throughout this country and throughout the Christian world such as there has never been, perhaps, since the days of the Reformation a glorious work which must be maintained till e whole world is filled with the glory of the rd. Missions to the South Sea Islands began ty years ago. When they began the whole nabitants of all the groups of islands scattered er the Southern Seas were in gross heathen rkness. What have been the results? They e only beginning—the first droppings of a great ower, the first incoming of a glorious harvest at has been prepared for the glory of the Great isbandman. When we went there there were professing Christians. Now we have 36,000 Polynesia, 1500 in Micronesia, and 31,000 in elanesia—68,500 in church membership in the uth Sea Islands. Does that look as if Chris- nity could not accomplish as great a work now in the days of the Apostles?

It is our privilege and our honour to aid in this eat and glorious work. In the brief time allotted me I shall speak more particularly of my own here of work—the New Hebrides, part of one the South Sea Island groups. Work was gun there thirty-seven years ago by two ssionaries. The whole group was in heathen rkness; the natives wore no clothing; the ossest crimes were delighted in; there was word in the language to represent "widow," l she was put to death the moment her sband died. Such was the condition of the ople among whom they began to work. It l been attempted to introduce the Gospel fore. The London Missionary Society had tried The well-known John Williams and Mr. rris were murdered on attempting to land at romanga. Others were sent, but they had to part. Till our Presbyterian Churches attempted nothing was accomplished. Two missionaries Anietyum, amid trials and difficulties, and rsecutions, acquired the language and trans- ed the whole Bible into it. God has spared one them to see the Bible carried through the ss, so that now every native can possess a y of the Word of God in his native tongue. ey tried to make the work self-supporting m the first as far as possible. They said, Ve will translate the Word of God for you o your own tongue, but you must try and y for the printing of it." The people said y would be glad to do that, only they had no ney, and no way of obtaining money. But for een long weary years they cultivated and sold owroot, and never saw a penny of the money y had raised all that time. In that period y made £1400 by the sale of arrowroot; this s entirely devoted to do the publishing the Bible, but it was one of the grandest estments ever made. Now they can study Book that will raise them in the scale civilisation. Talk of sending the trader ore the missionary; experience shows that erever this has been done the dark races re melted away before the white. Deeds dark as any recorded of the worst days of erican slavery have been perpetrated through vessels from Queensland engaged in the so- led labour traffic—women dragged from their aes, and men murdered. And all this has ne on under the sanction of the British vernment. Little wonder that the work of ilisation and progress is stopped, and the k races are melting away before the whites. hope every friend of the cause of God and nanity will use their influence to get this foul fic stopped, and the trials and dangers re- ved which beset our work for God in the th Seas.

Ve began work in the New Hebrides thirty- en years ago; now there are sixteen mission- s engaged in the group. I think I may say, hout fear of contradiction, that we have been e to carry out the spirit of union that Lord lstock has referred to as being of such im- tance in India. We have missionaries con- ted with different branches of the Church in country and in Australia, but we all meet common ground. Since I came home my rt has often risen to God in prayer, that He ld lead his people more to see the value of shing souls, and the importance of their g brought to Christ; then all denominational erences would sink into utter insignificance, pared with the work of bringing these un- d ones to love and serve the Lord Jesus ist. What have been the results of our labour? In the 16 islands occupied by the missionaries we have 52 stations and 90 schools. All these schools are conducted by native teachers prepared by the missionaries. There are 8000 professed converts to the Gospel, and beyond that we have 70,000 now ready and waiting for the Word of God. Therefore I have been sent home to try and get more missionaries. We want highly educated men, because every missionary out there has to acquire the unwritten language and be able so to construct it as to translate the Word of God. We have now the Scriptures, in whole or in part, translated into, and printed in, ten different languages that were unknown to the world when our mission began its work. Six other languages are under construction. We desire to extend this work of construction and translation to the remainder of the group, but we cannot get missionaries to go out to them. Therefore, as I have said, I have been sent home to try and get these missionaries. I am sorry I have as yet found none equal to the requirements of the work, but I hope God will provide them. Will you pray with me that God may thrust forth suitable labourers into his own harvest? I am here now, but I would far rather be out yonder. I have spent twenty-seven years of my life with these people, and my heart is with them. I have three sons preparing for the work. Oh! that the Christians of this land would hear the appeal of the previous speaker, and think of India and China and the other parts of the heathen world, where men and women are stretching out their hands for help, but there are none to help them, or give them the Word of God. Are there not many here who might be spared from their duties and obligations at home, and who will engage in this great work of carrying the light and blessings of the Gospel to those sitting in heathen darkness?

My principal object now is to get a new mission vessel. I have come home here against my will. Though there is no country like Great Britain, still I love the work of God far better. I would rather be amongst the savages of the South Seas, trying to bring them to Christ, than here enjoying the happiness of being present at this grand Conference, and sharing in the privileges you have here. I was the only white man in the island, and my wife the only white woman, and you may imagine how we value such privileges. But it was laid on my heart as a duty to the Church in Victoria, Australia, to come home and try to get this mission vessel for the work of the Lord in the South Seas. The vessel will cost £6000. When I came home twelve months ago, and gave my first address in Liverpool, some of the good friends said the churches at home were overburdened, and I would never raise the money. I said I would try. I have never called on or asked an individual for a subscription. None of you may expect to find me asking you for any money; I never do such a thing, while I am thankful to God for what He sends through his people, and grateful to them for their free-will offerings. I was told I would never get this money, but the Lord has already sent me over £5000 of the sum required. When I have another £1000 I will be away back to these islands, and I hope God will speedily send it.

In concluding his stirring address, the venerable missionary urged his hearers to more faith and prayer in connection with Christian work. He told how he and his partner in life, being so much isolated and only receiving their letters from the outside work twice a year, felt the blessedness of going to God with all their trials and difficulties, and finding in Him the strength and consolation they needed. He spoke of one missionary in the South Sea group, who laboured on for ten years without seeing any fruit of his toil. All the missionaries and their families united in prayer for him and his work. The natives of the place where he laboured rebelled against the head chief, and that potentate, having subdued his foes, resolved to kill these servants of God. They took to a boat in order to escape, when the chief called on them to come back. They could not resist the call, and, risking their lives, they returned to the island. The chief, though he seemed as if he was going to strike them down with his club, was restrained, and next day he came asking that he might be taught to worship the God who could help the missionaries to act as they had done. He became a decided Christian, and has remained so ever since. Thus the answer came in a remarkable way. Mr. Paton related, as a further fruit of the South Sea work, how the queen of one island is now personally labouring in the Gospel for the salvation of another tribe who had killed her husband. "I entreat your prayers on behalf of our blessed work, which I hope to return and carry on while God spares me."

REV. C. F. WARREN ON JAPAN.

What a wonderful work, he said, has been going on in Japan for the last twenty-five years. We must go back to that period for the beginning of it, though its manifestation has been rather during the last twelve or thirteen years. Some twenty-six years ago God opened that interesting country to the Western world for the first time. Then it became possible for foreign missionaries to reside in open ports in the Empire of Japan. They cannot, even now, reside in every part of the empire, though they are free to go throughout the country and preach. Of course native preachers and teachers have the fullest liberty. The field was chiefly occupied by American missionaries from 1859 to 1871. They laboured under great difficulties, and in the midst of much opposition. Few avowed converts were found, but, as in the case of other countries, a great preparatory work was going on. At the close of the second twelve years' effort in Japan, what do we find? Not only difficulties removed from the preaching of the Gospel, but a large and growing profession of Christianity. In 1873, the edicts against Christianity were removed from the public notice-boards. To-day, I venture to say that the number of avowed Church members would be about 10,000. There is much in this for which to thank God and take courage.

Mention has been made of Church divisions. What we need most is unity rather than uniformity, and that is what we should aim at. I think, in all the countries in which I have lived, there is no band of Christian brethren more united in heart sympathy than the Protestant missionaries of Osaka, Japan, where I have lived and laboured for eleven years. Our mutual sympathy takes not only the form of well-chosen words but of deeds. The Convention of Protestant missionaries in Japan, in 1872, agreed to have a united translation of the New Testament. In 1880 they met together to praise God for the completion of that work, which was largely accomplished by the American missionaries. In 1878 a similar conference was held to consider a united translation of the Old Testament. The number of missionaries had considerably increased, but they were all of one mind, and the work is so far advanced that in twelve months, perhaps, God may move them to meet again and thank Him for the completion of this great work.

Mr. Warren referred, with some detail, to the Missionary Conference held at Osaka, in Central Japan, in 1883, which was a time of remarkable blessing to all the workers labouring in connection with various sections of the Church. There exists, he said, the most cordial feeling and brotherly affection between the missionaries in Osaka, and throughout Japan generally. The Conference was not only the means of cementing the Christians in brotherly love, and in raising the tone of spiritual life, but in awakening a special evangelistic interest throughout the country. The effects of the awakening have also been seen in a better and more cordial feeling among the Japanese Christians towards them. The Japanese are an independent race of people, and they have sometimes been inclined to be jealous of the position held by the foreign workers; but now they see that there should be no distinctions between them, and that they are all one in Christ Jesus. Mr. Warren also referred to the letter recently sent by the Y.M.C.A., at Osaka, to Mr. George Williams, asking the aid of friends in this country in the furtherence of their work. He thought it would be a fitting thing that a great undenominational gathering like the Mildmay Conference should help on the catholic work of the Y.M.C.A. in Japan.

Prayer for Missions.

On Thursday afternoon a prayer meeting for missions was held in the Tent, which was well filled. Rev. Gilbert Karney, who presided, said the extent to which Christian influence was already permeating Mohammedan families was seen in a tract received by him that very morning, written by a Mohammedan, calling upon all the true followers of Mahomet to arise at once and resist steadfastly the encroachments of the Christian religion.

A large number of requests for prayer were presented, including work in Africa, India, China, and various parts of Europe. Special prayer was asked for F. S. Arnot, in Africa, who is labouring in a district where Christ has not before been named; for Henry Soltau and his wife, the latter now hopefully recovering from a severe illness; for Miss Leigh's work in Paris. Several of the prayers offered contained fervent appeals for blessing on medical missions, wherever existing, also for their multiplication and increased efficiency; also that God would speedily wipe out the opium blot among China's millions.

In closing the meeting, Mr. Karney urged on all present the cultivation of a growing expectation of blessing. The answer to their prayers might come suddenly. While waiting, let them look for large and rapid manifestation of the Divine power in the fulfilment of the promise. At any moment there might be a mighty outflow of God's blessings which would astonish them. Some of those who are labouring in the mission field are actually telling us this at the present time.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, June 26.

Parents' Prayer Meeting.

Immediately after the Communion on Friday afternoon a Parents' Prayer Meeting was held, conducted by Rev. D. B. Hankin. He reviewed the varied experiences of parents in the training of their children. God's delays in answering prayer were not to be regarded as implying denials. Much good was being done by the Children's Bible Unions, not only in families, but also in schools. Let them look for early conversions among their children, many notable instances of which were on record, including the late President Edwards of America, who was converted at nine years of age. I can remember, continued the speaker, when quite a child, leaving my mother's knee, where I was accustomed to kneel, and retire to my bedside, earnestly to pray that God would bless me and make me his disciple. That prayer, offered thus early, was answered. Only last week, special prayer was made by some young men connected with Mildmay, for one who was leaving the country; their prayer was heard, and the young man was brought to the Lord.

The prayers that followed included several ascriptions of praise for answers to requests at last year's Conference. In one case, after thirty years of a mother's prayers, a son was saved, and eventually all the family. A great number of requests were presented.

How to Deal with the Anxious.

Rev. N. Sherbrooke presided at a meeting in the Tent on the last afternoon. After reading Acts xiii. 42, 43, and xviii. 25, 26, he spoke on the immense importance of personal dealing with souls, the danger of doing this work in a formal or mechanical way, and the tact and wisdom needed to get hold of awakened souls for an after-meeting without frightening them. He made these further suggestions:—

Get them to tell you what they think they need, and then, like a skilful physician, apply the remedy. Be explicit in the phrases you use, and do not take for granted that the person understands theological terms which are familiar to yourself. Read as well as quote passages of Scripture. Don't hurry over cases; lead slowly but surely to Christ. Make them pray for themselves as well as pray with them. Take the names and addresses if possible. Try and follow up cases afterwards. Convince of sin, then lead to Christ. Mr. Soltau's book, "The Inquiry Room," is invaluable for Christian workers.

Mr. Goodchild, of the Men-servants' Mission, spoke next, followed by Rev. A. J. Begbie, vicar of Framsden, Rev. T. Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, and Rev. W. Chettle, vicar of Bradley, Staffordshire.

Under the Mulberry-Tree.

AMONG the trees that are famous, either by age or use, must be classed the well-known mulberry-tree in the west garden of the Conference Hall. Like most of its species, its shape is somewhat ungainly, and, living in London, its branches are blackened by ablutions of soot, but its copious covering of fresh light-green leaves renders it pleasant to the eye, and, when the sun shines thereon, it is high enjoyment to sit under its pleasant shade. If there are "tongues in trees," and they are capable of husbanding sounds, and giving them out again, then wonderful stories are treasured up in this old trunk. Originally, when the neighbourhood was a farm, and the cattle drank from the flowing waters of the New River, the song of birds and the talk of the unlettered labourer were the chief sounds to be noted; but, since the founding of the Conference Hall, it has heard stirring tales of missionary enterprises in almost every part of the world.

A MISSIONARY MEETING.

On Wednesday afternoon a missionary meeting was extemporised under the presidency of Mr. G. Kirkham. The first speaker was Cornelius Smith, the only one now left of the three well-known gipsy brothers, who told of the good work going on by the preaching of converted gipsies in different parts of the country.

Deacon Abraham, the Nestorian, from Oroomiah, in Persia, next related some particulars about his people in that distant part of the world, harassed by Mohammedan persecution and in need of sympathy and succour.

Mr. Milne, from Spain, told of his year's labours in that priest-ridden country, where, as he said, there is no liberty, no open-air preaching, and where not even a text of Scripture may be placarded.

Mr. Charles Cook gave an interesting account of a recent visit to Northampton, where much Christian work is being done in the churches, and by special evangelistic effort. He also hastily sketched his special work of distributing the Scriptures among prisoners, not only in England, but in America, France, Italy, Greece, and Egypt. He purposes a visit to Asia soon, if the Lord will.

Miss Whately, from Cairo, gave a most interesting account of her work in Egypt, where her influence is so much felt that she is called, even by the Khedive, "a daughter of the country." Women can only be reached by women in that Mohammedan country. And the Word of God is faithfully taught, and has found a lodgement in many hearts. The children are also reached, 400 boys being in her schools. Voyages are taken up the Nile, and on its banks, seated on a palm-tree, or a dried mud-heap, the women are gathered, and the Word of God read and expounded. In a recent trip, 240 copies of the Scriptures were distributed in two days. Miss Whately closed by an earnest plea on behalf of "poor Egypt."

PRAYER-MEETING FOR THE NATION.

Later in the afternoon Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., presided over a prayer-meeting on behalf of our country and rulers. Having read 1 Tim. ii. 1—8, and the prayer for Parliament from the Book of Common Prayer, he asked Colonel Sandwith to read some requests for prayer. These included the Queen, the Government just formed, the judges, our national vices, the allaying of the war spirit, Temperance legislation, fierce competition and unfair dealing, the opium traffic, social purity and unjust laws. Prayer was then offered by Colonel Sandwith, Captain W. D. Chapman, Mr. William Forbes and the chairman.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to the consideration of "Open-Air Preaching." In the absence, through bereavement, of General Field, Mr. G. Kirkham presided.

Captain the Hon. C. E. Hobart-Hampden related his first experience in preaching, nearly twenty-five years ago, at Hitchin, and closed his speech with a sermonette on "Christ the Door."

After Mr. Colin Young had spoken of open-air preaching in Edinburgh, Count Andrew Bernstorff said that as yet the law did not permit street-preaching in Germany; but, at missionary and Sunday-school festivals, held in gardens and private grounds, this method of preaching was frequently practised. Invitations were given freely in the streets of Berlin and other cities to the inside meetings, so that it was open-air preaching in degree.

Mr. George Williams told of the conversion of a Russian gentleman through the preaching of the late Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, in the open air years ago.

Mr. George Holland mentioned the fact that, at a Sunday evening meeting in Whitechapel, there was sometimes an attendance of 600 people, a large proportion being Jews and Jewesses.

Rev. Dr. Brocklehurst having claimed attention for the work among actresses and others, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, vicar of Fisherton, related the case of the conversion of an infidel in connection with meetings in Salisbury.

Major Leibenrood spoke a searching word to preachers, from Romans x., on the importance of having a deep conviction of their own interest in Christ, and then preaching a clear Gospel to the unsaved. We could not remember too often, or state too emphatically, that salvation was by faith in Jesus only, without the deeds of the law.

Mr. William Forbes, having exhorted all present to preach by wearing the blue ribbon, a habit which he feared was less popular than a year ago, Rev. James Henry, of the Moravian Mission, illustrated the Gospel by the lost sheep and the life-buoy, in an earnest address.

F. J. E. Lakshman Rao, a young Brahmin from India, dwelt upon the responsibility of the continual hearing of the Gospel without receiving it. He was followed by Dean Bagot, who read from John xiv., and preached a brief sermon on "the forgotten truth"—the Holy Ghost.

The meeting having thus drifted into preaching, rather than to tell about it, Mr. Joseph Weatherley recalled it to its original design, by pointing out that open-air preaching requires self-denial, and that the preachers must be men of courage. A few weeks ago he was standing by the well at Bethlehem, where he remembered the risk David's warriors ran to procure water for their royal master. Preachers unwilling to risk anything are not of much use in this service. He would advise those who wished to know how to do this work to put themselves in communication with the Open-Air Mission, 14, Duke-street Adelphi.

The Chairman having shown "The Coloured Teacher" as a help to sing and speak at street meetings, and offered prayer, the gathering which had continued more than two hours, was brought to a close.

A SERVICE OF SONG.

The closing meeting at this favourite place was held an Friday, immediately after the Communion service. The popularity of sacred song was attested by the attendance of a large crowd Mr. Robert Paton presided, and, after prayer by Rev. Fuller Gooch, read Psalm xcvi., and dwel upon the value of singing at Moody and Sankey' meetings. A London church was largely originated by the choirs then formed.

Mr. J. W. Godfrey explained that the choi then assembled represented the North, South, an North-west evangelistic choirs, and the Clap n, Notting-hill, King's-cross, Croydon, and atford male choirs. The value of Moody and nkey's meetings was greatly enhanced by the mn-books they had left behind them, as teach- a brighter mode of presenting the Gospel. ey were carrying this book through London, l thus preaching the Gospel in sacred song.

Testimonies were given by Messrs. W. A. we, John Farley, George Soltau (who brought sh messages from Messrs. Sankey and Stebbins America, whence he had recently come), rrow, Taylor, and Walters, all connected with afore-named choirs. All spoke of the value singing the Gospel, and of souls gathered ereby to the Saviour.

The pieces sung were selected chiefly from The Christian Choir," and included the lowing:—"Pardon, peace, and power," "The ning of the kingdom draweth nigh," "The ss, it standeth fast," "Beloved, now are we sons of God," "I go from grief and sighing," d "O Zion, lovely Zion!"

The meeting was all too short, and the people uctantly dispersed to gather in the large hall the closing meeting of the Conference.

Thanksgiving Meeting.

On Saturday morning, after the Conference, a eting for thanksgiving was held. Mr. J. E. athieson, as Chairman, read several requests prayer, which were of varied character, ming from Ireland, India, Germany, Rome, d other countries; they also included one on half of a Jew, who had been baptized forty ars ago, but had now backslidden. These re presented publicly by Rev. J. Wilkinson.

After a brief exposition, showing that love is root of all true service, Mr. Mathieson ggested that as the meeting was convened for aise, they should listen to some accounts of the rd's work abroad, which he was sure would ne their hearts to thanksgiving.

Rev. J. G. PATON gave a most impressive count of his experiences as a missionary in ew Hebrides. The island on which he first nded, with a fellow missionary and his wife, as entirely inhabited by cannibals.

Before long an attack was made upon their tle station; his companion was killed and ten before his eyes, and he was left amidst ese savages with no friend but the weeping dow. Yet the Lord spared him. A short time er a friendly chief came to him, and said he ould surely be killed if he stayed there longer, d showed him a fig tree in which he hid until arch was abandoned; he then left the island harmed. Seldom had he felt the Saviour's esence more than in that leafy refuge. It is such straits as these that Christ's promise is ecially realised: "Lo! I am with you alway."

Upon reaching Australia he succeeded in taining eight fresh missionaries from Scotland d Nova Scotia, and returned with a new vessel the scene of his desired labour. This proced a marvellous effect upon the savages. Why does this man come to us again with new issionaries and a new vessel, when we have ne our best to kill him?" they asked. They re allowed to settle, mastered the language, d in a few years sixteen islands were occupied, d thousands of converts won to Christ. The epest attention was shown throughout the dress of this venerable servant of God, whose riking appearance and fervid eloquence proced deep impression. He concluded by an peal to English Christians for help to obtain e new mission vessel.

The next speaker was LAKSHMAN RAO, a native the Mysore Territory. He said he had heard me Christians remark, when the band of Unirsity men recently left for China, "It is nice hear of such earnest young men going to ina, but surely we want them here!" "Now do not know what selfishness is, my friends, if at is not it," exclaimed the speaker, vehently. "When your country has so many portunities, and so much light, and my poor untry is nearly all darkness, to grudge some of ur best men, and to send us out your inferior men, is, to my mind, selfishness indeed. Is it possible that eternity is to you a solemn reality: that when you stand before God you must account for your stewardship? When this is demanded, what will be your answer? I wish now to speak as a young Christian to young Christians, and, I ask, 'Do you realise that, according to your privilege, so is your responsibility?' You have enjoyed this Conference. Remember that to-day your responsibility is greater than on Monday last, because you must account for the fresh light and added knowledge you have gained this week. We need ladies for India: they can do work that men cannot do. Will not some of you go who listened last night to Mr. Radcliffe's appeal?" Many were moved at the touching but forcible simplicity of the address of "our raven brother," as Mr. Radcliffe characterised him. His familiarity with the Scriptures was very noticeable, and his deep earnestness went home to many hearts, whilst he pleaded, as a freedman, for those still in the darkness and bondage of sin.

Colonel PASCHKOFF, from St. Petersburg, said: God seems to be giving Russia a thirst for Divine things, though the means for spreading the Gospel there are very limited. I know twenty or thirty missionaries who, on their own resources, leave their homes for a month or two at a time, and, though often pursued by the police, go about preaching the Gospel to those who, though nominally members of a Christian Church, yet know nothing of the love of God. One of these brethren being prohibited from preaching in a large town, invited the people to come and hear him in a neighbouring wood. They gladly accepted his invitation, and several were baptized at the close of his first address. The police of St. Petersburg recently seized a quantity of tracts. A committee was formed to consider their contents, which resulted in an order for their suppression. Country bishops were directed to search for and conficate all such heretical literature. Three months later we had a letter from the Minister of the Interior, saying he would return the tracts, and the colporteurs might give them away, but not sell them. One more instance of the Lord's faithfulness. Our house for meeting in St. Petersburg had been closed by the police, and for some time we were unable to meet for worship. But, shortly after, Miss Andersen, of Sweden, came with an introduction from the Queen of Sweden to the Emperor, and she opened the house again for her own meetings, in which we gladly joined. There are many difficulties which hinder foreigners working in Russia; I ask you to pray that the Lord will raise up many more of my own countrymen to do his own work there.

Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU gave a short sketch of an All-night Mission he visited in New York. A resident of that city lost his little girl of four years old, and erected the Florence Hall to her memory. This is the centre of a very successful rescue work, being open from half-past eight till midnight. A band of workers sally forth, and visit various localities of bad repute, where, however, they are always well received. Opportunities occur for conversation at street corners, and wherever persons are found to talk with. Most blessed results have accrued from this good work. From April of last year to January of the present, 12,500 persons had visited the hall, and 625 men and 226 women have been brought to Christ, exclusive of any doubtful cases.

A short, earnest address from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, brought the meeting to a conclusion.

Early Morning Prayer Meeting.

Old attendants at the Conference are largely agreed in saying they enjoy the early morning prayer-meetings best. The freshness and quietness are a relief after the crowded gathering in the large hall. It is a time of outpouring with the opening day, and also a time of well filling. "The rain also filleth the pools."

On Wednesday Mr. Blackwood, who presided each morning, read part of Isa. vi., thus striking the keynote of reverence and humility. Mr. J. E. Mathieson read 1 Cor. xix. 27, and spoke of the Interpreter, the Holy Ghost, as a great need of the Conference. Rev. D. B. Hankin dwelt profitably on Isa. xl. 31: "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." Then numerous petitions were read, and earnest prayer offered, and the 500 petitioners separated in full expectation of a large blessing.

On Thursday Mr. Blackwood read from Exodus xxxiii., and dwelt upon the expression, "Be ready in the morning." Rev. A. W. M. Christopher commented upon the closing verses of Acts iv., where in an Apostolic prayer-meeting, the place was shaken where they were assembled; and then commended "Christian Sanctity," a little book by the Rev. Handley Moule. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, in reference to the blindness of Christians about Foreign Missions, compared them to shepherds who only saw the sheep nearest to them and not those at the outer edge of the flock. The Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites gave a lively and striking exposition of Peter's unsuccessful and successful fishing; the application being that we were successful workers only when in communion with our Lord. Many petitions were again read, and much prayer offered as on the previous morning.

On Friday, after an opening hymn, Mr. Blackwood read the first few verses in Rev. xiv. Prayer was offered by Mr. Henry Edwards, and "Beulah Land" sung, and then Captain Baring found a parallel between some passages in Prov. xxii. and John xiv. A foreign Christian Israelite, whose name did not transpire, interested the meeting by describing the foot-washing in John xiii. It was the business of the server at the Passover to wash the hands of the king, or head of the feast; hence the entire reversal of the usual order, when our Lord washed the feet of the disciples. Captain Chapman prayed, then petitions were read by Mr. Mathieson, and prayer was offered by Lord Cavan and others.

The Family Gathering.

The nine o'clock morning prayer-meetings in room No. 6 are designed for the Deaconesses' household, the orphans, and the stewards, but many visitors find their way in also. And precious seasons they are. The Wednesday address was given by Captain Baring on Psalm xxxiii. 18–22. On Thursday Mr. George Soltau spoke to much profit on the Shepherd and the Sheep; but the gem of them all was left for Friday, when the Rev. John G. Paton, from the New Hebrides, told of his work so tenderly that many eyes were in sympathy with deeply-moved hearts.

Stray Notes.

The consensus of opinion is strongly in favour of this Conference. There did not seem to be a hitch anywhere. The crowd was so large that an overflow meeting was regularly required; but there was no confusion.

The weather was very warm the first day, making the Hall oppressively hot; but rain fell in the night, and the last two days were cloudy and cold, with a somewhat high wind. But, as the last meeting dispersed, the moon shone with singular brightness in a cloudless sky—a type, let us hope, of the effect of these gatherings upon the Church of Christ at large; for should not the normal condition of the Church be "fair as the moon"?

According to custom, the waiters were, on the last morning, presented with a book, as a memento of the Conference. The bound volume of "Faithful Words" was given this time, and Captain Baring, prior to the presentation, addressed a few kindly words to the men, fifty-eight in number.

TURKISH MISSIONS' AID SOCIETY.—The last report says that thirty young men of the Syrian Protestant College, and thirty others in the High School at Beyrout, have been recently brought to the Lord. Dr. Somerville's evangelistic tour around the shores of the Archipelago is referred to as a noteworthy fact, and the good that attended his preaching is described as being immense. On the other hand, the infidelity, active opposition, secret hostility, Jesuitical influence, and superstition, present a formidable hindrance to the progress of the Gospel. "The Star in the East," a quarterly record of the Society, published at the office, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., contains much useful intelligence.

WORKING MEN IN HIGHBURY VALE.

THIRTY-FIVE years ago Highbury-vale contained simply one or two narrow streets, consisting of a few houses. The rest of the valley was green fields and pretty walks. This state of thing has, however, long passed away; the entire vale has long been covered with houses, so that scarcely a vestige of the old neighbourhood remains. Few would, perhaps, imagine how large a number of families, even in this part of London, live the one-roomed-life. But so it is. Father, mother, and children often hire one room. And here, at a spot known as "The Drunkard's Corner," there was commenced, about eight years ago a good work, of which we should like our readers to know something.

Every house and every room in that street was regularly visited. The people soon discovered that the lady who visited them so constantly was a true friend. Mrs. Bailhache, the lady to whom we refer, in a brief statement recently published, says, "From the commencement God's blessing has rested upon this work in greater measure than can be put into words, until it has permeated the whole neighbourhood; it has helped and added to the churches round, including Highbury Hill Chapel, St. John's Church, and Highbury Quadrant." We have before us a list of the meetings held every week, which also announces that the doors of the Hall are open all day long for any who wish to sign the temperance pledge; a smoking and reading-room is open every evening, to which the payment of one penny weekly secures admission.

A remarkable feature in the movement is the Men's Club, called "the Highbury United Benefit Society," which numbers nearly seven hundred members. The object of its formation was mainly to bring working men together once a week, so that a short service could be held and the Gospel brought before them. The effort appears to have been largely blessed, for out of it has sprung the "Men's Bible Union," numbering seventy members, including about forty of the club men who have come out boldly for Christ. It was agreed at the meeting at which the club was formed, that the treasurer should "have half an hour reserved for her own use at each weekly meeting of the members." In this way an opportunity was secured for introducing the Gospel. Many of the men never hear it anywhere else, or at any other time. Although this little service may be distasteful to the new members (quite a hundred having given up the club because there is "too much religion in it"), God has approved it, as many instances will show. Two of these may be cited.

A desperately wicked man, who was a great drunkard, was brought apparently to death's door, and signed the pledge, because he wanted to die sober. He, however, recovered, was reclaimed from drink, became a devoted Christian, joined a neighbouring congregational church, and is now a most useful worker in the mission. This man was well known in the Vale as "the Old Doctor," and the wonderful change through which he has passed produced a deep impression among those who formerly knew him. Another case is that of a notorious character, a hard drinker, who was not cured even when every article of furniture, including his bed, was sold, and himself and family left utterly penniless and destitute. This poor victim declared he would never sign the pledge. "You'll have to sign it," said one, "if God lays hold of you." He was brought to the mission; the grace of God did lay hold of him; and now the blessed change is seen by all around.

The other branches of the mission are well sustained, and appear to be equally blest. The mothers' meeting, which began with two women, now numbers eighty in regular attendance, many of whom have learned to love the Saviour. There is also a Bible-class for women, and altogether there are about a hundred women who are workers in the mission. Indeed, many of the meetings are almost entirely carried on, and the business conducted by the working men and women who are connected with the various departments of the work. Then there are no less that seven temperance societies, holding weekly meetings, two for the sisters, two for the brothers, one for youths, and two others beside. The Sunday evening Gospel services are said to be the best and brightest of all, and are crowded to the doors. A quarterly tea is held by the temperance folks, and is followed by Gospel addresses.

Such is briefly the nature of the work God has done, and is doing in Highbury-vale, through the efforts of the consecrated Christian lady who superintends the mission, but who charges us to speak of it as God's work, and not her own. "Never was a mission worked by feebler agency than this. To God be all the praise." That may be perfectly true, but God does not arbitrarily honour one worker more than another; where there is a like whole-hearted devotion to his service, and obedience to the promptings of his Spirit, He is ever ready to give a like blessing. Rejoicing with the converts in their new-found joy, and longing for their furtherance in the Gospel, Mrs. Bailhache seeks suitable helpers in the Sabbath evening Gospel service. "I don't want the spiritual life of the converts lowered but quickened; therefore only spiritual men are desired to preach, men who will come to us in the power of the Spirit."

It only remains to be added, that a new building has been opened in the Blackstock-road, Finsbury Park, as the future headquarters of the mission; the total cost will be £1600. Toward this £1000 has been obtained, thus leaving £600 to be raised. Friends and fellow-Christians are informed of this in a brief statement recently issued, in the belief that the needed help will be forthcoming. Mrs. Bailhache, 17, Wilberforce-road, Finsbury-park, N., will be happy to supply fuller details of the work to any who may wish to have them.

The new Hall was opened last Thursday afternoon, when a dedication meeting was held, Mr. Robert Paton presiding. Mrs. Bailhache, who said few could tell how great was her joy in witnessing the completion and opening of that Hall, gave a brief statement as to the origin and growth of the work. The Chairman warmly congratulated her on the success of her efforts. Dr. L. Bevan expressed his fullest sympathy with the movement, the growth of which he had watched with deep interest. The day was fast approaching, he said, when the ruling power will reside in the many and not the few. The people must therefore be educated, saved, and sanctified, so as to be fitted for their position. The Gospel alone could accomplish this. Rev. W. H. King, of Highbury Hill Chapel, bore personal testimony to many cases he had known of real and permanent spiritual change through this mission. Mr. C. M. Bailhache, a son of the founder, viewed the work as a sign of the times, indicating the growth of a feeling of mutual dependence among different classes of society. We were daily drifting nearer to socialism in its best forms. Other meetings were held subsequently, when Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Mr. W. Noble, Rev. J. R. Wood, and others spoke. Further arrangements include a ten-days' Gospel Temperance Mission, commencing on Wednesday, the 8th inst.

"THE MOUNTAIN STREAM."—The fifth Report of the Highland Temperance League, published with this title, is a record of the Temperance movement in the Scottish Highlands. "The current of popular sentiment in favour of the principles of Total Abstinence is broadening and deepening over the whole length and breadth of the Highlands and Islands. Social gatherings are now being held without the use of alcoholic drinks. The president of an insular society tells us of four funerals recently conducted without the destroyer. In some localities the work has grown by leaps and bounds." A minister of the Church of Scotland, distressed by the excesses caused by "first-footing" on New Year's Day, remonstrated with those who enjoyed the unruly pastime, and was met with the rejoinder that he should first become an abstainer himself. He did so, and a large number followed him. Last New Year's Day there was a marked change for the better; scarcely any bottles were seen migrating, and only two cases of drunkenness were heard of in that neighbourhood.

THE NEW BIBLE.

AN OLD LADY'S CURIOSITY.

"A short time back, just before the Revised Bib was issued, a leaf was missed from the binding work The girl who had abstracted it was at once discovere and shortly afterwards restored the leaf which she ha purloined 'to satisfy the curiosity of her aged mother.'"

WHAT were the learned men doing,
That mother had wondered long?
"A altering" her dear old Bible,
She knew they would put it wrong.
"Bring me a leaf of it, Jenny,
I'll know what these folks are about;
And when my old eyes shall have read it,
Perhaps it will quiet my doubt.

"Changing my beautiful verses,
Robbing the poor of their wealth;
I'll see for myself what they're doing,
Taking our treasures by stealth."
Faithful to all that is sacred,
She'd puzzled and worried her brain;
And feared that the words she had trusted,
She never might see them again.

"The Lord is my Shepherd," she fancied
Would hardly be found in the Book;
And the hundred-and-third of King David,
She never would find, should she look.
The words were her comfort and solace,
She said them each morning and night;
She had marked them, and many just like them,
And was jealous to know they were right.

"Come, now, let us reason together,
Your scarlet-dyed sins shall be white."
And the wonderful words of Isaiah,
So full of sweet blessing and light—
"All we, like the sheep, have far wandered;
But all has been laid upon Him:"
Would these still be left in the Bible?
She would look, though her eyes were grown dim.

What wonder that mother was anxious
To know what the changes would be;
But the Word of our God is eternal,
A rock in the wide tossing sea.
And though a few weeds may be drifted,
And washed from the high rocky form;
The rock is the same in all ages,
Unmoved amidst tempest and storm.

NINE ELMS MISSIONS.

THE annual meeting of these Missions, wit that of their offshoot, Princess Mar Village Homes, was held in their new, spaciou Conference Hall, in the Clapham-road, c Wednesday afternoon, July 1. Numerous frien of the work assembled. The chair was taken b Sir Henry Selwin-Ibbetson, who commented o the large amount of work done by the Priso Mission. During the year 1884 it had employe 830 women in its laundry at Nine Elms Hous and gave sewing to more than 2300 wome By its gospel meetings and industrial class over 5500 women have been reached. Suc efforts must tell upon the vice and crime of th country, and bring many back from the error their ways.

Rev. J. E. Campbell Colquhoun read th Report of the various branches of the Mission embracing the Prison Mission, the Women Missionary Institute, district work, and evangelical missions at home and abroad, including Women's Medical Mission branch. An earne appeal was made for extended help. The gener treasurer, Mrs. Meredith, in order to maintai the efficiency of the Missions, was found at th end of the year to have advanced over £100. is earnestly hoped that this sum will be repai during the present year, and that the deficienc will not recur.

The Report of the Princess Mary Villag Homes, read by Colonel Petrie, gave an interesting account of the work of this Institutio A choir of girls from the village sang wit touching sweetness. Lord Radstock gave stirring address to the Christian workers presen and with a few hymns sung by the children th proceedings closed.

VARLEY IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

AR SIR,—I am amazed at the great extent of this wonderful country, and its ess resources. The closing weeks of Novem- nd December saw an interesting and im- nt work in St. Louis, Mo. January was in is is amongst the most recent illustrations of pid growth of cities in the Western world. years since, its population was less than 0; now it claims 100,000, and is increasing marvellous energy. Everything about it s the "vim" and "go," as it is termed, of merican cousins. Invited by Dr. Thomp- pastor of the second Presbyterian Church, half of the ministers of the city, I found a y welcome and wide sphere of service. The Lord's Day of the new year proved to be orable in commencing a series of meetings h extended their influence to the whole The fraternal meetings of ministers, seasons for special prayer, the daily Bible ings, often crowding the new Congrega- l church, and the large evening assemblies in various parts, became contributing items e success of a work to which we look back joyous interest. The intense cold of this ually severe winter hindered somewhat. h the mercury ranging from ten degrees e to twenty degrees below zero, it is not the st thing in the world to bring the people from their warm houses to face the bitter The interest, however, grew on all hands, great sorrow was expressed when the mission d. I had the joy of sending 150 dollars to China Inland Mission, profits from the sale of es, beside some gifts in money. The Lord led me to sow the good seed and to open up of the wonderful things contained in his Word, thousands became interested, instructed, sed, and blessed. To large numbers the e has become exceedingly precious, and a iderable number have been added to the ches. From Kansas City we journeyed to re, for twelve days, we again saw much to e praise and give encouragement. There cold was bitter in the extreme. In this ect I never had so trying an experience. cing winds, and the glass scarcely a single above zero, one day twenty-five degrees w, it was next to impossible to get the places eeting fit even for service. Nevertheless, we considerable prosperity and blessing. Thence ouisville, Ky., distant about 600 miles. In large and important centre we had a most uraging work. Labouring mainly amongst Presbyterians, the meetings grew until the est buildings were crowded to excess. A and gracious interest possessed the people e city, and, when dear Mr. Moody came for hree-days' conference, this was greatly eased. The Lord also sent our beloved her George Needham, and the Press of the gave very animated accounts of "the erican," "English," and "Irish" Evange- . Far better than all this, our Lord was sed to use us as instruments for blessing, and not think that less than several hundreds e brought to Christ. The whole city was ed, and my deep regret was that I had nged to go South, for I am persuaded her fortnight spent in that city had been ly used. Here also the cold was very re.

journey of about 1000 miles brought us to

e I had a singular experience. I found the tages of slavery a very trying factor in con- ion with the work. I need hardly say that, n Englishman, my sympathies were heartily the large coloured population. The fact when Mr. Moody, twelve months previously. ed Augusta, the white people erected a fence in order to divide the coloured people from their superiors, at a large open-air service, will give some idea of the difficulties of this question. The want of sympathy for the coloured people, on the part of their former property holders, led me amongst them, and for ten days, after closing a brief mission amongst the white people, the Lord gave wonderful seasons of blessing in the coloured churches. During the ten days, thousands of the African people came. Their churches were utterly unable to hold the crowds which attended. Fully 700 confessed Christ, and the testimony of the Lord's Word was most blessed. I never remember greater liberty, power, or more gracious results. The Holy Spirit brooded over our meetings in very deed. The interest was intense, but there was nothing grotesque or wanting in propriety in their services, as I had been led to expect. It was a cheering and blessed sight to come in contact with vast numbers of these who have been so deeply sinned against, and to find how many were trusting in "de blessed Lord."

The farewell meeting, I shall never forget. I could not get away from these warm-hearted friends and brethren in Christ. To hear the words which fell from hundreds of those once in slavery, now old in years, but new creatures in Christ, and freemen of the Son of God, was simply glorious. Their grateful words still ring in my ears. "Bless de Lord for sending you 'mong us." "De white friends invite you to dem." "De good Lord send you 'mong de coloured folk." "Oh, dis is good!" "When you come agin?" "Oh, sah, we neber forget you." "Bless you, sah." "Come back quick." "We all pray de dear Lord to send you. 'Member dat." "Brudder," said some of the grey-headed men and women, "neber see you gin here, but wid de Lord in de better country." Oh! no words can ever tell how my soul rejoiced in them, for not only sending me to tell these wronged and injured ones the story of God's love, but for permitting me to see how his sovereign grace possesses hundreds, yea thousands of these coloured friends. HENRY VARLEY.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.

ON Friday afternoon, June 26, the seventy-eighth anniversary in connection with the London Female Penitentiary was celebrated at the institution, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington. In all, about 6000 young women have been benefitted by the institution, and the committee have been instrumental in placing out, in eligible service, or restoring to their friends, more than 3260, most of whom have been under training at least eighteen months. The penitentiary removed last summer to its new quarters at Stamford House, Stoke Newington, the freehold of which the committee have purchased. A most convenient and suitable Home has been erected on the site, which comprises accommodation for about seventy adult inmates, and all the necessary appliances and buildings for a steam laundry. The institution is conducted on the industrial system, and is, to a great extent, supported by the laundry work of the inmates.

The secretary read the report, from which it appeared that during the year ending March 31, 96 women had applied for admission to the institution, and of that number 66 had actually taken up residence there; of these 34 had been placed out at service, and six of the girls who had been so employed had gained the gratuity awarded by the committee of the institution for exemplary conduct. The financial position of the institute was not encouraging, as the expenditure exceeded the increase by a considerable amount. The committee appealed very urgently for funds to help them to continue their work, as there appeared to be an annual deficit of £600 staring them in the face. Rev. H. J. Berguer, Rev. Gordon Calthrop, Mr. Edwin Austin, Rev. Dr. Edmond, Mr. E. W. Thomas, and Mr. J. McCall, gave addresses.

A number of the ladies and gentlemen inspected the institute and the steam laundry attached, and all expressed themselves satisfied with the arrangements, which are under the superintendence of Mrs. E. Walter, the matron.

A VALEDICTORY AT HARLEY HOUSE.

THE close of the College Session at the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions is usually signalised by the departure of a contingent of students for different fields of labour. At the meeting held on Tuesday, last week, Mr. Grattan Guiness, in the name of the assembled friends, bade farewell and God-speed to some twelve or thirteen students, about to start for the United States, China, and different parts of Africa. As to the general work of the Institute, he reported that there were over 100 students at present receiving preparation for future work. Many more were applying than could be received, the result, doubtless of the revived interest in foreign missions. The Congo mission is prospering; the Henry Reed is now busily engaged in traversing the waters of the Upper Congo in connection with the pioneering work going on. It is expected that Dr. Sims and others will soon return to England for rest and change, while their places will be taken by fresh workers.

At the close of an address by Mr. Guiness, on the nearness of the Second Advent, Dr. Douthwaite, lately returned from China, gave a most interesting and impressive account of his mission experiences in that land. He appealed with much fervent entreaty, that many more consecrated workers should devote themselves to the evangelisation of China's perishing millions.

In the interval between the afternoon and evening meetings, some information with respect to North African missions was given by Mr. E. H. Glenny, and Dr. Eccles. Three young ladies present, who are about to proceed thither as missionaries, were commended to God. Dr. Eccles said that the need for Christian women as workers in this field was very great.

At the evening meeting Mr. David Barron gave an account of what he had seen during a recent tour among his Jewish brethren in Russia. We have entered, he said, upon a new epoch in the history of Jewish missions, perhaps the most interesting and the most important since the days of early Christianity. We hear of the leaders of Jewish thought raising the question whether it will not be better to make terms and surrender. Singard, one of the most able of the Jewish Rabbis in the west of Europe, has published a book, "Shall we Jews become Christians?" He says that the close of the present generation will bring us to the most important crisis in the history of the world, and he urges the Jews to study the history of the origin of the two religions. Those who read the Jewish papers may have seen what a Jew said —a Professor at Cambridge. It was a very remarkable statement, indeed, from such a source; but there were many Jews of the same opinion. The following is the utterance of this Professor: "As regards the Saviourship of Jesus, what have the Jews to say—the Jews who have religion in their heart? Do those Jews grudge Him his Saviourship? No! A thousand times no. Every Jew must acknowledge that if Jesus is no Saviour to those who do not believe, He is a Saviour to those who do believe in Him. What was the condition of the Gentiles before the light of Christianity dawned upon them? It cannot be repeated, but a description of it may be found in the writings of Seneca, Juvenal, and Tacitus." In proceeding, Mr. Barron referred to the mighty testimony to the value of Jewish mission work to be found in the increased circulation of the New Testament.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the brethren who are leaving for their respective stations, and the proceedings were closed with the Communion of the Lord's Supper.

SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY AND CURE OF INEBRIETY.—A sixpenny pamphlet, published by H. K. Lewis, 136, Gower-street, W.C., contains a record (No. 5) of the proceedings of this Society. A valuable article on the Treatment of Inebriates is contributed by J. Muir Howie. Cases revealing the fearful experiences of patients, and the time and care demanded for their complete restoration, are alluded to; the details given will be helpful to any who have inebriate friends.

THE STORY OF A COFFEE-ROOM.

I AM hoping to build a coffee-house at Saundersfoot, a little seaport in South Wales, three miles from Tenby. It is greatly needed, for there are nine licensed houses, and everything to tempt the poor men and women to drink. I started a temporary place in October, 1882, renting a loft over a carpenter's shop, as a reading and recreation room, and a small room underneath for the coffee-room. Although it was supported almost entirely by the poorer class, during the two years it was open, it was perfectly free from debt, and all much regretted its being closed. This, however, was a necessity, as the carpenter required his rooms.

The two years' experiment having proved a comfort and help to many, I determined to use every effort to raise money to buy a house. For this purpose we held a bazaar in the village last August, by which we cleared £128. A suitable house was then for sale, and the owner accepted an offer I made for its purchase. We subsequently discovered that there were obstacles in the way which prevented us from accepting the terms of the lease. This was a great disappointment to the poor men who were longing for their coffee-house, and to myself. I wrote to a gentleman who owned much land in the village and neighbourhood, asking him if he would build us a suitable place, allowing us to pay him a yearly rent. He replied that he was unable to build, but would help us to a site. To build ourselves seemed a fearful undertaking; but, relying on the help of God, I accepted the offer. A trusted friend, however, advised me not to begin to build till I had the money, I determined to follow his advice. I was led to ask the co-operation of the associates of the Girls' Friendly Society, and, through their kind responses, our funds have been increased by upwards of £80. Other gifts have raised the amount in hand to £230, and we only want £70 more before we can build. We hope to provide a reading and recreation room, which may also be used for band of hope meetings, lectures, &c. There will also be a coffee-room, kitchen and lavatory, besides a class-room, where we can hold our Bible-class, and a night school during the winter.

If the funds allow us to begin this month, the builder has promised we shall have the premises completed before the dark days of next winter. We have very happy gatherings on Monday evenings of the children forming the band of hope, and of the young men and women of the little temperance union we have lately formed—300 altogether belong to it. We meet in a chapel kindly lent us for the purpose. The earnest Christians in the village are most eager for the coffee-house, and are doing all in their power to aid the work. If your kind readers will help us to provide the sum that is yet needed, we shall thankfully enter on this project, feeling assured that it must prove an unspeakable blessing to our villagers through many coming years.—Yours sincerely, (Miss) G. PARTRIDGE.

[Those who read this simple and unadorned narrative will need no words of ours to commend the excellent work of our correspondent and her helpers to the heartiest sympathy and support. We understand that difficulties have been encountered from those whose worldly interests would be affected by the increased sobriety of the people; all the more reason why the friends of temperance should encourage these earnest Christian workers. We shall be glad to receive and forward any help our readers may contribute.—ED.]

HAZELWOOD, I.W.—The twelfth annual report of this well-known Home of Rest and Recreation for Commercial Young Men, contains an interesting account of the past year's experiences. Out of 1144 inmates during the year, a considerable number were invalids; nearly all were restored to health, and returned to business. The spiritual health of the inmates has been kept well in view. Many letters received by Mr. Jacobs bear testimony to this. Various improvements have been made in the Home and grounds.

MEDICAL MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.—The Quarterly Magazine of the Medical Missionary Association contains a letter of much interest from Madagascar, in which the progress of the work there is detailed. The committee are anticipating a more efficient prosecution of medical missions than formerly through the expected appointment of Dr. Maxwell as paid secretary. A good article on "Qualifications of a Missionary" is given. Mr. Arthur Standing, 14, Paternoster-square, is the publisher. Price 1d.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE PUNJAB AND SINDH MISSIONS OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. By Rev. ROBERT CLARKE. 5s. Seeley. A second and enlarged edition of the thirty-three years' work of the Church Missionary Society in the Punjab. The book will be new to many in England, and read like a tale of wonder and romance. The account of the commencement of this wonderful mission is deeply interesting, and full of encouragement to all who are doing God's work in the world.

WILLIAM FAIRLIE CLARKE: HIS LIFE AND LETTERS. By E. A. W. William Hunt & Co. The record of a noble, useful life spent for the good of a common humanity. Dr. Clarke was born at Calcutta in 1833, and two years after lost his father, so that he was left to the "wise and tender supervision of his mother," and the whole of his after-life—rich in fruits of holiness—is in accord with this early training, its constant aspiration being for, as he himself writes, "a heart and life more entirely devoted to the service of our Lord and Master." The "Hospital Sketches" are thrilling.

RELIGION WITHOUT GOD, AND GOD WITHOUT RELIGION. By Rev. WILLIAM ARTHUR. 2s. Bemrose & Sons. This is the first treatise of three which the author intends writing against Positivism, as represented by Mr. Frederic Harrison; Agnosticism, by Mr. Herbert Spencer; and Deism, by Sir Fitzjames Stephen. These distinguished writers have, in the pages of The Nineteenth Century, been in controversy. The three causes, admirably says Mr. Arthur, have been happy in their respective champions, and most unhappy have the champions been in their respective causes. Each controversialist has been worsted because his cause, rather than himself, was weak. The system of Positivism is that of Auguste Comte. Therefore, by an examination of the original writings of Comte, does the author show the logical untenableness of Positivism. He does this with almost excess of proof. The polity of Comte, in relation to the Reconstruction of Society: the Philosophy in its laws and principles: the Religion, with Humanity as its object of worship, are set forth in three chapters with a clearness of analysis, and a vigour of argument that are very remarkable. It is exceedingly difficult to understand, in the light of this investigation, how any sensible man can accept the system of Comte as an improvement upon Christianity, and the three portable volumes, when Mr. Arthur has completed them, will furnish a convenient antidote to the new philosophy that has captivated and bewildered many in these times. In this respect the venerated author, with his erudition, covert humour, and dialectical power, is laying the whole Church of God under obligation.

WORDS IN SEASON. Partridge & Co. A collection of texts and hymns, intended to direct seekers to the Word of God. The admonitory words heading alternate pages are very good.

THE SCRIPTURE TEXT-CARDS which have been published by Mrs Grimkè for many years, have only hitherto been obtainable direct by post from the country. Mr. Elliot Stock, Paternoster-row, has been appointed agent for their sale, in order that they may be bought in the usual way in London.

ENDURE HARDNESS AS A GOOD SOLDIER OF JESUS CHRIST. With Special Reference to Unhappy Marriages. By the Author of "Quit You Like Men." 2d. Nisbet. A wise and timely little work, dealing with many of life's temptations, but specially dwelling upon the cause and cure of unhappy marriages.

FEDERATION: New Abolitionist Work Throughout the World. This is the Report of the work being done by Mrs. Josephine Butler and her friends all over Europe in the cause of God and morality. Hard work has been done, and the friends of purity should see that the deficit in the balance-sheet is soon removed. God speed the work and the workers! Dyer Bros.

BERLIN.—The Ladies' Society for the care of the sick and poor in the parish of St. Thomas, which was founded in the beginning of last year, has developed beneficial activity. A large number of sick and poor have been provided with clothing, linen, firewood, and food. A working meeting has been organised, the work being partly done by the members, and partly by the poor themselves, who are thus assisted in gaining a livelihood.

HOMES FOR GENTLEWOMEN.—These Homes, at Warwick House, Upper Tulse Hill, Brixton, now accommodate fifteen inmates. Since its commencement, twenty-five poor ladies have been benefited by it, and gratefully acknowledge it as a haven of rest in their declining years. An appeal has been issued by the Committee for £200 toward expenses incurred in furnishing additional comfort and accommodation for the inmates. The public are invited to visit the institution any afternoon. The annual expenses greatly exceed the regular subscriptions, and the good done only needs to be better known in order to secure larger support. Miss Jane Combie is the hon. secretary.

NEARNESS OF THE SECOND ADVENT

THE annual réunion of friends at the close o the college session at Harley House, Bow was held on Tuesday last week. At the afternoon meeting Mr. Grattan Guinness delivered a short outline address on "To-day's duty in the light of the Second Advent." The many unsatisfactory and sensational expositions as to the Second Advent, which are abroad in the present day, may account for the general blindness of the Church to the nearness of that event. It is predicted that it shall come when least expected, and it may be that God is using this general indifference to hide its near approach. I have studied the subject closely, said Mr. Guinness, for the last twenty-five years, and every year, nay, every month, has brought fresh light upon it. The Bible is not only a record of the past, but an unveiling of the future; one-third of the Book is prophetic. The prophetic programme widens and becomes more detailed towards its close. The Book of Revelation ought to be studied in connection with the other Scriptures, especially with Daniel. In that book we have an outline of the course of the Gentile nations, of the Jewish people, and also of that relating to the Christian Church.

Mr. Guinness referred to Nebuchadnezzar's vision of the great image, and to the fact that we have the plain interpretation of that vision given by God Himself through Daniel. History coincides with the interpretation that the image represented successively the Babylonian, the Mædo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman powers. The whole of that prophetic vision has been fulfilled, except the last part of it referring to the falling of the stone, and its growth to a mountain filling the whole earth. In Daniel vii. there is a repetition of the programme in another form. The four kingdoms are represented as four wild beasts, and these correspond with the character of the kingdoms. The ten horns of the fourth beast, we know, are ten kings that should arise. Connecting this with the ten-horned beast of Rev. xvii., Mr. Guinness, referring to the fact that the eighth horn was the seventh revived, said this was historically fulfilled in the Gothic invasions and the founding of the Papal dynasty. The ten kingdoms into which the Roman Empire was divided still exist. A close and detailed study of these prophetic visions shows that we are near the time when Babylon is to be judged and overthrown, to be followed by the marriage of the Lamb (Rev. viii. 19). The chronological prophecies of Daniel and Revelation interpreted the year-day plan brings us down to the close of this dispensation. The 1260 days, the "time, times, and half a time," the 42 months, the three and a half years, are all to be considered on this year day scale, and represent the 1260 years that dates from the rise of the Papal and Mohammedan power in the beginning of the seventh century. In our own day we see the overthrow of these two powers going on, so that we are nearing the close of this period of 1260 years, and therefore of the existing dispensation. We are living under the very shadow of that solemn and eventful day when the Son of God shall come again in his glory, and take to Himself his kingdom. Do we not long for it? Has not the Church been long enough in an apostate condition, Israel in unbelief, Jerusalem downtrodden, and the whole world under the dominion of the wicked one? Seeing that we are on the eve of such great events, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness, and in diligence, looking for and hasting unto the coming of our Lord? Shall we not be found spending time and substance freely for Him; not laying up treasure upon the earth? May we have grace to understand these things, to trim our lamps afresh for service. Yet a little while and the Master will be here; may we so live and labour that we shall not be ashamed before Him at his coming.

otes on Daily Readings.

JULY 9.—2 CORINTHIANS XIII.

v. 3, 5.—“Since ye seek a proof of Christ speak- in me,” &c. “Examine yourselves, whether ye n the faith.”—Not merely a retort, expressing t if they wanted a proof of his being a genuine ostle of Christ, they had better examine them- es to see if they were Christians. It is a most sfactory test which he suggests. Let them mine themselves, whether they are in the faith: hey stand the test, how came they to be so? The t of their conversion being the work, under God, the Apostle, is the best proof he can give of rist speaking in him.

. 4.—“For though He was crucified through akness, yet He liveth by the power of God. For we o are weak in Him, but we shall live with Him by power of God toward you.”—The twofold state condition in which Christ is presented to us ore and after the resurrection—“weakness” and ower”—is used by the Apostle to illustrate his bearance toward them in the past (for which he l been accused of weakness), as contrasted with power in which, should God so work through toward them, he is ready to visit them again.

. 6.—“I trust that ye shall know that we are not robates.”—Proofless, though an awkward word, uld, perhaps, best express what is meant by the rd rendered in A.V. “reprobate.” It is one o does not stand the test. Such he trusts they l not find him if his Apostolic power has to be rcised, and yet his love for them leads him to y that they may do no evil, that he may not e to exercise such power, even though he should m thereby “proofless.”

JULY 10.—GALATIANS I.

. 4.—“Who gave Himself for our sins, that He ght deliver us from out of (R.V.) this present l world” (or “age,” R.V. (in margin).—In these rds the Apostle strikes the key-note of the whole istle. The error of the Judaising teachers, which s the object of the Epistle to refute, consisted in ng back to “the rudiments (or elements) of the rld,” out of which Christians had been delivered the death of Christ.

v. 6.—“Him that called you into the grace of rist.”—R.V. by accurate translation makes this ole passage clearer. It runs thus: “I marvel t ye are so quickly removing from him that led you in the grace of Christ, unto a different spel.” As to who is meant, there can be no ubt that it is God the Father; “the one who calls St. Paul's language is always the Father.”—shop Lightfoot. The same writer also says: St. Paul here states the distinctive features of the e Gospel which the Galations had set aside. rst, as regards its source, that conversion comes of d (‘Him that called you’), and not of them- ves; and secondly, as regards the instrument, t it is a covenant of grace, not of works.”

v. 10.—“Am I now persuading men or God?” V.—“Though the idea of persuasion is not ictly applicable to the case of God, yet it is fitly tended to the second clause in reference to the guage of his enemies. ‘You charge me with policy of conciliation. Yes, I conciliate God.’” Bishop Lightfoot.

v. 16.—“To reveal his Son in me.”—On the words n me” Bishop Ellicott remarks, “Both sub- tively, by deep inward revelations, as well as ectively, by outward manifestations, was the eat Apostle prepared for the work of the nistry.”

JULY 11.—GALATIANS II.

v. 2.—“Lest by any means I should run, or had n, in vain.”—This seems to be connected with the ole of the preceding sentence. It describes the ject he had in view in visiting Jerusalem, and ving a private conference with the leading ostles of the Circumcision. “In all this I had e object in view: that the Gospel might have free rse among the Gentiles, that my past and esent labours might not be thwarted by opposi- n or misunderstanding.”—Lightfoot.

v. 3.—“But neither Titus . . . was compelled to circumcised.”—It is a much discussed question: s Titus circumcised? Do these words mean, as ny suppose, that his circumcision was not a tter of compulsion; or, as others, that he was t compelled to be, and therefore was not, circum- ed? Bishop Lightfoot, after discussing the whole estion, decides in favour of his not having been cumcised, and adds, “The vast majority of early iters take the view that Titus was not circum- ed”

v. 17.—“But if while we seek to be justified in Christ .V.) we also ourselves are found sinners, is there- e Christ the minister of sin?”—Christ's salvation s provided in the cross a complete putting out of ht, by judicial death, of the sinner who is “found in Him.” The legalism of the Judaising teachers, on the other hand, resuscitated the sinner as such, and brought him upon the scene to share with Christ the work of his salvation. This was introducing an element of sin into Christ's plan of salvation, incompatible with Christ's having “put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.”

v. 18.—“For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.”—Beware of the very inadequate explanation of this verse given by many commentators (Bishop Lightfoot included), as if it only meant, “If, after destroying the old law of ordinances, I attempt to build it up again, I testify to my guilt in the work of destruction.” It is not of mere “guilt in the work of destruction” of which he is speaking, but of the far deeper guilt of being a transgressor of God's law, which if he emerges from his hiding-place in Christ he calls attention to. “I make (prove, R.V.) myself a transgressor.” The verb is used in Rom. xvi. 1, and 2 Cor. iii. 1, of commending to special notice. “I commend myself to notice as a transgressor.” What follows shows that this is to ignore the death of self in the cross of Christ.

JULY 12.—GALATIANS III.

v. 5.—“He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit.”—“According to all the analogy of St. Paul's writings, it is God Himself that is here denoted”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 8.—“The Scripture, foreseeing,” &c.—“This is the strongest and most vivid personification of the Old Testament which is to be found in the New. The Scripture is here spoken of as a living thing, instinct with prophetic power.”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 16.—“He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.”—“Paul has not here determined that seed denotes one single offspring alone; for seed in the singular very often implies a multitude; but he means to say this, that there is one seed, i.e., one posterity, one family, one race of the sons of Abraham, to all of whom the inheritance falls by promise, not to some by promise, to others by the law.”—Bengel. “Christ” is, therefore, best taken here as Christ mystical, rather than Christ personal.

v. 20.—“Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one.”—“The law is of the nature of a contract between two parties, God on the one hand and the Jewish people on the other. It is only valid so long as both parties fulfil the terms of the contract. It is, therefore, contingent, and not absolute. Unlike the law, the promise is absolute and unconditional. It depends on the sole decree of God. There are not two contracting parties. There is nothing of the nature of a stipulation. The Giver is everything; the recipient nothing.”—Bishop Lightfoot.

JULY 13.—GALATIANS IV.

v. 6.—“And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.”—This is a striking statement as to the real ground of believers' sonship. It is not that the Spirit coming into our hearts makes us sons of God, but He comes to testify that we are already so “by faith in Christ Jesus,” according to iii. 26. There is, however, a previous coming of the Spirit upon the soul, a baptism into Christ Jesus (iii. 27), by which the soul is united to and incorporated with Christ. See 1 Cor. xii. 13, and mark the two thoughts there, “baptism of the Spirit” and drinking (or inward reception) of the Spirit, as parallel to the same two thoughts here (iii. 27 and iv. 6), the baptism and witness of the Spirit.

v. 10.—“Ye observe days,” &c.—Meyer renders this, “sedulously observe;” Bishop Lightfoot, “minutely, scrupulously observe;” “Speaker's Commentary,” “the word denotes close, slavish, Pharisaic observance.”

v. 12.—“Be as I am; for I am as ye are.”—The verb “am” is twice supplied, as it is not in the Greek. Chrysostom, Jerome, and others supplied “was” in the second clause, thus making it literally “Become as I am, for I was as ye are,” an allusion to his own Pharisaism, and a strong appeal grounded thereon to them to become as he was, as he had formerly gone through their experience of legalism himself, and come out of it.

v. 13.—“Through infirmity of the flesh.”—The “Speaker's Commentary” renders this, “On account of an attack of bodily illness.” The connection between such an illness and his “preaching the Gospel . . . at the first” may be illustrated by an incident in modern missionary work. When the mission to the Jews of the Free Church of Scotland were returning from Palestine, nearly fifty years ago, Dr. Keith was taken ill at Pesth, with fever. They had not intended to attempt work there, but his illness led to the Gospel being preached to the Jews, and Dr. Adolph Saphir was one of the first fruits to Christ of the Gospel so preached.

v. 25.—“This Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia.”—“The very region which was the home of Agar and Ishmael. The very geographical circumstances enhance the significance of the allegory.”—Speaker's Commentary.

JULY 14.—GALATIANS V.

v. 1.—“There is no doubt that this verse should be joined with the preceding context. As to the precise reading, however, of the verse there is great doubt. See Bishop Lightfoot's full and careful note on the subject. Adopting his conclusion, we shall read the whole passage thus: ‘Wherefore, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the freewoman, in the freedom wherewith Christ hath set us free. Stand firm, therefore, and suffer not yourselves to be again involved in a yoke of bondage.’”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 3.—“Every man that is circumcised.”—R.V. translates, “Every man that receiveth circumcision;” and “Speaker's Commentary” says, “Strictly, ‘who causes himself to be circumcised.’” The reference is not to Jews, as such, but to Gentiles who Judaised.

v. 4.—“Christ has become of no effect unto you.” R.V. keeps nearer to the Greek in rendering this, “Ye are severed (brought to nought, margin) from Christ, ye who would be justified from law.”

v. 5.—“Ye are fallen from grace.”—This does not refer to what theologians call “falling from grace,” but to grace as a principle from which “ye fell, ipso facto, in the very act of adopting the legal principle.”—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 5.—“We through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness.”—“The point of contrast between this, the true Christian position, and that alluded to in the last verse, seems to be this: You are seeking to be justified (present tense) by law; that is, you are waiting for it; whereas we “through the Spirit, by faith,” having got it, are not waiting for it, but for the hope that springs from it, “the fulfilment of the hope which justification involves.”

v. 16.—“This I say then, Walk in the Spirit,” &c. From this to the end of ver. 24 is a condensed summary of the contents of Romans vi.—viii. in reverse order. “Walk in the Spirit” is the theme of Romans viii.; “The flesh lusteth against the Spirit,” &c., of Romans vii. 7—25; “Ye are not under the law,” of Romans vii. 1—6; “Works of the flesh, fruit of the Spirit,” of Romans vi. 15—23; “They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh,” of Romans vi. 1—11. The Epistle to the Galatians is supposed to have been written only a short time before that to the Romans.

JULY 15.—GALATIANS VI.

v. 1.—“Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault.”—“The language in the original is very strong, and literally means, ‘if he be even caught so that there is no possibility of escape or of excuse.’ A case of flagrant, unquestionable ill-doing is supposed. This very much enhances the force of the precept which follows.”—Speaker's Commentary.

vv. 2-5.—“Bear ye one another's burdens . . . . every man shall bear his own burden.”—These burdens are not the same word in the Greek. The first means heavy burden, from a root meaning weight; the second is the ordinary pack or load which a man might be expected to carry. “Perhaps (says Bishop Lightfoot) an application of the common metaphor of Christian warfare, in which each soldier bears his own kit.” The first points to troubles, trials, or burdens to be shared by help and sympathy. The second to responsibility which admits of no one else sharing it with us.

v. 8.—“He that soweth unto his own flesh” (R.V).—The word “his own” “is added to bring out the idea of selfishness.”—Bishop Lightfoot.

v. 11.—“Ye see how large a letter,” &c.—“We may say with confidence that this version in A.V. is wrong. The letter is not a long one. The reference is to the large size of the characters in which he is writing, . . . the forcible characters in which he wrote were to be taken as an emphatic expression of his feeling.”—S. C.

v. 13.—“That they may glory in your flesh.”—“In this way (says Alford) they escaped the scandal of the cross, at the hands of the Jews, by making, in fact, their Christian converts into Jewish proselytes.”

v. 14.—“The cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom” (“whereby,” margin).—The margin is much to be preferred, and has been adopted by R.V., which renders it, “Through which the world hath been crucified to me and I to the world.”

v. 17.—“The marks of the Lord Jesus.”—Evidently the scars and other marks of persecution undergone in the service of Christ. It may be that in the allusion to “bearing these in the body,” he refers to these as the outward mark or sign “of being” Christ's which he would set over against their zeal for circumcision. This was the true mark of Christian discipleship.

Forthcoming Meetings.

Mission and other Appeals.

The members of the Portsmouth branch of the Christian Policemen's Association are desirous of opening their hall, which is situated in a populous part of Landport, Portsmouth, for Sunday evangelistic services, but have not yet sufficient funds for furnishing it adequately for the purpose. The hall holds about 250 persons. Friends willing to aid are requested to send contributions to Miss S. Robinson, hon. secretary C.P.A., 5, Sussex-place, Southsea.

Reduced Gentlewomen.—Miss A. Corke, 12, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, appeals on behalf of the Luther Memorial Home for this class, started by her late sister, Miss Julia Corke. £300 are in hand for the project, but this is not deemed sufficient for a commencement of the work, and further help is earnestly asked for. Miss Corke says that the need is great, and many touching applications are being received from those in poverty who desire to share the advantages of the proposed Home.

Miss Laws and Miss Houghton, of the Evangelistic Village Mission, wish to start a mothers' meeting in each of the seven chapels under their care, and a little pecuniary help is needed to enable them to purchase materials at wholesale prices. In this way they will be able to assist many of the poor, hard-working mothers to procure articles of clothing for their little ones during the coming winter. Any kind of left-off apparel will also be much appreciated, and can always be turned to good account in these meetings. Parcels should be addressed, The Manse, Breachwood-green, Luton Station, Midland Railway.

SPECIAL RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN THEATRES.—The Committee have engaged the following buildings for the twenty-sixth course of services for the people:—Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel-road; The Grand Theatre, Islington; Croydon Theatre (supplied only with preachers); Royal Park Hall, Camden Town; South London Palace, London-road; Holborn Town Hall, Gray's Inn-road; Morley Hall, Hackney; Bermondsey Town Hall; St. James's Hall, Regent-street; Town Hall, Shoreditch; Kensington Town Hall; Evangelical Hall, High-street, Homerton (supplied only with preachers); The Hall, Queen's-park Estate, Harrow-road (grant in aid of). Owing to the large number of buildings kept open throughout the last course of services, and the various "London City Mission Stations," aided by grants of money, the Committee unhappily commence their new course without any funds in hand. This must necessarily for a time stop the assistance hitherto rendered to the opening of new mission rooms, a branch of their work they consider most important, as every city missionary needs such a centre for gathering up the fruits of his domiciliary visitations.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully t titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donati List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? A amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in th subsequent week's number.

OUR WORK ASHORE AND AFLOAT.—M Agnes Weston, in a little report with this ti gives account of the past year's work among blue-jackets. Over a thousand boys have, du that period, voluntarily signed the Tempera pledge at the Devonport Sailors' Rest. Ne 30,000 "Boy's Letters" have been sent to who are training for the sea. The work as also progresses, the wives and children being loo after. Many of the Sailors' Rests in foreign p receive grants from the funds. About £ annually is needed to keep everything going. Weston desires that this may be known, and st that at present there is an adverse balance £300. The little pamphlet can be had from author, Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

YOUNG MEN AT FINSBURY PARK.

It has been estimated that over SIX THOUSAND COMMERCIAL YOUNG MEN reside at the above populous neighbourhood.

In January last the YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION became the possessors of the FINSBURY PARK HALL, with its various Club Rooms, &c. These premises are now adapted so as to provide Reading Rooms, Parlours, Refreshment Rooms, Gymnasium, &c., for resident young men and for Association work.

The Committee believe that in securing these premises they have anticipated the wants of the young men, and have done good service to the public.

The present needs are just ONE THOUSAND POUNDS to meet the necessary outlay in fitting up and adapting the same, and the Committee confidently appeal and expectingly rely for help from the Commercial Gentlemen whose Young Men reside there; from Parents in the District and the Provinces, whose sons must and will find companions somewhere; from Residents, who cannot be otherwise than benefited by the influence such an Association must have upon young men.

At present an excellent work is carried on in Bible Classes, Evangelistic Meetings, gatherings of children, &c., under the direction of a vigorous Committee, whilst the comforts and necessary recreations of the Young Men are fully entered into.

Special help is asked to clear the first outlay, after which it is confidently hoped the work, with its present Subscription List, will be self-supporting.

61, Larkhall-lane, Clapham, London, S.W.

Dear Sir, - It is with true pleasure I bear my sincere testimony to the excellency of the set of teeth prepared for me; for fit, appearance, and comfort they surpass any I have had for thirty years. I consider you a thorough proficient in the art of dentistry, and if widely known, you must ensure a large share of public patronage.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) Thos. Chivers,
Baptist Minister.

FOURTEENTH SERIES

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.—CASE at RISCA, NEWPORT.

The patient's name is Miss Fanny Forward. The correspondent was her brother, Mr. Wm. Forward, Crosskeys, Newport. I received the statement of her case from him in May of last year. At that time she was so reduced she could scarcely turn in bed; the expectoration was highly purulent and profuse in quantity; the cough severe and exhausting.

In five weeks' time she was able to get up every day and to take a little out-door exercise, the appetite improved, and all her symptoms decreased.

In another five weeks her brother reports:—"She continues to get better; she has been sounded by two doctors, and the opinion of both is that disease is much less."

On the 24th of September:—"I am happy to tell you that my sister has become much stronger, and is gaining flesh fast. Her appetite is very good; cough better now; breathing a little short. We intend her to follow your treatment until thoroughly well."

She continued accordingly until the winter had passed. In the early spring she was entirely well, and her brother, after waiting a month or two to see what effect the winter might have, writes me:—"My sister is quite restored, thanks be to God for blessing the means. I waited to see if she continued well. We shall be ever grateful; you can make what use you like of my testimonial."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"LAMENTATION, AND MOURNING, AND WOE."

"I saw all the oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power: but they had no comforter."

"Moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there."

"He that is Higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they."

"Truth falleth in the street, and equity cannot enter."

"The land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence. Destruction cometh. Mischief shall come upon mischief. I will do unto them after their way, and according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the Lord."

"Son of man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? Yea, thou shalt show her all her abominations."

"In thy filthiness is lewdness: because I have purged thee and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more till I have caused My fury to rest upon thee."

"They have cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for a harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink. Prepare war! Beat your ploughshares into swords, your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong. Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord!"

"They shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets."

"The Lord is King for ever and ever. Thou wilt cause thine ear to hear: to judge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more oppress."

"They said to the mountains and to the rocks, 'Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.'"

"And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever."

ONE DAY IN THE COUNTRY.

The "One Tun" Ragged School Mission. Friends who, with their families, are going for some weeks change of air, are kindly asked to contribute to £30 which will be required to give nearly 500 "One Tun" children, poor lads from the Institute, poor weary mothers who can only get this holiday, Babies about fifty and all the Tinies, so that not one may be left behind in the "back slums" of Westminster: to give them the treat of sitting on the sweet grass, gathering bunches of wild flowers to take home in remembrance of the happy day. Any donations will be thankfully acknowledged by Mrs. A. Barker Harrison, Hon. Secretary, 32, Eaton-terrace, S.W. (late 78, Coleshill-street). N.B.—£50 are also required for the painting and cleansing of the six school and Mission rooms at the "One Tun" Ragged School Mission, Old Pye-street, S.W. "The Earl of Shaftesbury has taken a deep interest in the work of this mission." Thankfully acknowledged from B., anon., Edinburgh, 3s. 2d.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

CRIPPLED BOYS' HOME, Kensington, W.—Instituted in 1865 to feed, clothe, educate on Christian principles, and teach a trade to crippled boys between 12 and 18 years of age. 80 boys now in the Home; accommodation for 100, if funds allowed. Several candidates waiting admission. Funds urgently needed.

H. R. Knipe, Hon. Sec.

GREAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to

Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

BARBICAN EAST CENTRAL MISSION to the Jews.—Wanted, at the beginning of September, a Jewish Missionary to take charge of hall. Must be earnest, active, and truly converted; anxious to win souls for Christ. Also a Biblewoman, one who speaks German, to work among Jewesses. Jewess preferred. — Superintendent, 16, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington, N.

A PROTESTANT CHURCH in Co. Leitrim, Ireland, where Christ has been long and faithfully preached, is in danger of being closed, having in these very depressed years fallen £150 short in its assessment. If released from this debt the people would gladly support their minister. A lady has promised £50 if the remainder is collected in a month. This church is the only light in a dark place, there being no other Protestant minister there.

Miss Congreve, Carrick-on-Shannon.

KESWICK ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION will be held (d.v.) July 27 to August 1. Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle; Henry F. Bowker, 8, Taviton-street, Gordon-square, London. For lodgings, &c., apply to Mr. Postlethwaite, Esken-place, Keswick.

Educational.

EDUCATION.—High-class School for Young Ladies.—Finishing masters, certificated governesses, and personal supervision, with home comforts. Pupils prepared for any examination. Instruction made pleasant, and no overworking countenanced. Terms moderate and inclusive. Highly recommended by parents of pupils and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Prospectus on application to Mrs. Hale, A.C.P., 1, Carlton Mansions, Clapham-rise, London, S.W.

"Balham, May 29, 1880.

"I am very reluctant to recommend schools, because I am not always able to judge of the interior arrangements; but in this case I have the utmost pleasure in standing as reference. I can highly commend Mrs. Hale, and have the greatest confidence in her capacity, management, and character, having known her for several years.

"C. H. Spurgeon."

GERMANY.—Coblence on the Rhine.—Fraulein Von Griesheim receives a select number of pupils, to whom she offers every attention and home comfort. Highest musical advantages. Eminent professors. English church regularly attended. Terms, inclusive, 120 guineas per annum. Highest references from the German nobility and clergy. This Institution is transferred from Diez to Coblence, the summer residence of the German Empress, by the express wish of Her Majesty, who takes a special interest in the British community there.

BOYS' SCHOOL, Cambridge House, Tunbridge Wells. Conducted by Rev. J. Taylor.—Having had three sons educated at the above School, I can most strongly recommend it as a Christian home, conducted on evangelical principles, where every care is taken of the boys, both as to health and education, they being treated as members of the family. Quite young children are also received for parents going abroad. I will gladly give any further information.

T. R. Fothergill, Biarritz, France.

E., 23, East Cliff, Dover.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. Thorn, Paddington, London.

MALVERN HOUSE SCHOOL.—The rapid growth of this School has necessitated enlargement of premises. Two good houses have been made into one large detached house. There is now splendid accommodation for Boarders. Kind and careful training. Good home. Boys prepared for public schools. A kindergarten for the younger children. Orphans, and children of parents living abroad, received. Sisters may accompany brothers. Highest references to parents of pupils. IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS TO THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIETY FOR IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS are under the necessity of APPEALING most urgently to the Friends of the Society for help under the following circumstances :—

The Receipts of the Society for the past Six Months have been £2,000 below those of the corresponding period of last year. A large reduction in the Staff of Missionaries and Agents in Ireland has, therefore, become necessary, and has been ordered by the Committee to take effect from the 1st August. The retrenchments thus effected will, however, only meet one-half of the deficiency, which, if continued at the present rate of decrease, will necessitate such further reductions as will practically bring a large part of the operations of the Society in Ireland to a close.

Under these circumstances, the Committee requested Four Gentlemen who have not been intimately connected with the administrations of the Society, and who are, therefore, in a position to form an independent opinion, to constitute themselves a Special Sub-Committee, to investigate and report upon the Critical Financial Position of the Society, and upon its General Management. They were :—

THE REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.
THE REV. GILBERT KARNEY.
THE REV. H. SHARPE, AND
MAJOR-GENERAL HAIG, R.E.

The following are extracts from their Report on the Financial Position of the Society :—

"There can be no doubt that recent changes in the Connemara Mission have caused misgivings in the minds of many of the Friends of the Society, and so reacted unfavourably upon the Funds.

"With reference to this subject, the Sub-Committee will only say that after careful consideration, they are of opinion that these changes were not only right, but inevitable, and that no other course of action was open to the Committee than that which they have been most reluctantly compelled to adopt. They further express their conviction that these changes will tend eventually very much to the improvement of the character of the work in that part of Ireland.

* * * * * * * *

"Meanwhile, one thing at least is clear: a work begun, as this was, in faith and prayer, and which has for so many years enjoyed tokens of God's signal blessing, must not be allowed to fall to the ground. The Sub-Committee are distinctly of opinion that the General Committee have acted with faithfulness and decision throughout the trying circumstances of the past year, and that they may, in dependence upon God, confidently appeal to the supporters of the Society for the help which is now so urgently required."

The Committee have received letters from his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin (Lord Plunket) and from the Lord Bishop of Tuam, cordially endorsing their action in making this Appeal.

The Committee would, therefore, point out that the need for special help is of the most urgent character, and would call upon their Friends to come forward without delay with such Liberal Contributions as will enable them once more vigorously to prosecute the Missionary operations of the Society in Ireland.

Remittances should be made payable to WM. PASLEY, Lay Secretary, and cheques crossed RANSOM & Co.

FRANCIS MAUDE, R.N., Chairman of Committee.

The Christian.

"LAMENTATION, AND MOURNING, AND WOE."

THE ship was on fire! A stammering boy had discovered it, and rushed to tell the Captain; but his terror robbed him of speech. The Captain knew that singing always calmed his nervous excitement, and said, soothingly, "Sing your message," and the boy sang sweetly, "The ship is on fire!" Screamed, or howled, or sung, it mattered little, so that the dreadful truth was known. The ship of our social life is on fire—hell fire—and in terms too rough for the ears of a veneered and French-polished Society, the horrible truth has been told by The Pall Mall Gazette.

Joab had pleaded that David would recall his banished Absalom from Geshur, but when he had come back the King refused to see his rebel son. Twice in two years Absalom summoned Joab that he might send him to the King, but Joab would not come; whereupon Absalom set fire to Joab's field of barley, and then he came, and Absalom gained admission to the King. For many a long year, in stammering speech, the awful truth has been told to captain and crew and passengers. Now and then a singer has won their ear with plaintive melody—

> "One more unfortunate, weary of breath,
> Rashly importunate, gone to her death.
> Take her up tenderly, lift her with care,
> Fashioned so slenderly, young, and so fair."

But Society only sighed, and smiled, and went on its way, and the hell-fire went on burning. Now The Sentinel has set the barley on fire, and The Pall Mall Gazette has blown upon it with a mighty east wind from the wilderness, and Society staggers, and hell hounds rage.

The cynical sage of Chelsea said that "these islands contain thirty-seven millions of people, mostly fools." So the City Solicitor and some of the evening papers seem to think, and try to drown the alarm which has been so shrilly sounded, with cries of "Sensational!" "Indecent!" and "Obscene!" And the paper which gave voice to Tom Hood's pitiful "Song of the Shirt," and "The Bridge of Sighs," has joined the unworthy cry. But the people will not open their eyes merely to have dust thrown into them.

Nothing has done more to demoralise this generation, by encouraging, and almost forcing, the sale of cheap sensational and adulterous novels, than the railway bookstalls; but The Pall Mall Gazette, for its exposure of sin, was promptly, not to say furiously, banished from the board.

Straws show how the stream flows. Our own weekly bill contained a line referring to this subject. In impudent violation of contract, a blue strip of paper was stuck over this line when the sheet was exhibited on the Metropolitan Railway boards.

Almighty God is on the side of kidnapped and outraged children, and with terrible vengeance will He strike the fiends who perpetrate and the nation which allows it. It does not need a prophet to read the Future in the Past. And now the Church of Christ is called to action. Not without meaning is it called "the Church which is in God the Father." He has a father's heart, He has a mother's tenderness, and the Church must give voice and action to his indignation, and let the monsters know that when they trample children in the dirt, they are lifting up their heels against the Almighty God of Love. And love is strong as death, and jealousy is cruel as the grave.

Are we indeed mostly fools? In 1850 The Morning Chronicle published a long series of letters on the poverty which drove girls and women to the streets, and it was not suppressed by the newsvendors. Now children are hunted down by demons, as weasels hunt down hares; and when one fearless journalist, having first by personal investigation, and in peril of life, verified the facts and made them known, he is vilified by that part of the Press which is not dumb, and some even Christian people shut their polite and refined ears. As Mr. Samuel Morley said in the House of Commons on Thursday night, nothing indeed could justify the publication of such atrocities but their truth. But being true, we shut our ears to them under peril of being exterminated like the Canaanites, or destroyed like the cities of the plain.

Ministers of Christ, ladies who conduct mothers' meetings, Sunday-school teachers, fathers and mothers, travellers and excursionists, you need not read if you will only look and listen with your own eyes and ears.

Preachers, of all persuasions, do you know that procuresses are among your frequent hearers? Take stock of your congregation. Who is that respectably-dressed matron whose hungry eyes wander from seat to seat, marking one and another pure young creature for her prey? "Warn them from Me," says God. "They are my loved ones, for whom Jesus died. Let Me not find the blood of their souls upon the careless watchman's skirts."

Teacher, do you see that restless and troubled face? Yes; thank God you do. You are the minister's wife, and you take that evidently unhappy one aside, and at length you win her confidence, and learn that going along a street in a suburb of London, a handkerchief was held up to her face, and she knew no more until she awoke from unconsciousness and found herself sitting on the doorstep of an empty house, and knew she was undone. The minister's wife, being true and thorough, probably saved her from going down to ruin, or from self-destruction. The minister himself told us this painful story not a week ago.

Mothers and mistresses, do you know that nurse girls are the chief, though not by any means the only, victims? That lady who, day after day, in the Park, speaks so pleasantly and kindly to your nurse, and wins her heart, is the weasel in disguise. She has a standing order from the Minotaur to supply him with fresh victims at £10 a head. Do you ever ask the girl to whom you trust your children, where she has been, and to whom she has spoken? She came to you pure and innocent, but her mind is being honeycombed by sophistries and promises and lies. Perhaps to-morrow she will ask for a holiday, and come back lost. Have you no responsibility for her safety, as you hold her responsible for that of your children? Do you consider that as she is corrupted she will corrupt them?

Railway directors and shareholders, do you know that woman? Yesterday she was on your platform in the guise of a Sister of Mercy, to-day in the garb of a Protestant deaconness. She is on the prowl for girls arrived by train from the country to take or seek situations in modern Babylon. And not she alone; but other girls of their own age, themselves having been betrayed, now take their revenge by betraying others.

It has come to this—that a business of the most nefarious kind has become established, with commission agents everywhere, among fellow-servants, work-mates, school-companions, associates of every sort. It is more than ever necessary to know all about every one with whom our children, and the young committed to our trust, associate. We are surrounded and permeated by a network of agencies which has for its purpose the wanton destruction of all maiden modesty and womanly purity, and it is simple madness to stop our ears and shut our eyes, and, like the ostrich, hide our heads in the sand, and say—

> Let law and honour, love and virtue, die,
> But leave us still our smug propriety.

Let it be distinctly understood that at home, at school, at play, at work, in church, in town or country, by rail, or road, or river, at all hours, and in all places, our children are in danger. Eager eyes are ever on the watch to find fresh fuel for the hell-fire which burns in the spirit and soul and body of wicked and wealthy men. We cannot afford to be silent, or to mince our words. The crimes which destroyed Greece and Rome are destroying England, and if none else cry aloud and spare not, at least let the people of God, who are the salt of the earth and the light of the world, speak loudly to men in warning, and cry mightily to God in prayer.

EXTRACTS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A prominent lady worker in the cause of social morality wrote to us on Saturday :—

> These last four days have been like hell; the storm is something terrific. You see how it has compelled the House of Commons at once to huddle the Criminal Law Amendment Bill through its second reading. Our M.P.'s dare not trifle with the storm of indignation that has been evoked. And nothing less awful would have saved the Bill, for we were making no head-way, and the measure was on the eve of being shelved for the third session. My heart is very sick, but I hope we are telling at last.

Another friend, a well-known lady-worker, writes:—

What will be the issue of these terrible disclosures? A poor man in a train was seen to be reading the paper. He burst out with a cry, "Sodom and Gomorrah." Putting his hand to his face he wept and prayed, as if in agony.

At a large West-end drawing-room meeting last week, where accounts of rescue work were given, a lady visitor from abroad was asked to say a word. She gasped, "My heart is too full," and sat down sobbing. Oh, for the tender Christ-like heart!

Among the other letters that have reached us on this subject is the following:—

My dear Sir,—I am glad that you have the courage to support the efforts of The Pall Mall Gazette to expose the horrible things that go on in London. I wish, for your encouragement, you would look at the Lessons for the day (Sunday, July 12), appointed to be read in the churches. The first Old Testament Lesson (2 Sam. i.) shows us in what spirit we ought to accept a national disgrace; the second (2 Sam. xii. to ver. 24) sums up the teaching of all the horrible disclosures made during the week. The alternative chapter (2 Sam. xviii.) shows the punishment of the rich man; he robs the poor man of his daughter, his own son falls into a dishonoured grave—one of the commonest tragedies in the land.

The first New Testament Lesson warns us against attempting to suppress the truth. The fury of the Jews, the feebleness of the rulers of the city of Thessalonica, curiously limns almost to literality what we have seen happen here in London in the past week; and then comes the example of the Bereans, who are commended as more noble, because, instead of stamping out unpleasant truths, they searched the Scriptures to see if those things were so.

The same strong incentives against hiding the truth, and in favour of bringing a strong light to bear on everything, is urged in the second New Testament Lesson, where the whole subject is raised, and purity of thought as well as act inculcated, the real remedy for this perennial tide of impurity being pointed out in the sacred and ennobling character of marriage, as taught by our Lord.

Richard Heath.

WORKING GIRLS IN KINGSLAND.

May I refer to the crying needs of the young women working in the factories in the north and east of London? There are meetings of some sort for these girls at the Kingsland Institute each evening in the week, but there is a sore lack of workers. The girls are employed in cigar-box, tin-box, capsule, firewood, boot, biscuit, leather-purse, and other manufactories.

On Saturday evenings girls crowd in from Highgate New Town, Hampstead, Hoxton, Hackney, Islington, Bethnal Green, &c. It is impossible for the very few workers to obtain the individual influence essential for real good to be done. How many need a helping hand to teach and strengthen them whilst they are daily exposed to temptations, which those in happier circumstances can hardly realise; will not some Christian women come forward and help them by friendship, entering into the difficulties of their lives, and visiting them when they are ill or in trouble, trying to lead them to the Saviour, and then helping them to stand firm?

E. Robarts, Hon. Superintendent.

Ridley-road, Dalston, E.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—Many meetings have been held in various London centres, by Mrs. Bradley, Secretary of the Women's Branch, and in every case invitations have been given to visit other localities. At one meeting, at Rev. H. P. Hughes' Chapel, at Brixton-hill, the majority of over two hundred women, who composed the audience, promptly held up their hands to signify their resolve to sign and spread the knowledge of the Purity Pledge. Meetings are hoped for in Norwood, Blackheath, Greenwich, and some other centres, as the immediate result of this one gathering. Those who can in any way help in this work are desired to communicate with Mrs. Bradley, 11, Grange Park-gardens, Ealing, W.

"NEW GODS THAT CAME NEWLY UP."

Last Thursday, at noon, in the City Temple, Dr. Parker gave his usual week-day discourse. Our reporter went to hear, in the hope that the illustrious preacher might refer to the revelations of London vice and crime then being made through The Pall Mall Gazette. The text announced seemed to be singularly appropriate to such a subject, but no direct allusion was made to the event of the week. The discourse, however, was, in some respects, a most weighty and timely one, and some extracts from it may be of interest. The text was Deut. xxxii. 15, and onwards: "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked: . . . then he forsook the God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation. They provoked Him to jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they Him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils, to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not." What words could better describe the condition of our time?

The history of poverty, said Dr. Parker, is more likely to be a history of religion than is the history of wealth. We perhaps never see human meanness so conspicuously as when we see foiled, defeated, disappointed men crawling back to the altars which they had abandoned in the time of sunshine and abundance. Our ministers soon become a nuisance to our prosperous life. We will call for them in the day of sickness and ask them to whine out their prayers in our hearing when we cannot pray for ourselves, or when we think Heaven is offended with us, and any prayer of ours will be answered only with contempt. The world does not sit comfortably with true spirituality of mind; they speak different languages; they cannot occupy an equal plane. To speak of "making the best of both worlds," is to speak of that which has no relation one part to the other. The one world is to be kept under our feet; it is never to come within the operation of our highest, strongest thought. The other world is a high world out of reach, yet still pouring upon us its light and warmth and eternal comfort. We must keep the two worlds in their places, or we shall be troubled in our thinking, and foiled and mortified in our prayers.

Passing on to consider the words "They provoked Him to jealousy with strange gods," the preacher remarked that this was not the jealousy that expresses itself in censoriousness, in petulance, or in revenge, but that which is the expression of a wounded heart and of a disappointed love. The whiter the snow the more easily it shows every black spot thrown upon it. It is right that it should be a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God: it is right, because "God is love." Outraged love is the severest and most terrific of enemies. We must in some quarter of the universe find a throne that cannot be bought and a sceptre that cannot be bribed: this we find in God.

In verse 17 there is a marvellous expression full of the subtlest sarcasm: "They sacrificed to new gods that came newly up." There is no keener satire in all literature. "New gods"—new toys, new theological theories, new speculations. "That came newly up," as though they were twice new, double-dyed novelties, new things just to hand, toy gods arrived by the last ship. They have all that you can expect or desire as gods, except wisdom, righteousness, love, omnipotence—everything except elements that are Divine and energies that are supernatural. Gods in plenty just to hand! "First come first served." We need not invent any present-day satire upon theological novelties. Think of a new god! The expression is a contradiction in terms. To be God is not to be new; to be new is not to be God. So with theological doctrines and speculations. Let us allow for new letters, new settings, new framings; but the things uttered, and set, and framed must be venerable as eternity. He who can adopt a new god can give a new god up. A new god that has come newly up can be easily abandoned. We are doing injustice to the Spirit of Truth in supposing that a man can be here, and there, and elsewhere in religion, and yet can be firm in love, in social confidence, a standard-bearer in business, and in the family.

We have to-day an abundance of "new gods that came newly up." They must be left to play off their novelty, to wear off their paint. Then gods that are new grow old very soon, and are cast out by those that really never trusted them. In proceeding further with his modern illustrations of this ancient theme, Dr. Parker passed under review the popular attractions of the Inventions Exhibition; though he did not mention it by name, all who have been at the South Kensington show, or heard or read of it, would have at once recognised the reference. From his vivid and circumstantial picture of the scene we conclude that the Doctor has been to see it himself. "What is it that delights men in spluttering rocks, in coloured fountains, in lamps swinging upon trees that are offended by their presence? See the great seething crowd waiting for the coloured fountains to spring up, and for the little electric lamps confined in coloured globes to shine among the swaying branches. What exclamations of idiotic delight! Who heeds the quiet moon that looks on in untroubled amazement? The stars, too, look down upon the scene without being moved to envy before the momentary blush and the splash of the coloured fountains. Oh, we forget the rock so soon; we prefer the toy; we want something that can be spoken trippingly upon the tongue; we do not care to bow down the head to study and criticism, to the examination of evidence, to commit ourselves to the acceptance of sound conclusions. Men who would not travel half a mile to the greatest pulpit in the world, or the greatest altar ever built to the God of Heaven, will put themselves and their families to any amount of inconvenience and expense to gaze with admiration and idiocy upon the coloured fountains. Blessed are they who love the permanent lamps of heaven, and who set their feet proudly and squarely on God's everlasting rock! Let us turn to the real, to the substantial, to the very revelation of God's truth, and abide there. The coloured fountain can only come now and again, but the eternal heavens are always full of light and rich with beauty."

The whole of this remarkable discourse may be found in the current issue of The Christian Chronicle.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.—The annual conference of the Medical Prayer Union was lately held in the hall of the London Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, W.C. Dr. Heywood Smith took the chair. There were present: Dr. Flavel Cook, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Dr. George Saunders, C.B., Mr. A. Pearce Gould, and about seventy members of the M.P.U. The subject chosen for consideration was "Scepticism." Papers were read on "Scepticism among Medical Students: its probable cause and how to deal with it," by Mr. G. Wilmot Brook, and "Scepticism treated by Natural Religion," by Mr. F. J. Wethered. These were followed by a practical address on the subject by Rev. W. R. Mowll, and an interesting discussion. Finally the principal points mentioned during the evening were summed up and briefly criticised by Rev. Dr. Flavel Cook in a short but suggestive and helpful address.

THE SLAVE TRADE ON THE CONGO.

ONE of the objects that Mr. Stanley set before him in connection with his later explorations on the Congo was to establish an order of things in which "murder, and lawlessness, and the cruel barter of slaves should for ever cease." In the second volume of his new work* (reviewed in our last issue) he describes the camp of a band of slave-trading Arabs, whom he encountered on a journey up the river. We extract the following ghastly story:—

"After spending the morning listening to such of their adventures as they chose to relate, I was permitted in the afternoon to see the human harvest they had gathered, as many of my people had exaggerated the numbers of the captives they had seen in the camp. Their quarters were about 150 yards above the place we had selected. It was surrounded with a fence, made of the hut walls of the native town of Yangambi, which lay without in ruins; the square plots of raised and tamped earth, with a few uprights, alone indicated where it stood. The banana groves had been levelled, and their stalks employed to form the fence round about their camp. Within the enclosure was a series of low sheds, extending many lines deep, from the immediate edge of the clay bank inland, 100 yards; in length the camp was about 300 yards. At the landing-place below were fifty-four large canoes, varying in carrying capacity. Each might convey from ten to one hundred people.

"The first general impressions are that the camp is much too densely peopled for comfort. There are rows upon rows of dark nakedness, relieved here and there by the white dresses of the captors. There are lines or groups of naked forms upright, standing, or moving about listlessly; naked bodies are stretched under the sheds in all positions; naked legs innumerable are seen in the perspective of prostrate sleepers; there are countless naked children, many mere infants, forms of boyhood and girlhood, and occasionally a drove of absolutely naked old women bending under a basket of fuel, or cassava tubers, or bananas, who are driven through the moving groups by two or three musketeers. On paying more attention to details, I observe that mostly all are fettered; youths with iron rings around their necks, through which a chain, like one of our boat-anchor chains, is rove, securing the captives by twenties. The children over ten are secured by three copper rings, each ringed leg brought together by the central ring, which accounts for the apparent listlessness of movement I observed on first coming in presence of the curious scene. The mothers are secured by shorter chains, around whom their respective progeny of infants are grouped, hiding the cruel iron links that fall in loops or festoons over their mammas' breasts. There is not one adult man captive amongst them.

"Little, perhaps, as my face betrayed my feelings, other pictures would crowd upon the imagination; and after realising the extent and depth of the misery presented to me, I walked about as in a kind of a dream, wherein I saw through the darkness of the night the stealthy forms of the murderers creeping towards the doomed town, its inmates all asleep, and no sounds issuing from the gloom but the drowsy hum of chirping cicades or distant frogs—when suddenly flash the light of brandished torches; the sleeping town is involved in flames, while volleys of musketry lay low the frightened and astonished people, sending many through a short minute of agony to that soundless sleep from which there will be no waking. I wished to be alone somewhere where I could reflect upon the doom which has overtaken Bandu, Yomburri, Yangambi, Yaporo, Yakusu, Ukanga, Yakonde, Ituka, Yaryembi, Yaruche, populous Isangi, and probably thirty scores of other villages and towns.

"The slave-traders admit they have only 2300 captives in this fold, yet they have raided through the length and breadth of a country larger than Ireland, bearing fire and spreading carnage with lead and iron. Both banks of the river show that 118 villages and 43 districts have been devastated, out of which is only educed this scant profit of 2300 females and children, and about 2000 tusks of ivory! The spears, swords, bows, and the quivers of arrows, show that many adults have fallen. Given that these 118 villages were peopled with 1000 each, we have only a profit of 2 per cent.; and by the time all these captives have been subjected to the accidents of the river voyage to Kirundu and Nyangivé, of camp life and its harsh miseries, to the havoc of small-pox, and the pests which miseries breed, there will only remain a scant 1 per cent. upon the bloody venture.

"They tell me, however, that the convoys already arrived at Nyangwé with slaves captured in the interior have been as great as their present band. Five expeditions have come and gone with their booty of ivory and slaves, and these five expeditions have now completely weeded the large territory described above. If each expedition has been as successful as this, the slave-traders have been enabled to obtain 5000 women and children safe to Nywangé, Kirundu, and Vibondo, above the Stanley Falls. Thus 5000 out of an assumed million will be at the rate of a half per cent., or five slaves out of 1000 people.

"This is poor profit out of such large waste of life, for originally we assume the slaves to have mustered about 10,000 in number. To obtain the 2300 slaves out of the 188 villages they must have shot a round number of 2500 people, while 1300 more died by the wayside through scant provisions and the intensity of their hopeless wretchedness. How many are wounded and die in the forest, or drop to death through an overwhelming sense of their calamities, we do not know, but if the above figures are trustworthy, then the outcome from the territory with its million of souls is 5000 slaves, obtained at the cruel expense of 33,000 lives! And such slaves! They are females or young children who cannot run away, or who, with youthful indifference, will soon forget the terrors of their capture. Yet each of the very smallest infants has cost the life of a father, and perhaps his three stout brothers, and three grown-up daughters. An entire family of six souls have been done to death to obtain that small, feeble, useless child. These are my thoughts as I look upon the horrible scene. Every second during which I regard them the clink of fetters and chains strikes upon my ears. My eyes catch sight of that continual lifting of the hand to ease the neck in the collar, or as it displays a manacle exposed. through a muscle being irritated by its weight or want of fitness. My nerves are offended with the rancid effluvium of the unwashed herds within this human kennel. The smell of other abominations annoy me in that vitiated atmosphere. For how could poor people, bound and rivetted together by twenties, do otherwise than wallow in filth? Only the old women are taken out to forage; they dig out the cassava tuber, and search for the banana, while the guard, with musket ready, keenly watches for the coming of the vengeful native. Not much food can be procured in this manner, and what is obtained is flung down in a heap before each gang, to at once cause an unseemly scramble. Many of these poor things have been already months fettered in this manner, and their bones stand out in bold relief in the attenuated skin, which hangs down in the wrinkles and puckers. And yet, who can withstand the feeling of pity so powerfully pleaded for by those large eyes and sunken cheeks?

"What was the cause of all this vast sacrifice of human life, of all this unspeakable misery? Nothing, but the indulgence of an old Arab's 'wolfish, bloody, starved, and ravenous instincts.' He wished to obtain slaves to barter profitably away to other Arabs, and, having weapons—guns and gunpowder—enough, he placed them in the hands of three hundred slaves, and despatched them to commit murder wholesale, just as an English nobleman would put guns in the hands of his guests, and permit them to slaughter the game upon his estate. If we calculate three quarts of blood to each person who fell during the campaign of murder, we find that this one Arab caused to be shed 2850 gallons of human blood, sufficient to fill a tank measurement of 460 cubic feet, quite large enough to have drowned him and all his kin!"

We may also quote, from the appendix to Mr. Stanley's book, Articles VI. and IX. of the General Act of the recent Berlin International Conference, at which the arrangements connected with the Congo Free State was framed and agreed upon:—

ARTICLE VI.

"All the Powers exercising sovereign rights, or having influence in the said territories, undertake to watch over the preservation of the native races, and the amelioration of the moral and material conditions of their existence, and to co-operate in the suppression of slavery, and above all of the slave trade. They will protect and encourage, without distinction of nationality or creed, all institutions and enterprises, religious, scientific, or charitable, established and organised for these objects, or tending to educate the natives, and lead them to understand and appreciate the advantages of civilisation.

"Christian missionaries, men of science, explorers, and their escorts and collections, to be equally the objects of special protection.

"Liberty of conscience and religious toleration are expressly guaranteed to the natives as well as to the inhabitants and foreigners. The free and public exercise of every creed, the right to erect religious buildings, to organise missions belonging to every creed, shall be subject to no restriction or impediment whatsoever."

ARTICLE IX.

"In conformity with the principles and the rights of nations, as recognised by the signatory powers, the slave trade being forbidden, and operations which, on land or sea, supply slaves for the trade, being equally held to be forbidden, the Powers which exercise, or will exercise, rights of sovereignty or influence in the territories forming the basis of the Congo, declare that these territories shall serve neither for the place of sale nor the way of transit for the traffic in slaves of any race whatsoever. Each of the Powers undertake to employ every means that it can to put an end to the trade, and to punish those who engage in it."

Surely brighter and better days are in store for poor, oppressed, down-trodden Africa, which has reaped so fully in the past the effects of the primal curse that fell on the descendants of Ham. Seeing that the door of the Congo Basin is so widely open to all sorts of missionary undertaking, and there is such ample security for life and property under the new regime, it only remains for the Christian Churches of this and other lands to go in and possess Central Africa for Christ.

In a recent issue Le Chrétien Belge has the following ominous paragraph which might well read a lesson to our Protestant communities:—

"It is evident that the Catholics wish to derive the advantage which is ensured to them by the new position of King Leopold with regard to the Congo. One of the clerical papers of Brussels has already issued an energetic appeal for 'the Conquest of the Congo;' this conquest is reserved for the missionaries of the Holy Virgin, not for traders,—'those money-worshippers.' 'The Congo ought to be given to the Church'; the Catholic Religion would ensure the benefits of true civilisation to these immense territories of which King Leopold is now the sovereign.' It is announced that great preparations are already being made for sending out numerous missionaries."

In our notice last week of Mr. Stanley's book we made a statement as to the death of Mr. T. J. Comber, of the Baptist Mission on the Congo, which we are glad to learn was mistaken; we inadvertently confounded Mr. Comber with his brother, Dr. Sydney Comber, who died in Central Africa a few months ago. Mr. T. J. Comber has been in this country for several months, and hopes soon to return to the Congo.

THE SELF-HARDENING SINNER'S DOOM.

By CHARLES G. FINNEY,

Author of "Lectures on Revivals," &c.

"He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."—Prov. xxix. 1.

(I.) WHEN AND HOW PERSONS ARE REPROVED.

GOD reproves the sinner by his word. He does this whenever He presents truth which shows the sinner his sins, and reveals to him duties that he is not performing.

By God's Providence sinners are reproved. Sinful men are continually planning selfish schemes, and God in his Providence often frustrates these schemes. This He does for the very purpose of reproving their projectors. Sinners often frame ambitious projects. The student seeks for himself a great name as a scholar. The warrior or the politician seek to enrol their names high above their fellows on the pillar of fame. But God blasts their hopes, and frustrates their plans. He would fain have them see that they had better by far get their names written in the Lamb's Book of Life. He blots out their name on ambition's scroll as fast as they can write it there, as if He would show them their folly, and allow them to write it where no power can ever erase it.

Again, it often happens that men through their selfishness become involved in difficulty, perhaps by a selfish use of their property, and God springs the net upon them, and suddenly they are taken. Thus they find themselves brought to think on their ways, and to experience the mischief of their selfish schemes. Another finds himself entangled in lawsuits, and his property melts away like April snow. As men have a thousand ways of developing their selfishness, so God has a thousand ways of heading them back in their schemes, and suggesting forcibly to their minds that "this their way is their folly."

Everything which is adapted to arrest the attention of men in their sins may be regarded as a providential reproof. When God comes amongst sinners and cuts down some of their companions in iniquity, how solemn are such dispensations. Often have I had the opportunity of noticing the effects of these reproofs of the Almighty. Who can fail to see that such events are designed to arrest the attention, and to rebuke sinners in their sinful course?

God also reproves men by his Spirit. Hence, when sinners are specially convicted of sin, they should know that God has come in person to reprove them. His Spirit gives them deep impressions of truth and duty, revealing to the sinner his own heart, and showing him how utterly at variance it is with a heart full of Divine love.

Again, God reproves the sinner whenever his Spirit awakens in the mind a sense of the great danger of living in sin. I have often known sinners greatly affected at the thought of going through life in sin, exposed every hour to an eternal and irremediable hell. These solemn impressions are God's kind warning, brought to the soul because He loves the sinner, and would fain save him if He can.

Again, God often makes the impression that the present is the sinner's last opportunity to secure salvation. I know not how many such cases have fallen under my own observation—cases in which sinners have been made to feel deeply that this is to be the very last offer of mercy, and these the very last strivings of the Spirit. My observation has taught me in such cases to expect that the result will verify the warning—that this is none other than God's voice.

Again, God's Spirit reproves sinners through their particular friends, or through Gospel ministers. The affectionate admonitions of a brother or sister, a parent or a child, a husband or a wife—how often have these been the vehicle through which God has spoken to the soul! His ministers also, God often employs for this purpose, so directing their minds that they in fact present to the sinner the very truth which fits his case, and he says, "It must be that somebody has told the minister all about my thoughts and feelings. Who can it be? I have never told anybody half so much of my heart as he has preached to-day." Now, in such cases you may be safe in ascribing the fitting truth to the guiding hand of the Divine Spirit. God is making use of his servant to reprove the sinner.

(II.) THE DESIGN OF GOD IN REPROVING SINNERS.

One thing aimed at is to press upon them the means of reform. A benevolent God sincerely desires their salvation, and honestly does all He wisely can to secure this desired result. Hence his oft-repeated reproofs and warnings. He will at least leave them without excuse. They shall never have it to say—"Oh, if we had only been forewarned of danger in those precious hours and years in which salvation was possible!" God designedly forestalls such exclamations by taking away all occasion, and putting in their mouths a very different one—"How have I hated instruction and my heart despised reproof!"

God designs by these reproofs to prepare men for the solemn judgment. It is in his heart to do them good, to secure their seasonable, that is, their present, immediate repentance, so that they may meet their God in peace at last. His benevolence prompts Him to this course, and He pursues it with all his heart.

It is no doubt equally true that the great God designs to be ready Himself for the final judgment, to meet every sinner there. He foresees that it will be important for Him there to show how He has dealt with each sinner, how often and how faithfully He has acted towards them the part of a kind Father. For this end every reproof ever given to a sinner will come in place. That dream recorded by President Edwards will then be found recorded also by an angel's pen, to be revealed before all worlds then and there! This was one step in the process of parental efforts for reclaiming one sinner. The admonition so faithfully given by President Edwards was another. All will go to show that truly God has been "longsuffering towards sinners, because He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

Thus will God in these providential warnings glorify Himself by exhibiting his true character and conduct. Nothing more is ever needful in order to glorify God than that his true character and conduct should be known. The developments brought out at the judgment day will thus reveal God, and of course will enhance his glory.

It is also interesting to see how God makes one warning create another. One providential event, sent as a judgment upon one sinner, multiplies its warning voice many fold as it falls upon the ears of hosts of other sinners. God cuts down one out of a class of hoary sinners, or of sinners in middle life, or in youth, and the event speaks in notes of solemn warning to hundreds. At Rome, N.Y., several years ago a great revival occurred, the power of which rocked and rent the stout hearts of many sinners, as the forest trees are rocked and rent by a tornado; but with it came some awful judgments, revealing another form of the mighty hand of God. There were in that place a small class of hard drinkers who seemed determined to resist every call from God to repent. On the Sabbaths they would get together for drinking and revelling. On one of these occasions one of their number suddenly fell down dead. Mr. Gillett, pastor of the church in that place, hastened to the spot, found the fallen man yet warm, but actually dead; and turning to the surrounding company of his associates, said, "There—who of you can doubt that this man has gone right down to hell!" This case made a deep and thrilling impression.

Another man, a famous apostate from a profession of religion, greatly opposed the revival. All at once God smote him with madness, and in his insane ravings he sought to take his own life. Men by turns had to watch him and restrain him by violence from committing suicide. Ere long he died a most horrid death—an awful warning to hardened apostates of their impending doom! So God tries to reform and save guilty men.

Again, God would manifest the utter madness, recklessness, and folly of sinners. How striking it will appear in the judgment to see such a multitude of cases of reproof brought out to light, and then in connection to see the folly and madness of sinners in resisting so many reproofs! What a gazing-stock will sinners then be to the gathered myriads of intelligent beings! I have sometimes thought this will be the greatest wonder of the universe, to see the men who have displayed such perfect and long-continued infatuation in resisting so much love and so many kind and most heart-affecting appeals and reproofs! There they will stand, monuments of the voluntary infatuation of a self-willed sinner! The intelligent universe will gaze at them as if they were the embodiment of all that is wondrous in madness and folly!

(III.) WHAT IT IS TO HARDEN THE NECK.

The figure is taken from the effect of the yoke on the bullock. Under constant pressure and friction the skin becomes callous, and past feeling. So with the sinner's conscience. His will has resisted truth until his constant opposition has hardened his moral sensibility, and his will rests in the attitude of rebellion against God. His mind is now fixed; reproofs which have heretofore chafed his sensibilities no longer reach them; friction and resistance have hardened his heart till he is past feeling. No dispensations of providence alarm him; no voice from God disturbs him; under all appeals to his reason or conscience his will is doggedly fixed; his moral feelings are insensible.

In this state, one might well say, the neck is hardened. The figure is pertinent. Who has not seen cases of this sort, cases of men who have become so hardened that every reproof passes by them as if it touched them not—as if their moral sensibility had ceased to be any sensibility at all? I was struck the other day in conversing with a man of seventy-five, with his apparent insensibility to religious considerations. "Are you a Christian?" said I. "No; I don't know anything about them things what you call Christians. I never murdered anybody, and I guess I have been as honest as most folks in my way."

"But are you prepared to enter heaven—to go into another state of existence, and meet God face to face? "Oh, I don't believe anything about them things. If I only live about right, that's enough for me." I could make no impression on such a mind as his.

You sometimes see men in this condition who have given their intelligence up to embrace error, and have of free choice put darkness for light, and light for darkness; have stultified themselves in their own iniquities, and have said to evil, "Be thou my good." These have a seared conscience and a hard heart; their neck is an iron sinew, and they are fixed and fully set never to yield to God's most reasonable demands.

What then shall God do with such men? The text tells us. They "shall be suddenly destroyed, and that without remedy." This leads me to inquire—

(IV.) WHAT IS MEANT BY BEING SUDDENLY DESTROYED?

It implies their being cut off unexpectedly, in such an hour as they think not. We often speak of things as coming suddenly not because they come early in life, but because they fall upon men suddenly and without being at all anticipated. In this sense the term suddenly seems to be used in our text. When some awful stroke of God's providence falls suddenly among us, smiting down some sinner in his sins, we say, "What a sudden death! what an awful dispensation!" So the Bible says, when they cry, "Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." No forewarning is given; no herald with trumpet-call proclaims the coming of that death-shaft; but all suddenly it cuts the air and strikes its blow! It has no need to strike another!

(V.) WHAT IS MEANT WHEN THIS DESTRUCTION IS SAID TO BE "WITHOUT REMEDY?"

That this destruction cannot be arrested. It comes with resistless and overwhelming power, and seems to mock all efforts made to withstand its progress. A most striking exemplification of this appeared in the dreadful Cholera which swept over many of our cities some years ago. I was then in New York city, an eye-witness, and more than an eye-witness, of its terrific power. My own system experienced its withering shock. A man of the strongest constitution occupied a room adjacent to mine, was attacked the same hour that I was, and within a few hours was a corpse. Its powerful sweep was appalling. You might as well put forth your hand to stay the tornado in its rush of power, as think to withstand this messenger of the Almighty. So with those forms of destruction which come at God's behest to whelm the hardened sinner in destruction. They come with the strides and the momentum of Omnipotence. The awful hand of God is in them, and who can stand before Him when once his wrath is moved?

Many other forms of disease, as well as the cholera, evince the terror of Jehovah's arm. The strong man is bowed low; his physician sits by his bed-side, powerless for help; disease mocks all efforts to withstand its progress; human skill can only sit by and chronicle its triumph. God is working, and none but a God could resist.

The very language shows that the principal idea of the writer is that this destruction is endless. It is destruction—the utter ruin of all good—the blighting and withering of all happiness forever. No rescue shall be possible; recovery is hopeless; it is a grave beyond which dawns no resurrection. The destruction wrecks all hope in the common ruin, and in its very terms precludes the idea of remedy. Can you conceive of another element of terror, not already involved and developed in this most dire of all forms of destruction?

REMARKS.

(1) We see how to account for the sudden deaths of the wicked that occur often, and what we are to think of them. Some such deaths have occurred here* which were exceedingly striking to me. Here we have seen young men, sons of pious parents, children of many prayers and many warnings; but they waxed hard under reproof, and their days were soon numbered. There was one young man who came here to study. He had been warned and prayed for. Perhaps the Lord saw that there was no hope in any further effort. His sickness I can never forget; nor his horror as death drew on apace. He passed away from the world of hope and mercy. I will not attempt to follow him, nor would I presume to declare his final doom; but one thing I know—his companions in sin received in his death a most solemn and awful warning.

(2) The danger of wicked men is in proportion to the light they have. Men of great light are much the most likely to be cut off in early life. Of this we have seen some very striking instances in this place. Some young men have been raised here—were here when I came into the place, and in the tender years of childhood and youth saw their companions converted, and were often affectionately warned themselves. But they seemed to resist every warning and come quick to maturity in moral insensibility. I need not give their names: you knew them once; where are they now? It is not for me to tell where they are; but I can tell where they are not. They are not grown up to bless the Church and the world; they did not choose such a course and such an end to their life. They are not here among us. No! the places that knew them once shall know them no more forever. You may call for them in our College halls; in the sad-hearted families where once they might be found; they respond to no call—till the blast of the final trumpet. They knew their duty but too well, and but too soon they apparently settled the question that they would not do it.

(3) It is benevolent in God to make his providential judgments in cutting down hardened sinners a means of warning to others. In some cases, it is so terrible that sinners have not even dared to attend the funerals of their smitten associates. In many cases within my own knowledge, God has in the most marked manner cut down men who were opposing revivals.

(4) We may learn to expect the sudden destruction of those who under great light are hardening themselves in sin.

(5) Reproof administered either soon subdues, or rapidly ripens for destruction. The rapidity of this ripening is proportionate to the pressure with which God follows the sinner with frequent and solemn reproof.

(6) The nearer destruction is to men, the less, very often, they fear or expect it. Just at the time that they are saying, "I never enjoyed better health," or are congratulating themselves in the prospect of securing some much-desired end, then sudden destruction comes upon them like an Alpine avalanche.

(7) Sinners that live under great light are living very fast. Those who are rapidly acquiring knowledge of duty, unless they yield to their light, must soon live out the period of their probation; they must soon be converted, or pass the point within which it is morally posssible for them to be converted. Men under some circumstances may live to the age of seventy and not get so much light as they would in a few days or weeks in others. Where light is blazing, with what accelerated rapidity is the great business of probation carried through. Of all places on earth this should be the last for you to choose to live in unless you mean to repent. Who would not fear the result of resisting great light? Many parents send their children here to be educated in the hope that they will be converted; and this is well. But if they pass through without being converted, may we not expect to see them soon break away and plunge into some of the dark mazes of error? "Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." How often the knell of an untimely grave has proclaimed that—"He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy.

SEASIDE.—Dear Sir,—It may be very convenient to many of your readers if you will allow me to say I shall be happy to assist them in the matter of furnished houses or apartments at this "Children's Watering-place," so very beautiful and safe, so healthy and so salubrious, if they will write me with stamp enclosed. Captain Drury has closed the first Children's Mission very successfully, and we are looking for a second to commence shortly.—Yours truly, W. H. Simms,

WHAT DOES "BORN AGAIN" MEAN?

By Rev. CHARLES GARRETT.

IF anyone had visited a certain Lancashire town thirty years ago, and asked for "Owd Mike," they would have found that everybody knew him. Like many of the victims of intemperance, Mike was a warm-hearted, genial, generous man, popular with all his drinking companions, and "no man's enemy but his own." At election times, after the official chairing of the newly elected member had taken place, Mike was always chaired by the rowdies as the working man's member.

Possessed of a strong constitution, he bore the strain of his irregular and dissipated life for some time with apparent impunity, but at last drink and recklessness did their work, and Mike became a prematurely old man, glad to get a copper from any passer by. For some years, by the aid of a grant from the parish, he contrived to eke out a wretched existence. He resided in a miserable cellar into which a breath of fresh air never entered, and where a gleam of sunshine could never come. One day he was visited by one of the district visitors, who, before leaving, read to him part of the third chapter of the Gospel of John. The words made a deep impression upon him, especially the Saviour's declaration, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

When left to his miserable solitude, he crouched over the few cinders that told where the fire should have been, and kept repeating the solemn words. Nicodemus's difficulty presented itself to the old man in various shapes—"'Born again,'" he said, "when I am near seventy! What can it mean?" The question grew upon him as he kept muttering it, till it excluded every other thought. "Cannot even see the kingdom of God," he said, "then, where shall I be? I know I am dying, and I must go somewhere; but I am not 'born again,' I cannot enter heaven, then I must be lost for ever." Tears filled his eyes as he thought of the guilty past, and glanced at the terrible future, and he groaned out, "Oh that I knew what 'born again' meant." He dwelt upon the question until it became unbearable, and he resolved, at all hazards, to seek the information he so greatly needed.

Leaving his cellar, he crawled to one of the cotton mills, where he was well known, one of the proprietors of which was an active Christian. Entering the office, he inquired for that gentleman. Another of the partners, who had once been a Christian, but had given up his faith in Christianity, and become a prominent secularist, heard the old man's voice, and went to him. "Well, Mike," he said, "what do you want?" "Why," said the old man, with great earnestness, "I want to know what 'born again' means." "Oh," said the gentleman, putting his hand into his pocket, and taking out sixpence, "you want a drink! take this and get it." "No," said the old man, pushing back the proffered money. "I don't want that! I'm a dying man, and if I'm not 'born again' I cannot see the kingdom of God, and I want to know what 'born again' means. Do tell me!"

Affected by his earnestness he said to the clerk, "You had better call Mr. W——'s father." Mr. W——'s father was one of the best men with whom Mike could have met. A devout Christian, pre-eminent for his common-sense. He was soon in the office, and Mike told his tale, and pressed his question. Seeing that life could not last many days, he persuaded him to consent to go to the workhouse, and he at once took him there. On the road, Mike resumed his question, and he in the simplest way gave him God's own answer. After seeing him attended to, he left him for the night. Sympathising with the old man's anxiety, he was early with him again, and, from the joyous expression on his face, he saw at a glance that the Great Teacher had led him into the truth. "Well, Mike," said he, "do you know what 'born again' means yet?"

Raising himself in his bed, and with the smile of a little child on his face, he said, "I don't know all that it means, but if hating sin and loving Christ is being 'born again,' then I am born again." As he spoke, he fell back into Mr. W——'s arms. Another sinner took his place amongst the great multitude who had "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

Would that every reader had as clear a view of the meaning of "born again" as old Mike; there would be more peace and greater joy. Why should we hesitate about it? The teaching of God's Word is clear: "Every one that loveth is born of God."—Joyful News.

GOSPEL TRADING.

"Trade ye herewith till I come."—Luke xix. 13, R.V.

THE two parables of the talents and of the pounds (Matt. xxv.; Luke xix.),* though spoken on different occasions, and differing somewhat in minor details, may be regarded as parallel in their scope, and almost as one in the main features of their teaching. What that teaching is is much obscured by the common misunderstanding as to what the money means which was entrusted to the servants by their Lord wherewith to trade during his absence. It is to this point, if we would understand the parables aright, that attention should be specially directed.

The common explanation is that these talents or pounds signify natural endowments, such as mental ability, influence, wealth, &c., which we are bound to use in God's service. This is true and beyond dispute; nevertheless, it is not the truth taught here, for while our natural endowments are, no doubt, the gift of God, and as such we are responsible to use them to his glory, they were not given to us at the time specially pointed out in the parables. They were given to us at our birth or since, but not when the Lord Jesus was about to leave earth for heaven. Some seeing this suppose the wealth entrusted to the servants to be spiritual endowments, and point to the day of Pentecost as the date of their bestowal; but Pentecost was after the Lord's departure, not before, and the gift given at Pentecost was rather that of spiritual power to use aright the wealth previously bestowed, than that wealth itself.

It is to our Lord's parting commission to his Church, as related in somewhat different words by the four Evangelists, that we must look for the thing corresponding to the wealth committed to the servants. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," is one report of this commission, and if it be asked to express in a few words what this wealth was, let Paul, that faithful trader with his Master's goods, reply, "To me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Christ, then, or the knowledge of Christ and his salvation, is the pound committed to the servants wherewith to trade during the Master's absence; and the souls saved thereby, according to the varying degrees of faithfulness and diligence of each trader, are the gains made in this trading. "Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds." "Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds." But what of the slothful servant who hid, whether in the earth or in the napkin, his lord's money? Does not he too truly represent the nominal Christian, the unconverted professor, who has the knowledge of the truth in his head but not in his heart, who knows the way of salvation sufficiently well, it may be, to point it out to others, but yet has not taken it himself? Such a one has hard thoughts of his Master, because he has not experimentally known his grace. He is charged with not having put his money into the bank, "that (as his Master says) at my coming I might have received back mine own with interest" (R.V.). Now what is the interest that our Lord may legitimately look for from those to whom He has given the knowledge of salvation? Is it not the salvation of their own souls? Even if they have not gained one other soul for Him by trading with his name, He may reasonably expect that what has been committed to them should not be so wholly unused as that not even their own souls have been saved. But such is the case. Hence the judgment: "Take it from him," take from him the profession of being a Christian, and let him henceforth be known as a hypocrite, the actor of a part. "From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

The reward of the faithful servants is, as given in Matt. xxv., "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." His joy is explained, in Hebrews xii. 2, to be the salvation of the saved. "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross," &c. His servants' joy is the same, as Paul shows us in 1 Thess. ii. 19., "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye, in the presence of our Lord Jesus at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."

Whilst the main features of both parables are the same, the differences are suggestive. In the parable of the Pounds the same sum is committed to all the servants, while the amount gained varies with their faithfulness. In that of the Talents the sum given varies according to the "several ability" of each, while the trading is proportionately the same. Each faithful servant simply doubles his capital. The much larger sum represented by the talent as compared with the pound is worthy too of notice, the one being nearly sixty times the other. Have we not here the difference between Christ viewed objectively and subjectively? The objective value is the same to all, but the subjective value varies with the receptive capacity or "ability" of each servant. To Paul, and to such as he was, Christ means untold riches, "the untrace-out-able wealth of the Christ," as Eph. iii. 8 might be rendered. By others who like Ephraim say, "I have become rich, I have found me wealth: in all my labours they shall find in me none iniquity that were sin" (Hosea xii. 8), He is less highly esteemed, and such need the warning given in Rev. iii. 17: "Because thou sayest I am rich," &c.

Nevertheless, poor and miserably defective as our best thoughts of Him may be, his value objectively remains the same. "To you that believe He is precious" (1 Pet. ii.7), which means, not that we feel Him to be precious, but that He is so, whether we feel Him to be so or not. Whether, then our thoughts of Him are what they should be

* Having spoken at the late Mildmay Conference of these two parables in reference to their bearing on Gospel service, I was asked by a friend then present to explain, more fully than time had permitted me, what I meant by so applying them. This has led to the above being written.

(as in "the Talents,") or what, alas! they too often are (as in "the Pounds") let us rejoice that even this lowest apprehension of Him supplies us with both wealth and motive for working for Him. Let us "trade herewith till He comes," and let us anticipate the reward of his own welcome words: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

SICKNESS AND SERVICE.

WILDERNESS TEACHING AND TRAINING FOR SERVICE HERE AND YONDER.

By ANNA SHIPTON.

"Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer."—Prov. xxv. 4.

GREAT men's lives are written, and many read them, and marvel how the foremost line of battle could have been led without them, or whether some holy enterprise for the evangelisation of men would have succeeded independently of their devotedness.

The forest tree is not really more beautiful or more necessary in creation than the forest flower that rings its blossoms in the breeze, in the light and warmth of a sunny June. The same loving hand formed both, gave each its service; and, even were it possible that the life of either were dumb for others, yet would the love which created each rejoice over it with singing. There was in the mind of Him who formed it a "needs be" that it should spring forth, and that in due time, too, it should also fade and die, the living and the dying being alike to the glory of Him who at the first called it into being.

Many a dear disciple has the heavenly Master called apart, both for the mountain and the wilderness teaching. He does not send them there alone. He says, "Come with Me." He never summons all his labourers to the same place, nor does He employ them in the same manner. While one watches for sinners by the wayside, and exhorts them and wins them to listen to the glad sound of salvation, another feeds the hungry, and ministers to the thirsty gathered together.

But there are some whom the Lord of the harvest needs under clouds of suffering, in sick-chambers, and in strange out-of-the-way places, where they learn lessons only taught in darkness and silence, and are thus prepared to deal with souls who can be reached in no other way than through the hidden ones of God. He asks for a willing heart. Dear reader, are you willing? Content to be weak and afflicted, in order to be fitted for the service He has designed for you? Willing to suffer that you may do his bidding? Nature may long after fleshly service, earthly companionship and novelty, but the new man in Christ Jesus will love God's will better than his own, and, though obedience to that will may entail a daily crucifixion of its desires, it will not be without its reward, for "as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ" (2 Cor. i. 5). The smile of the Beloved shall brighten each dark dispensation, and the golden fringe which borders even the heaviest cloud shall lead others to believe in the goodness of Him who has thus overshadowed you.

"Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" (Heb. xii. 11). To you this cloud is a wall of fire. But for it you might have wandered into by-paths, and pleased yourselves by your self-chosen service. Perhaps you might have won the admiration of your fellows; now none long to occupy your place; no envious desires follow you. Few will even understand you. Some will think you can only desire outward service, which is now denied. Many will misjudge and seek to draw you into work not designed for you; but, if walking in fellowship with the Lord Jesus, you will find that you can easily bear to be misjudged and misrepresented by those who know little or nothing of that path of faith in which He is leading.

In that secluded chamber or that distasteful dwelling, testimony may be yours which only the last day will reveal. Among the bright band awaiting you in your Father's home, glorified spirits may point to that spot where you have wept and prayed and suffered, as the birthplace of their blessing. Let the Holy One of Israel, who placed you there, mould you for his work. Be still. If you seek only to be approved of Him, you will soon find a place which no sneer will ruffle, and learn that it is a very small thing to be judged of man. "Be not weary in well doing." Be faithful unto death. "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear you shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—From "The Valley of Blessing."

A NEW PHASE OF AN OLD SUBJECT.—I.

IT is universally admitted, nowadays, that drunkenness and drinking habits are among the crying evils of the day. When the history of this nineteenth century is written, notice will have to be taken of this phase of the degradation of the people. At the same time the faithful historian will have to call attention to the extraordinary waking up of the Church of God, all over Christendom, to the horrors of this drinking craze, and the consequent rise and spead of the Temperance Reformation throughout the length and breadth of the lands.

It is more than fifty years since the seven brave men of Preston, with their pledge of Total Abstinence, began this great work in our own country. And now, in 1885, we begin to reap a wonderful harvest from their small sowing. We have total abstainers everywhere. Government itself is obliged to take notice of the subject, and may be forced into endeavouring to counteract the mischief done by the short-sighted policies of bygone days. We may well thank God and take courage.

But there is one aspect of this great and growing Temperance question which has never been touched upon. It is one which, when understood, cannot fail to help us. It gives the work a special commission from God Himself. He sets a seal upon it from his Word; it gives a peculiar significance to the whole work, which enormously strengthens those engaged in it, while at the same time it must carry conviction to thousands of hitherto untouched hearts.

There is no need to remind readers of The Christian of the position which wine and wine-drinking hold in God's Word. It first appears as a luxury, never as an habitual beverage. The first prohibition respecting its use occurs in Leviticus x. 9. This is very significant, and must be borne in mind. Denunciations against excessive drinking increase in intensity as we follow the Jewish history on into the Prophets. Evidently the evil grew. Luxury, effeminacy, drunkenness, gluttony, with the extremes of wealth and poverty, culminated in the reigns of their later kings. It was the old, oft-repeated story, in the history of nations. A national life began in simplicity, and a happy rural population; then the growth of wealth, the congregating of the people in cities and round their rulers' courts, with a rapid corruption of morals and a disregard of all laws, till the Lord's long-suffering came to an end, and the national existence became a thing of the past.

This is the stereotyped history of al national life. How much the habitual use of intoxicating liquors has had to do with the social corruption of the nations of antiquity, the student of history may find out for himself. Undoubtedly the history of the Jews, as traced for us in Holy Scripture, follows the same lines. The history of Christendom, as a whole, is repeating the story. All the nations which go to make up the ten kingdoms springing from the old Roman power—those ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image—the ten horns of Daniel's beast, which are the last-named kingdoms of the world, and, in whose days "the Stone cut out without hands" will fall—are alike degenerating. The world sees this plainly enough. It laughs, and says our vaunted Christianity is no better than other religions—that it has run its course, and had its day—that it is dying the death of all such systems—that a new religion is wanted—and it is ready enough to suggest new gods, and new doctrines, which are to be the regeneration of the future.

But the Church of Christ—God's believing children all over the world—know better. They are indeed looking for another Kingdom, though in a very different sense. The cry is passing, even now, from mouth to mouth, and heart to heart: "Your redemption draweth nigh." The thrill of hope and expectation is running through every fibre of the Christian Church. We know that our Lord is soon coming to take unto Himself his great power and reign, and that by-and-by, the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

For prophecy points to his coming as the one solution of all perplexing problems. But there is one fact in connection with these prophecies which has hitherto escaped notice. This is the frequent mention of drunkenness, and the abuse of wine, in those passages of Scripture which Christians have universally interpreted as referring to the last days. That drunkenness is one of the great sins of modern Christendom is best proved by the rise and growth of Temperance societies in all our churches, but that such a state of things was to be expected in the last days, and is even distinctly foretold by our Lord Himself, we hope to show in a subsequent paper.

THE NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND have agreed to join the British and Foreign Bible Society in issuing a new edition of the Chinese New Testament with Japanese points, or Kunten. Never before were there so many tokens that the wide circulation of Christian literature is beginning to tell on China. Two additional colporteurs are to be appointed for India, one at the foot of the Nepaul mountains, and the other in the city of Lucknow.

DANGERS AFFECTING THE LORD'S DAY.—A letter on this subject, signed by Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. Spurgeon, Mr. S. Morley, and others, has been addressed to pastors, asking their co-operation in the following ways: To organise opposition to any proposals made for the Sunday opening of Public Museums, Libraries, &c.; to communicate, when any Sunday Opening movement occurs in the neighbourhood, with Mr. C. Hill, Secretary of this Association, 13, Bedford-row, London, W.C.; to preach occasionally on the subject of the Sabbath to their congregations; and to bring under the attention of Members of Parliament, and of candidates for seats in Parliament and Town Councils the great and important question of Sunday observance.

Notes and Comments.

A CORRESPONDENT who has been visiting some of the Derbyshire villages remarks on the spiritual destitution apparent in many country districts. He says there ought to be a Gospel van regularly at work, throughout the summer, in every county.

What a wholesome law is that which has just come into effect in Connecticut. It imposes a fine not exceeding 50 dols., or imprisonment for three months or less, or both, upon every person who shall sell, vend, lend, give, or offer, or have in his possession with intent to sell, lend, give, or offer, any book, magazine, pamphlet, or paper, devoted wholly, or principally, to the publication of criminal news, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime. Where such a salutary law can be enforced, one may expect to see a corresponding change in the manners and morals of the people.

We have received the following from a correspondent:—

> "In the course of some recent experiences gained while making private inquiry into the state of the cheap, bad book market, I have come across small tobacco and 'sweets' sellers, who, exposing sensational literature in their windows, tempt many foolish but well-born girls to enter for purchase. They then disclose that they have a more highly spiced article within, a few copies of which can be had at a good price, and they offer the use of the room behind the shop, if 'Miss' is afraid to take such books home to read! Here is facility for impurity of the worst description. I believe that if a raid were to be made on some of these tobacco-dens, they would be found to be the source of far more evil than meets the eye. They are in many respects worse than the dram-shop. The owner of one of these dens said, 'We should never make a living out of sweets and 'bacca; so we do anything that's handy.' Here is work for some of our delvers and divers who are not afraid to touch pitch."

We want a law against "flash" literature in our own country—a law that will smash up the printers and sellers of the vile stuff that forms the substratum to the sensational novel of the day. Could many parents see their well-dressed, accomplished daughters "devouring" immoral writings, in the parlours behind some of those dens supposed to be tobacconists' and newsvendors', they might be more careful in their supervision of these over-trusted ones. What more natural in the well feed depository of secrets—the owner of the "den"—than that she should introduce her customer—the smoking, prowling young man—to the novel-reader in her parlour? Such things have been done, and will be done again. Will parents, generally, ever awake to a sense of the hundred issues arising out of novel-reading? And who shall awaken them?

In Good Words for this month Sir Lyon Playfair, M.P., writing on "The Disposal of the Dead," says:—

> "The common hole or ditch into which many bodies of paupers are shovelled cannot be spoken of as graves: they are pits of putridity. If land be too dear to give them decent burial, respectful to the dead and innocuous to the living, a thousand times better it would be that their bodies should be burnt and their ashes buried. As our modes of burial are at present practised, the grave cannot be looked upon with the eye of knowledge except as an evil to the living and a dishonour to the dead."

Dr. Playfair says the time has come when burial reform must be urgently pressed. He advocates Mr. Haden's "Earth to Earth" system of using coffins of wicker-work or other quickly perishable material, so that the bodies in which the elements of decay have begun to work may be easily and safely resolved into their primal elements. Long usage and conventional ideas in these matters render any change of methods difficult, but enlightened common sense is certain to prevail in the end.

Those who have a clear perception of the cruelty and inadequate results of Vivisection will find their hostility justified by the language of Mr. Lawson Tait, the eminent surgeon. He said, at a meeting held in London last month:—

> "I am quite sure that many even of the vivisectors themselves will come to the conclusion, which the lessons of surgery and pathology have taught me, that vivisection is not only useless in solving riddles such as we have to deal with, but that it is absolutely misleading."

Professor Rendel Harris has resigned his seat in the John Hopkins University of America, rather than acquiesce in the introduction into it of Vivisection.

Few things that have been recently published are more suggestive and instructive than certain utterances of Prince Bismarck in 1877, quoted in Good Words for July. His private secretary, Dr. Busch, says that the Prince, after declaring that his career had brought him but little satisfaction, added:—

> "How many have I made unhappy. But for me three great wars would never have been fought; eighty thousand men would not have perished; parents, brothers, sisters, and widows, would not have been bereaved."

This, we are told, was no solitary outburst. Of late years Bismarck has repeatedly thus expressed himself, and no arguments have availed to soothe him.

Other appalling results have followed the three great wars referred to. Not to speak of other Continental States, Germany and Russia alone have, at this time, more than a million of men on a peace, and more than three millions and a half on a war, footing; also more than half a million of horses kept for war. Surely, as Mr. Bright has just been pointing out to a French statesman, the insatiable exigencies of this vast militarism must be swallowing up the resources of the nations, exhausting the patience of the people, and Europe must be marching to some tremendous catastrophe.

England seems driven to the same military preparations. The spectacle of naval sham fights is spoken of by daily papers as one of grandeur, and what is termed "a melancholy sign of the times" is noticed in this month's Chambers' Journal. On entering the Inventions Exhibition the first sight is a collection of weapons of war, gunpowder of the newest kind, and the deadly charges of the most powerful guns ever made. Assuredly there should be a Christian advance of the times that should ask—How must these things appear to the God and Father of men?

The Spectator for July 4 points out that the present condition of Russia is that of France before the Revolution of 1789. Among the upper classes dissatisfaction with a State Church, and scepticism; the clergy the chief upholders of despotism; among the masses, credulity on the one hand, and a restless growth on the other of a menacing independence.

In The Contemporary Review for July, M. G. Monod, in an article on France, says the industrial, and especially the agricultural, situation of that country is becoming one of great urgency. The distress during the last winter in France approached starvation, and the present strikes of workmen are increasing the gravity of the crisis. Meanwhile marriage, but not vice, is shunned; obscene literature is shamefully tolerated; the law of libel is so inadequate that even women rush to the revolver, and the theatres amuse the people and inflame their passions by representations of the struggles of workmen. This is like Nero fiddling while Rome was burning.

A remarkable sermon was lately preached at Oxford by Canon Paget (the son of Sir James Paget). The substance of the noble discourse was—The doctrine of the Cross once accepted, and Christ's yoke of humiliation for man taken, then the intellect would be trained to the greatest strength, humility would be strenuously cultivated, the life would be mades erious, purity and unselfishness would be gained, and as the result there would come a power of personal influence which it would be difficult to limit. Would that such a line of truth were followed in ten thousand pulpits! It would have this further result: the husks of mere ecclesiasticism would be soon cast aside.

Canon Wilberforce is now at Lord Mount-Temple's villa at Babbacombe, on Tor Bay, where he will remain for several months. He has been progressing favourably, but will not be able to resume his duties at Southampton for a long time to come.

Here is Dr. Theodore Cuyler's view of the Revised Old Testament, as expressed in a letter to The New York Evangelist:—

> "I write this letter in the room in which the American Company of Revisers of the Old Testament once assembled. We cannot be too grateful for the grand work which was partly wrought here. For one, I am so abundantly satisfied and delighted with the Revised Version that I should be quite content never to see a copy of 'King James's Version' again. The beautiful rhythm is not spoiled, the most needful corrections are made, the accuracy of the original revelation of Divine wisdom is more fully secured, a wanton indecency of speech is cleansed away, many hidden things are made plain, and God's matchless Word shines out with fresh lustre and glory. Now let the New Testament be equally well revised, and we shall have the Book of books in an English dress worthy of being carried by English-speaking Christians around the wide world."

We have some letters for the following Hospitals and Homes, which we shall be glad to give for needy cases known to those at the head of missions, &c.:—

North London Consumption Hospital, Hampstead and Tottenham Court-road (in-patients' letters).
Chelsea Hospital for Women, Fulham-road (out-patients' letters).
North-west London Hospital, 18 and 20, Kentish Town-road (out and in-patients' letters).
Medical Aid Society for Necessitous Gentlewomen.
Hospital for Diseases of Nervous System, Paralysis, and Epilepsy, 73, Welbeck-street, W. (out-patients' letters).
Hospital for Women, Soho-square, W. (in-patients' letters).
New Hospital for Women, 222, Marylebone-road, N.W.
East London Hospital for Children and Dispensary for Women, Shadwell, E.
Ham Yard Soup Kitchen and Hospice, Great Windmill-street, W.
Convalescent Home, Sandgate, near Folkestone (not for infectious diseases).

The disproportionate and unequal punishments meted out to transgressors of the law are a growing scandal and disgrace. A Society paper, last week, records the following three cases:—

> "John Thomas sent, by the Preston magistrates, to penal servitude for ten years, with seven years subsequent police supervision, for breaking into a house and stealing seven shillings."
>
> "John Green fined, by the Carlisle authorities, one guinea for starving a pony to death."
> "A lad, charged at the court of Mr. Barstow, one of the Metropolitan magistrates, with stealing a geranium; an independent witness corroborated the youth's denial of the charge, and his mother begged a remand in order to produce testimony to her son's good character. Sentence: ten days' hard labour."

What can be said for the "evenhanded justice" of these sentences? A guinea fine for starving a pony; ten days' hard labour for stealing a geranium—with a doubt as to whether the real thief was in the dock. We hear of the enormity of lynch law, but it seems to us the rough justice inflicted by an infuriated mob is almost better than these caricatures of equitable judgment.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, speaking at the Mansion House on Friday afternoon, at the first annual meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, said:—

> He was glad that the new Government had determined to give facilities for the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which was aimed at protecting young children, but which did not go far enough to meet the wants of the case. His work on the Commission for the Housing of the Poor had enabled him to say that there were scenes going on in this Metropolis that were calculated to sap the very foundations of the nation, and which, if not corrected, would ultimately overturn the nation. This question, to his mind, was of more importance than the government of India or the Colonies, or any other matter to which Ministers of the Crown mostly devoted themselves. They must give the poor better homes to live in, and then there would be less drunkenness and less vice.

Yes; domestic legislation must be the first consideration of any well-ordered Government.

All honour to the Earl of Shaftesbury and the Lord Mayor, who have more than declined to condemn the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette for his fearless and outspoken exposure of crime; and to Mr. Samuel Morley, for defending him as a good man and true. In some pulpits as we know, in many as we hope, unmistakable reference was made on Sunday to the volcanic fires burning beneath our feet, and the fires of judgment gathering above our heads. We fear, however, that there is a large number of dumb dogs that cannot bark at the beasts of the field (or the city) who come to devour. The Press, the boasted Fourth Estate of the realm, whether secular or religious, is silent, unless the latter utters a timid squeak as to the harm which may be done by the particulars which have been given. Mr. Spurgeon, however, among preachers, and The Methodist Times among newspapers, stand out as bold and noble exceptions, to whom all who value purity and honour owe their hearty thanks.

God of old time declared that the turning of things upside down should not stand; nor will the strange upside-downness which we see now before us stand. Men of loose life crying, "Hush!" professedly in the interest of good morals, and by implication decrying as indelicate, men who demand investigation, and whose names are synonymous throughout the world with honour and conscience and purity of life, is a turning of things upside-down which must astonish everyone.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes sums up his scathing denunciations and his stirring appeals with these words, which all men who are not truculent or cowards will endorse: "At all costs—if necessary at the cost of a revolution—the traffic in little girls must now be stopped!"

We must give a separate note of commendation to the Salvation Army, for making possible this alarm of war. Some of its men and women have proved true heroes and heroines, who have braved more hideous perils than the battlefield, and who at all hours of the day and night have worked and watched and waited to bring these atrocities to light.

On behalf of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice, Mrs. Josephine Butler has issued a circular letter, from which we extract the following:—

> "It has been resolved, after consultation with various members of the Federation, to hold the Conference this year at Antwerp, on September 16, 17, and 18, under the presidency of M. E. de Laveleye. Further information, as soon as details are settled, can be obtained on application by letter to M. Aimé Humbert, 19, Rue du Château, Neuchâtel, Switzerland. It is expected that subjects of great interest will come before the Conference this year. The revelations which have been made in The Pall Mall Gazette throw fresh light upon the nature of the motives for the long-continued opposition in high quarters to the repeal of the C. D. Acts, and to the raising of the age of protection. Nothing could be more awful than that the seal of Government protection and quasi sanction should be given to such crimes as have been here revealed. This is, however, what is done where the regulation system is adopted in profligate foreign cities. These revelations increase our determination to obtain the repeal of the Acts, while they will quicken many activities and sympathies, we trust, which have hitherto been dormant. Some of our conclusions on this vast subject will be brought before the Antwerp Conference."

A special missionary address will be given to young people by Rev. J. G. Paton, from the New Hebrides, at Powis Hall, Powis-gardens, Westbourne-park, next Saturday, at 3 p.m.

An important discussion on the subject of Free Education took place in the London School Board on Thursday last. The motion in favour of such free education, which was brought forward by Miss H. Taylor, was lost by 18 to 19, a majority of only one against it. We hope to refer to the subject in our next week's issue.

We have received some deeply-interesting notes from a journal of the voyage to Canada of Miss Macpherson's last band of rescued children, with some particulars as to their placing out in families on the other side. We hope to give extracts in our next. Miss Macpherson is soon to sail with another party of children. Last Monday Dr. Barnardo was at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, accompanied by 120 boys who leave Liverpool for Canada this day (Thursday).

A correspondent sends to us an extract from a Sheffield paper and other documents relating to the intense distress among miners "locked out" at Denaby Colliery, in consequence of a dispute with the owners of the mine. It appears that a difference arose in connection with the filling of the coals in the pit. The owners, it is stated, proposed a revision in the arrangement which would amount to a reduction of twenty-five to thirty per cent. in the wages of the miners. The men agreed to a reduction of ten per cent., and a reference to arbitration of other matters in dispute. This offer was declined, and the men numbering some 1200 have been "locked out." With their families they have been evicted from their homes, being driven to find shelter "in wretched tents by the wayside. There they are at this moment, many of them slowly starving to death!"

In a letter from a lady in the vicinity, sent to us by our correspondent, the writer says:—

> "Even if the men were palpably wrong, they should not be allowed to die like dogs on the roadside. The battle is very unequal; those on the one side are well fed, while those on the other are starving. No one can realise the misery that prevails, who has not seen the life in those tents; if the working people of this country realised it they might 'turn again and rend us.'"

As far as we can judge from the evidence at our disposal, this seems to be eminently a case for the expression of public sympathy with the evicted miners. Rev. T. J. Leslie, Congregational Minister, Mexborough, will gladly receive and distribute relief, whether in money or in clothing.

We ask attention to the letter on Mark xvi. 9—20 (p. 18). We regretted that passage in Mr. Gamble's sermon, for we believe that it is more than perilous to enforce any argument by questioning the authenticity of any passage in the canonical Scriptures.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to correct an error in "Notes and Comments," occurring in your issue of June 25. The gentleman from Australia was invited to join the party who were anointing the sick in the Agricultural Hall, on June 5, and himself declined.—Yours truly in the Lord, Nevertheless, we know that workers at Bethshan do not approve his method of procedure. We are old enough to know how mesmerism developed into clairvoyance, electro-biology, medical instinct, and at last into full-blown spiritualism. And we are suspicious and afraid of all laying on of hands which has the least semblance of mesmeric passes.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.—DEAR SIR,—Referring to a note in this day's CHRISTIAN, anent my friend, M. F. H. Krüger, let me state that he has now completed his mission of inquiry in Algeria, which lasted some six months, and has sent in his report to the Paris Committee. M. Krüger has just accepted the important post of Professor to the students at the Mission-house in Paris, which will enable him to keep up his connection with the Mission in Basutoland. He will enter on this post at the close of the usual autumn vacation.—Yours truly, JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—The forty-sixth annual meeting of this Society took place at the London Sailors' Home, Dock-street, London Docks, E., on Wednesday afternoon, July 8. The occasion was one of special interest, in conjunction with the inauguration of the Society's new Chief Office in the Sailors' Home Building, on removal from Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge—an important and eligible transfer of abode for the Society. The Secretary, Mr. W. R. Buck, set forth the very varied particulars of the Society's operations during the past year, 1884, showing that as many as 11,211 shipwrecked sufferers and distressed widows, orphans, &c., of fishermen or mariners, making up a grand total of 361,860 so aided by the Society since instituted in 1839, had been relieved during the year. The Committee express their satisfaction at the continued thrift of the large number of 53,500 fishermen and mariners, enrolled in the Society's membership section, and claim for the Society in the future, in its new home, the same generous national support which had throughout the past so long prospered it, and its great national work of true helpfulness to the sailor, in its old abode.

THE DARK AND CLOUDY DAY.

"I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you."

IN the dark and cloudy day,
When earth's riches flee away,
And the last hope will not stay,
My Saviour, comfort me.

When the hoard of many years
Like a fleet cloud disappears,
And the future's full of fears,
My Saviour, comfort me.

When the secret idol's gone
That my poor heart yearned upon—
Desolate, bereft, alone,
My Saviour, comfort me.

Thou who wast so sorely tried,
In the darkness crucified,
Bid me in thy love confide;
My Saviour, comfort me.

Comfort me; I am cast down,
'Tis my Heavenly Father's frown;
I deserve it all, I own;
My Saviour, comfort me.

In these hours of sad distress,
Let me know He loves no less;
Bid me trust his faithfulness;
My Saviour, comfort me.

Not unduly let me grieve,
Meekly the kind stripes receive;
Let me humbly still believe;
My Saviour, comfort me.

So it shall be good for me
Much afflicted now to be,
If Thou wilt but tenderly,
My Saviour, comfort me.

OPEN AIR PREACHERS AT PLAY.

LAST Thursday the Open Air Mission were favoured with the most glorious summer weather for the annual excursion of its members, nearly 300 of whom spent the day at Dollis Hill, by invitation of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen. Dinner and tea were served under the ample shade of a marquee, and the intervals occupied in a variety of ways according to taste. Some settled down in groups under shady trees for prayer, praise, experience, and exhortation; and in some instances for discussion. This last might not be in the best taste, but men accustomed to deal with all kinds of opponents in the streets sometimes imbibe unconsciously a critical and militant spirit. But the more active spirits eschewed quietness, and went in for cricket in the broiling sun. Others (by no means the minority) indulged in boating on Hendon water; and various popular hymns came floating across the water, the fields and lanes, and the journey to and from the water witnessed further outbursts of this spirit of song.

After dinner a brief but hearty speech was delivered by Rev. Dr. Post, American missionary from Beirut, Syria. After tea, at the special request of Lord Aberdeen, a thoughtful address was delivered by Professor Henry Drummond, of Glasgow. This address related to the preacher's personal condition in relation to preaching, to preparation for preaching, and to the message itself. Mr. John Macgregor and Mr. Joseph Weatherley also spoke. Then there was an adjournment to the lawn, where the noble and generous host, who had been speaking in the House of Lords, gave a few hearty words directly on arrival. Soon after the happy party sang to the railway station, and so ended a memorable day.

"LITTLE WOMEN."—We have here the first number of a little paper, devoted to the interests of The English Girls' Garten. This Institution is designed to teach girls all that is necessary to make them good heads of households, also to train such as are found to be suitable as teachers of the system. Communications desiring further information should be addressed to Miss Headdon, The Villa, Bullo, Newnham-on-Severn.

SOCIAL PURITY CRUSADE.

ON Thursday last a drawing-room meeting, in connection with rescue work, was held at Lady Ashburton's, Kent House, Knightsbridge. In the regretted absence of the hostess, Mrs. Stuart Wortley presided. Miss Macpherson and Miss Steer gave most interesting accounts of the work carried on at the "Bridge of Hope," in the Ratcliff-highway. Mrs. Ross read an able paper on the urgent necessity of legal protection for girls, at least up to sixteen years of age.

Mrs. Steward spoke of the need, not only of having good laws, but that they should be carried out, not by the police, but by earnest Christian people, who have the welfare of the young at heart. She expressed her earnest wish that in every poor and degraded neighbourhood Homes, similar to the "Bridge of Hope," could be established; wherever there are good women a purer influence is shed around—an influence which cannot fail to have a beneficial effect. About 120 ladies were present.

Mr. James B. Wookey gave a powerful address last Sunday afternoon at Berger Hall, Bromley-by-Bow, to men only, on some of the moral aspects of the recent terrible revelations. The feeling exhibited by the large body of working men present, against all social injustice, cruelty, and immorality, was intense.

On Thursday night last a determined effort was made in the Strand to reach the fallen sisters who, unhappily, abound in that neighbourhood. A meeting was arranged for in the Lower Room, Exeter Hall. A numerous band of ladies and gentlemen spread themselves over the district from Temple Bar to the Haymarket, and gave special cards of invitation. About 130 women came to the Hall, and were waited on by Mr. and Mrs. George Williams, Rev. G. W. McCree, Rev. Henry Grainger, and others. After the refreshments addresses were given by several of the gentlemen present. Many were much impressed, and some at the close of the meeting were taken to Homes by friends prepared to receive them.

There is reason to believe that many more will, on reflection, respond to the kind invitations made to them, and will apply at the offices of the Midnight Meeting Movement for the assistance they need. At any rate all heard the Gospel fully and affectionately proclaimed.

Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, says The Pall Mall Gazette, was crowded to overflowing on Monday afternoon with a meeting of women assembled to consider the subject of the protection of young girls. The rich and the poor, several of the latter with children in their arms, sympathetically mingled, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed; indeed, a lady who was present says that the enthusiasm was beyond expression. The speech of Mrs. Josephine Butler was very pointed, but those of Mrs. Booth and Miss Ellice Hopkins were most remarkable for their eloquence and feeling. Mrs. Booth's prayer for the editor of The Pall Mall and all concerned in the work was touching in the extreme. A lady doctor also spoke with effect. The speakers urged the value of drawing-room meetings and petitions with however few signatures.

THE SLAVE TRADE is said to be brisk in the Persian Gulf now, only one small British gunboat being in the waters.

LONDON SOLDIERS' HOME AND MISSION.—The committee of this Institution (170, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W.) have issued a little statement in the hope that some readers, into whose hands it may fall may be led to render help, which will be thankfully received by the hon. superintendent, Mr. John Trotter, Dyrham Park, Barnet, Herts, or by the hon. secretary, at the headquarters. What is being done by this valuable mission may here be seen. Christian soldiers are banded together and encouraged, while the wanderers are sought after, and in many cases found. Classes and meetings, and teas with Gospel addresses are held at the Home, and mothers' meetings held for the wives.

MR. HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

AS one of the pastors of Sheffield, I send you a few facts connected with Mr. Hammond's meetings here. I was one of those who had confidence in Mr. Hammond's work and gave him my full sympathy and support from the very first, therefore took every means to bring my people into entire sympathy from the start.

Last Sunday morning, having made myself familiar with Mr. Hammond's book on the "Conversion of Children," I preached on that subject. By way of illustration, I repeated some of the incidents in that book which greatly moved the hearts of the people.

In the afternoon, also, I gathered the children, teachers, and friends, and spent an hour and a half in a preparatory service. There was unmistakable evidence of great interest in Mr. Hammond's coming.

In the evening, while Mr. Hammond was speaking, it was evident that the Spirit of God was moving the hearts of the people in a very remarkable manner. At the close of Mr. Hammond's address and prayer, in which all followed, very many in different parts of the house were bathed in tears. Young men and young women, boys and girls, were broken down on account of their sins.

Such a scene was never before witnessed in the history of our church. The whole audience remained to the second meeting. Now, after three days, over 200 of various ages have given in their names professing conversion. We have had persons appointed in different parts of the church to examine each professing a hope in Christ. We have endeavoured to do this as thoroughly as possible. A very great and glorious work has been done without a doubt.

We are specially thankful to know that the large class of young men, from fifteen to twenty years of age, have declared themselves boldly to be on the Lord's side, and have given undoubted evidence of a change of heart.

Mr. Hammond is a man with a large heart, full of sympathy, and requires an equal sympathy from all who work with him. I should advise those who ask his services to trust him from the very first, and give a full flow of sympathy. There are some hearts that die with indifference, but bloom and flower with sympathy. Mr. Hammond's is such a nature. My people and I gave him our full sympathy and support, and he spoke as an inspired man. Hence the wonderful results of his three nights' labours among us.

EVANGELICAL DEACONNESSES IN THE EAST.

PASTOR M. DISSELHOF has paid a visit to the stations occupied by the deaconnesses of Kaiserswerth in the East. He reports that all these fields of work are in a state of prosperity, and the sources of great blessing, both for the care of the sick and for the education of the children of rich and poor. They are held in very great esteem, both by the natives and the Europeans.

These establishments are at present troubled with pressing debts, and they make an appeal to the liberality of all Evangelical Christians who desire to co-operate in the evangelisation of the East.—Journal Réligieux.

HOW I FORMED A FREE LIBRARY.—In visiting the houses of the sick I found a great deficiency of good books pointing out plainly the plan of salvation, I saw great benefit in giving and lending to such persons. I could give you many cases that have been blest by Reid's "Blood of Jesus," Newman Hall's "Come to Jesus," and others. I have now a library of more than two hundred volumes. The circulation extends over several parishes. The books are changed as often as they think proper, and a great many of the houses are visited. I have books sent from all parts of England; a gentleman from Carlisle sent me nearly thirty books. My neighbours also contribute. It would be very easy for anyone to form a library in the same way. A LETTER TO THE CHILDREN.

THE following excellent "Epistle" has been addressed to the children in families connected with the Society of Friends on behalf of those assembled at the recent yearly meeting :—

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,—Many Friends have been meeting in London to think of, and speak to each other about our Heavenly Father and our Blessed Saviour Jesus Christ, and to learn what is God's will, and how to do it. We know that you could not be with us, so we send you a short letter to tell you how much we have been thinking of you, and how much we love you; but Jesus loves you far more than we do, and He never forgets you. He wants you to love Him, and to ask Him in prayer for everything that you need.

Most of you know by heart his words, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life," and we want you to think of this very reverently, and to understand that whosoever means even you; that for you the dear Saviour came down to die upon the cross, that your sins might be washed away in his precious blood.

He is not only a Saviour, but a perfect example to children, as well as to men and women; you know that He was once as young as any of you, and He knows your troubles and temptations, and is willing to help you to be patient, and gentle, and good.

To be truly good is to be truly happy, and the Christian child will not have less enjoyment in games and heathful play, but will have all the more.

May you, like Him, be subject unto your parents, remembering the plain command, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right."

God speaks in your hearts, and ours, by his Holy Spirit, checking us when we are tempted to do wrong, and helping us to do what is right; like Samuel, may you be ready to hear God's voice, and answer, "Speak, for thy servant heareth."

Dear children, it is very nice to see you in our meetings for worship,—you must not think that you are of no use there; a meeting hardly seems complete without children as well as men and women, and it cheers us to see you there, and to believe that your hearts are lifted up with ours to our Heavenly Father.

How pleased the lad must have been who supplied the five barley loaves and two small fishes with which the Lord Jesus fed so many thousands; and when He divided these among the multitude, He did not forget the children; so, when we are in meeting, Jesus has a supply for the children, feeding them with holy thoughts, and sometimes with fitting words spoken to them. Do not forget to thank our Heavenly Father for his goodness to you.

We are glad to believe you are trained to love the Holy Scriptures, and to read them sometimes with your parents and brothers and sisters, perhaps also in Bible-classes, and, we hope, often by yourselves. You can hardly read this blessed record of the love of God without learning to love it; there is so much in it to interest children—the life and miracles of our Saviour, how He went about doing good; how He healed children and raised one at least to life; how children shouted, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" when He entered triumphantly into Jerusalem; how children were with their parents when Paul and his companions, on leaving Tyre, knelt down on the shore and prayed.

How blest to Timothy were the Bible-lessons given him by his pious mother and grandmother, preparing him to serve his Lord in later years.

You will remember long what you learn in early life; many when ill have been comforted by the texts which they have learned in childhood.

No doubt some of you will soon be going for the first time to a boarding-school, perhaps this very summer; it will, of course, be a great change, but we doubt not that you will be happy if you really love your Heavenly Father and Jesus Christ your Saviour. Try to set a good example to your schoolfellows, and make those around you happy; be willing that others should have the best, and live not to please yourselves, but your Saviour.

Have nothing to do with anything that is wrong; be truthful, be honest, be pure; never do anything that you would be ashamed that your father or mother should know, and often ask God to help you in these things; for children who act in this way, school is a happy place; how they delight the hearts of their dear parents, and with what added joy will they spring into their arms when the holidays come round!

Dear children, may you all belong to the fold of the Good Shepherd, that you may know Him to gather you with his arm and carry you in his bosom, and lead you in the paths of righteousness, for his name's sake; may each of you be able to say, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want."

And now we bid you farewell; again telling you how much we love you, and that our prayer for you is that you may grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who when a child "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man."

Signed on behalf of the yearly meeting,

JOSEPH STORRS FRY, Clerk.
MARIA RICHARDSON,
Clerk to the Women's Yearly Meeting.

REV. J. G. PATON AT PAVENHAM.

OUR little hamlet has been favoured with visits from many men of mark in the Church, but few of these will be better remembered than this dear servant of God. So venerable in appearance, so unaffected in style, so simple in language, and yet such a powerful speaker withal, I wished, after listening to his telling address, that every one in his audience had been the minister of a numerously-attended church, or a lady of rank and influence, so that he should have received as many invitations as persons present, to speak to the congregation of the minister, and in the drawing-room of the lady.

All through the summer day, from four and five o'clock in the morning, had our cottagers been toiling in the strawberry-garden, or the hay-field, and it was not till eight o'clock in the evening that Mr. Paton's meeting commenced; but they sat and listened with the deepest interest till the village clock struck nine, and still on, while the daylight died away, and the speaker could scarcely be seen for the darkness. Many of them were to be off again at four o'clock next morning, but I do not believe that one of them left the room till the rev. gentleman had resumed his seat.

He told us how, when a boy, the prayers of his father, at family worship, engendered in his mind a desire to become a missionary; how God enabled him to overcome the thousand and one difficulties in the way of his wish, and sent him away to the Southern Seas with the Gospel of his beloved Master. Most interesting it was to learn how he conquered the Polynesian language, and succeeded at last in giving his new friends the Word of God in their own native tongue. But, oh, what perils the dear man must have passed through. Some of his fellow-labourers were not only murdered but eaten by the savages they went forth to save; others succumbed to hardships, and died off, till he was nearly left alone. At one time the murderer's knife was held for minutes at his heart; at another, the musket of some spleenful islander was pointed at his head. I wish I had time to tell the story of the sinking of the first well, and of the perplexity of his coloured friends, who had never known fresh water reach them but from the clouds above their heads. But let my readers hear him for themselves, and they shall be both interested and blessed.

I believe his address may always be obtained from Rev. W. Burton-Alexander, 36, Bloomsbury-square. That God may long preserve the dear old man to his Church, earnestly prays his younger brother in the Lord, JOHN E. LINNELL.

The Vicarage, Pavenham, Bedford.

The Presbyterian Messenger says:—"There are few who could listen unmoved to Mr. Paton's narrative of the dangers the missionaries have undergone, and the success which has followed their labours. His soul yearns over the heathen, who are waiting and beseeching for a missionary to be sent them. He grudges every day he spends at home in doing work which might very well be done by others, when there is so much for him to do in his own appropriate mission field. We are glad to learn that in answer to his prayers and pleadings he sometimes receives unlooked-for aid. At the Mildmay Park Conference last week one friend gave him a cheque for £300. A woman in humble circumstances, who kept a little shop in Glasgow, gave him a bank-note for £100, saying Christ had been so kind to her that she felt she must show her gratitude to Him while she had it in her power."

INTERNATIONAL AID TO YOUNG GIRLS.

PUBLIC opinion has of late been justly aroused, by hearing the sad revelations made at the Westminster Police Court in connection with the case of Mrs. Jeffries. The thought of the dangers to which the thousands of young English girls are exposed who go to the Continent in search of a situation, and who apply at the more or less doubtful register offices to find one, is indeed sufficient to fill all serious hearts with sorrow and anxiety. It is to such that we desire to make known a work which is as yet only at its beginning, but which is destined to do great good, if all who understand its importance will support and encourage it, by their personal effort, their contributions, and their prayers.

The French branch of the International Young Girls' Friendly Aid Society has made such progress as to promise a great deal for the future. It spreads from one town to another; it aims to embrace all France, and to envelop in a network of protection, all French and foreign girls, who are alone and unprotected. It has its centre in Lyons, and urges the formation of local committees wherever it succeeds in finding a sufficiently considerable number of helpers. These local committees, as well as all the members of the association, are in communication with each other. A young girl thus recommended by a friend, is sure to find ready support, protection and a kind welcome. The union seeks to have adherents by thousands, and in every part of France, in order to reach the greatest possible number of young girls. The end that it pursues is, that not a girl can leave her village without it being made known to a member in the locality to which she is going.

That this work should be useful to your young countrywomen, it is necessary that our union should be in communication with the English societies that are working in the same spirit as ourselves, or that the International Union itself should have a flourishing and active branch in England, in order that from all parts of that country the young girls who come to France should be made known to us. Our union has opened in Paris and Lyons two free Registry Offices, directed by the local committees. The address of that in Paris is Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle 8, Salle McAll; that of Lyons is Avenue de Saxe 89, Salle McAll. Let all your readers make a note of these addresses, and transmit them to any young girls with whom they are acquainted, and who are leaving their native land.

The committees recognise also the necessity of homes for servants and governesses without employment; of boarding-houses (or pensions) for working girls without relations; of reading, lecture, and class rooms to attract our young people, and to keep them from frequenting places of amusement, more or less dangerous. Indeed, they are ready to undertake all these projects, and are only waiting for the needed help. Contributions for the Local Committee in Paris should be addressed to Madame Raschlé Rittmeyer, 42, Rue de l'Echiquier, Paris; those to the Committee in Lyons, as well as all inquiries about the work, to Madame Coste, 39, Rue Malesherbes, Lyons.—Yours faithfully,

TH. COSTE-HENRIQUET, Hon. Secretary.

Lyons, July 1.

HOME OF REST, WALTON-ON-NAZE.—In this quiet little watering-place the Home of Rest for poor, needy, deserving women wanting rest and change of air, who cannot pay anything for themselves, continues to be owned and blessed by God. During the past year many have been helped in soul and body, have returned to their homes with renewed health and much spiritual joy in their hearts; 113 cases passed through the Home during the year. As the summer advances the cases press heavily upon us. We desire to refuse none, but our funds are very low. One guinea will send a woman to the Home for two weeks, railway fare included.

CATHERINE MOORE, Hon. Sup.

RICHARD WEAVER IN BELFAST.

IN a communication received from Rev. H. Montgomery, Belfast, respecting the recent visit of Richard Weaver to that city, he says:—

A large proportion of the audiences consisted of those for whom the meetings were mainly intended, viz., the non-church-goers, and from among these a goodly number of young men profess to have received benefit. As the meetings drew to a close the interest grew very great, and on the closing Sunday of the Mission (July 5) the building was packed with an audience of about 2500 an hour before the service was announced to begin. The crowds which gathered later could not, of course, obtain admission. The preacher pleaded with his hearers to close in with the offer of mercy there and then, and when the second meeting was announced, so many remained that personal dealing was impossible. Suffice it to say, that large numbers were seriously impressed, and others made profession of their faith in Jesus.

Let me tell one incident of the Mission. A purse containing a sum of money was lost, and duly advertised for in the newspapers. A person was named to whom the purse was to be returned. Soon after the advertisement appeared a poor woman presented herself to the person named in the advertisement, and, returning the purse, said, "This is what the grace of God can do, a week since I would not have brought this back, but a few evenings ago I heard Richard Weaver in the Circus, and this is the result."

On the Monday evening Mr. Weaver left by the Fleetwood steamer. Long before the hour for sailing large crowds had gathered on the quay; he was obliged to address them mounted on a cab. Reaching the steamer he spoke to the people again, and, with the quay lined for a long way down by hundreds of interested onlookers and friends, the vessel passed down the river amid the hearty farewells and prayers of the evangelist's numerous friends in Belfast, some of whom are his children in the faith.

EXETER HALL Y.M.C.A.

A MOST pleasant and profitable evening was spent at Exeter Hall last week by a goodly company of men, young and old, who gathered to welcome the General Secretary, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, on his return from America. The presence and speech of Count Bernstorff, from Berlin, and of Mr. Phildius, Secretary of the Berlin Association (also returning from America), gave a greatly increased interest to the occasion. Countess Bernstorff and Mrs. George Williams were the only ladies present.

In his genial opening speech as chairman, Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS said that if England, Germany, and America, the three great Protestant countries, were completely welded together in one triple cable of Christian love and effort, what could they not perform? To use an Americanism, they would "beat all creation." He very cordially welcomed their German friends in the name of the English Y.M.C.A.'s.

In an interesting address, expressed in excellent English, Mr. PHILDIUS related some of his American experiences, telling of the great mutual benefit that had resulted to those attending the recent Secretaries' Conference at Chattanooga, and the General Y.M.C.A. Conference at Atlanta. He also gave a brief sketch of the rise and rapid progress of the Berlin Y.M.C.A., which grew out of the labours of Mr. Von Schluembach, in that city, two years ago. Mr. Phildius is manifestly embued with a spirit of deep devotion to his work, and great things may be expected from the movement in Germany, with which he is so closely associated.

Mr. KENNEDY's address, which followed, was of equal warmth and interest. Both these friends seem to have been stirred up in an unusual degree by their American trip. Mr. Kennedy had to encounter his full share of the vicissitudes and dangers of the deep; on the outward voyage the vessel encountered a terrific storm, and his return trip in the Gallia was, as many of our readers may know, an eventful one. However, he appeared to be none the worse, and his experiences will doubtless give point to many an evangelistic appeal during the coming season at Exeter Hall. He earnestly invited helpers for the different branches of the work.

Last week we reported at some length an address by Count BERNSTORFF at Aldersgate-street. We need but add now that his words on this occasion were weighty and well chosen, showing that the Berlin Christians are fully alive to the spiritual needs of their countrymen, and mean to do their best to supply them. The presence of the Countess suggested some remarks about a hoped-for Young Women's Christian Association in Berlin; so that our German friends are moving forward with the times.

Words of congratulation or of exhortation were added by Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. John White, Mr. Hayward, Mr. Mills, Mr. Hawley, of California (who invited us all to the next Y.M.C.A. International Conference, at San Francisco), and Mr. Hind Smith. The whole proceedings were of an encouraging and stimulating order, and Mr. Williams, the host of the evening, must have felt well rewarded.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.

THE Bretons number over 2,000,000, and their interesting language and literature are at least 3000 years old, Lingering traces of Druidism, and, indeed, of forms of worship which have come down from the night of ages, are yet traceable among them. The Romanists tried in vain for centuries to bring this ancient people beneath their sway; but all efforts were futile, until Jesuitical diplomacy engrafted the loved antique customs upon the Papal ceremonial. Even this did not wholly succeed until the priests of Rome avowedly espoused their claim to exist as a separate people under their own reigning Duke. The Bretons are, by these tactics, more deeply enslaved to Rome than any other people in Europe, or, indeed, on the earth. Thousands of priests and sisters of mercy overrun this beautiful country, and they exercise even a greater power than the Government authorities; this being the only part of France of which this can now be said.

Among this interesting people, with the exception of a station in the extreme western part, belonging to the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, there has been no Protestant teaching whatever, beyond a small mission supported by the English Baptist Missionary Society, who are just now in view of their larger work in Africa and Asia, meditating the relinquishment of this branch of their work. One station, that of Tremel, the only one in charge of a native missionary, presents all the conditions of a good centre for a successful mission; and from what has already been done by M. Lecoat, the missionary, who is himself a convert of the mission, great results might be expected if adequately supported. His great ability, marvellous energy, and good standing, both with the authorities and the people, point him out as a good pioneer for a strong mission. Colportage, house-to-house visitation, day-schools, &c., are carried on. Preaching is conducted regularly in several other places besides the main centres, and the authorities have accorded M. Lecoat permission to preach in 200 Communes. He recently availed himself of this privilege in one of these, in order to test his probable reception. The priests and their abettors threatened to kill him, and did their best to interrupt him, despite the presence of the gendarme sent to defend him. But the people, at the close of his second address, came in a body and begged him to come and teach their children. Such work is limited only by the means to carry it out, and it should be known that £70 a year would pay the cost of a resident worker and a house to meet in, in any village.

A preliminary meeting for the purpose of forming a committee for the furtherance of this worthy object was recently held, when a representative company attended. Rev. W. L. Lang, 1, Oxford-villas, Balham-road, S.W., is Hon. Sec. pro tem.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Shaftesbury House, Margate.—The workers here will be very thankful if any kind friend will present them with a small portable harmonium for the daily Gospel meetings on the sands.

Llandudno.—Major and Mrs. Evered Poole are to hold meetings at Llandudno, from August 9 to 23. Mrs. Poole will give addresses to parents and young ladies, and Major Poole will speak to men, and hold one or two Blue Ribbon meetings.

Glasgow.—A wooden building in connection with the United Evangelical Association has been erected in the Saltmarket, and was recently opened for Gospel work in the presence of an immense audience. There was a "Mizpah Band" demonstration, at which effective personal testimonies were given.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan have completed a six months' campaign with their Bible carriage. They have travelled through Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Hampshire, and Wiltshire, have sold thousands of Bibles and Testaments, and given away thousands of tracts and little books. The Lord has blessed both the written and spoken messages.

Burslem.—At the invitation of Rev. M. Graham, vicar of St. Paul's, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the London Open-air Mission, sent Mr. J. J. Browne, one of the City Missionaries, who labours at South Norwood, to conduct meetings in this town during the Wakes. Mr. Browne has been here five years, and the people look upon him as a friend. On Sunday he preached four times, and had large audiences. He distributed over 2000 tracts and small books, which were received with much kindness. In the evening the Rev. Graham also spoke.

Chiswick.—A most interesting mission is being quietly carried on amongst Mr. Thornycroft's employés (numbering from 1000 to 1200) at his torpedo works on the river bank, every Tuesday and Thursday at 1.30. The men assemble in the open air to unite heartily in singing hymns, and in attentively listening to words of earnest prayer, followed by a soul-stirring address. Their eagerness to receive tracts at the close of the simple service, and their admirable behaviour throughout, prove their appreciation of this way of occupying their hour of rest.

Seamen in Antwerp.—For some time past, says a correspondent, there have been signs of an awakening among seamen in this port. A great fair has been held on the Boulevard, immediately opposite the Mariners' Church and Institute. A number of the sailors preferred coming to the Institute for singing and prayer to attending at the fair, and there were some decisions for Christ. There is also the International Exhibition, and other inducements to draw the men from the Institute, but the Lord has shown them a better way. Books for ship-library work, and tract bags, are needed. The General Steam Navigation Company, London, will bring parcels free, if marked "Books," and sent to their care, addressed to the Mariners' Church and Institute, Antwerp.

The Salvation Army.—In a recent appeal for help, General Booth says: "The exhausting effects of the struggle are being severely felt in our ranks. Some of our most devoted comrades have fallen out of the fight, and others have been driven to take long periods of rest. Commissioner Railton is still in South Africa, and, although his health is improving, he has little hope of ever being strong again. Twelve years of this day-and-night war have prostrated him. My eldest daughter has been ordered off the field by the doctor. My daughter Emma, of the Women's Training Home at Clapton, is still in forced retirement, and likely to be for weeks to come. My son Herbert is ordered three months' absence. Miss Charlesworth is also invalided, and others, in every direction, are showing signs of exhaustion."

Clevedon.—We have had a ten days' visit from Major and Mrs. Evered Poole, who have held drawing-room and evangelistic meetings during their stay with blessed results. Mrs. Poole gave afternoon Bible-readings, the attendance at these becoming so large that the public hall had at last to be engaged for them. Major Poole has had some capital beach services, and on Friday secured a flying visit from Mr. Arrowsmith, of the Children's Service Mission, who addressed large meetings of young people morning and evening on the shore. The clergy and ministers have given kindly and hearty support in every way to our friends. We feel their labours amongst us will be long remembered, so much evident blessing appearing at every meeting. They leave us for Tunbridge Wells and Folkestone, prior to visiting Llandudno in August.

The Annie, mission ketch, has now been at Brest a month, during which time much work of an interesting kind has been going on. There have been visitation of the ships, markets, and distribution of the Word of God. Crowded meetings of the inhabitants of Brest, visitors, sailors, and others have come together to hear the Gospel preached. The vessel is under the superintendence of Pastor Berthe, who has written several cheering letters to Mr. H. Cook, Gosport, with respect to the work.

A Poser for the Publican.—A man was converted a year ago, a drunken tramp and poacher. He was so bad that the pitmen were turned off if they gave him a night's lodgings. He has turned out well though. When he was converted, he said, "the candy man would not have had him for rags and bones." A few weeks ago a publican met him, and, pointing to the blue ribbon, asked him, "why he wore that thing." He replied, "What's the reason you never asked me why I wore the black eyes?"—Joyful News.

Navvies in Yorkshire.—A number of navvies are employed making two reservoirs, near Ripponden, in Yorkshire, who are in want of some good reading during their evenings, and other spare time. As the reservoirs lie some four miles apart, all papers, &c., should be equally divided into two parcels, and sent to Mr. Wm. Holgate, grocer, Ringstone Reservoir, Ripponden, near Halifax, Yorks; and Messrs. Chas. Baker & Sons, contractors, Rishworth, near Halifax, Yorks, who have kindly promised to distribute all papers sent to them among the navvies. Parcels should be carriage paid.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—On Race Sunday a large number of workers marched in procession to Town Moor, where Gospel addresses were delivered. Throughout the day the presence of the Master was powerfully realised; at the evening service an audience of 3000 to 4000 persons attended. On the Wednesday and Thursday of the Temperance Festival, large numbers gathered round the wagon to hear the addresses and sacred solos, whilst our lady friends with our lady missionary moved amongst the crowds distributing the tracts, leaflets, &c. John P. Squire.

Central Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Highbury-Corner Gospel Mission (65, Holloway-road, N.)—The origin of the mission was open-air work amongst the thousands who throng the thoroughfares of this neighbourhood. As winter drew on it was laid upon the hearts of the workers to take some hall or room for the continuance of the work indoors. On Sundays and weekdays we preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Many conversions have resulted, and several of our most earnest workers are those who were led to the Saviour at this hall. We are entirely unsectarian, and number amongst our workers members of the Established, Presbyterian, Baptist, Wesleyan, and Congregational Churches. We need Gospel tracts for distribution, and also money to help for the expenses. We shall welcome any fellow-workers in winning souls for Jesus. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. Higlett, 94, Buckingham-road, Dalston, N.

D. D. A. MacGregor.

WORDS IN SEASON.—A lady, the proprietress of a large millinery establishment, places a copy of a printed letter containing friendly counsel in the wedding wreaths or coronets sent out. A letter for mourners she places in boxes enclosing the mourning materials.

THE CAMBRIDGE MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—We have received an interesting communication from Dr. Edkins, of Peking, in reference to the meetings held on the arrival of Messrs. W. W. Cassels, Stanley Smith, and D. E. Hoste, from England, which we regret the demands on our space will only permit us briefly to allude to. The meetings, he says, have been greatly blessed, and this new religious life from England has come to them as a salutary, purifying breeze. The crust of conventional precedent and reluctance have been broken through, and such meetings as they have had he has never known in China. The preaching has been the old Gospel, and the Cambridge missionaries believe in having the fulness of the Spirit. Young and middle aged have alike felt deep impressions, and many responses to the appeals of Stanley Smith have been given of the blessings received. The Mission Societies of England and America, with the exception of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, have united in the ten days of prayer and Bible study, and Dr. Edkins quite expects that the new impulse of spiritual life will be communicated to the native congregations.—Christian World.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The British Temperance League has just held its annual conference, at Lancaster. Delegates from all parts of the country. Mr. J. Barlow, Bolton, was re-elected president.

The Barnsley magistrates have decided that Temperance Hotels are subject to the provisions of the Licensing Act, and, like ordinary public-houses, must be kept closed during prohibited hours.

Dr. Mosely, in his work on "Tropical Diseases," says, from his own experience, as well as of others, he has found that water-drinkers are little affected by climate, and can undergo the greatest fatigue without inconvenience.

Mr. Thomas Linton, Public Prosecutor in the Edinburgh Police Court, and who has thoroughly studied the question, says, "the beneficial results of Sunday closing throughout Scotland are, with few exceptions," universally recognised.

The Canadian Senate, a kind of Colonial House of Lords, has tried to maim the Scott Prohibition Act, by excluding from its provisions light wines and beer. The House of Representatives has refused its consent, and the proposed amendment is lost.

Serious complaints are made of rowdyism at a noted Sunday resort near a great city in the North. A writer on the subject says, "in these days not only Corydon but Phyllis drinks." This is the key to the rowdyism. At such places Sunday closing would be a boon.

Archdeacon Farrar, as a contemporary observes, has had the best of it in his duel with Lord Bramwell. His rejoinder in the Nineteenth Century is not so racy and so witty as the article of the learned law lord, but it is an effective reply to such arguments as the latter condescended to employ.

A map of the "Modern Plague of London" is published by the National Temperance Publication Depôt, 337, Strand. It is a map of the greater part of the metropolis, and shows by a red spot every public-house (but exclusive of licensed hotels, grocer-groggeries, &c.), as specified in the London Directory.

At Hull recently the Archbishop of York gave a timely warning. He said if cholera came it would "fasten its deadly grip" on localities where sanitary science had been neglected. Had the occasion been suitable his Grace would, doubtless, have urged that for safety, sobriety and cleanliness should be linked together.

"The Government have decided, after very careful inquiry," The Graphic remarks, "that 'sufficient ground' has not yet been shown for interfering with the so-called workmen's clubs which in many of our larger towns do more harm than all the public-houses and gin-palaces put together. These dens are, in reality, unlicensed drinking-shops, beyond the surveillance of the police and privileged to serve their members at any hour, day or night."

Mr. Hannay, the Clerkenwell magistrate, says he prefers "a man who is a moderate drinker—a man who knows when he has had enough." If Mr. Hannay would kindly give some practical suggestions to guide those who find the attainment of this knowledge a difficult task, the value of his declaration would be considerably increased. Such instruction would no doubt have been gratefully appreciated by many persons whom he has at times felt it his duty to send to prison for no other reason than their indefinite notions of the precise quantity which would be "enough" for them.—Methodist Times.

The Red-Ribbon Movement in New Jersey has had marked success. Messrs. Mabee and English, the able Temperance orators and organisers, have done a great work during their two campaigns of six months each. Over 50,000 persons have signed the total abstinence pledge, about 5000 men have been organised into over fifty Reform Clubs in various towns and cities, and the whole State, from Sussex to Cape May, has been fully aroused. The secret of the success of these gentlemen is, they are sustained by the clergy and Christians of the communities in which they labour. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union throughout the State co-operates in this movement.

British Syrian Schools and Bible Mission.—Your readers will be grieved to hear that, from continued failure of income, some of the thirty schools in Beyrout, Damascus, Tyre, and various towns and villages of the Lebanon, must be closed. The twenty-fifth year of the existence of this Mission will therefore be one of reduction instead of extension of operations. The children who are thus deprived of Scriptural education will most probably find their way into the Jesuit schools. Help will be gratefully received by the Secretary, Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BLACKWALL EMIGRANTS' HOME.

Dear Sir,—Having often heard disparaging remarks concerning Homes for Emigrants awaiting embarkation, I wish to give my experience. I arrived at Brunswick Hotel, Blackwall, four days before the vessel in which I had booked my passage to Australia sailed. It is a most spacious building, the rooms are all very high pitched, and the dining-room will accommodate at least 300 persons.

After partaking of tea I was shown the bedroom. Was rather surprised to find it fitted up with berths, the same as in a ship. This, as well as several other things, is intended to give the emigrant an idea of ship life.

After rising in the morning, all the bedclothes have to be folded up, and the bed has to be made just before retiring at night. Meals are at fixed hours. All of them are of a plain but substantial character. There is a prayer-meeting before breakfast for those who like to attend, and during the day you can amuse yourself as you please. There are books belonging to the Home, also musical instruments. No intoxicants are allowed on the premises. The married people are berthed together, but the rules are very strict concerning the separation of the single persons.

There is no distinction made between free and assisted passengers, but all are treated with the same courtesy and kindness. Everthing about the Home speaks of decency and order, and I was well pleased to find myself in such a safe and comfortable abode. The establishment of such places must have put a stop to the robbery formerly practised on emigrants who had to lodge in the "cribs" around the Docks.—Yours very truly, Malta. W. H. Reeves.

Dear Sir,—I am sorry to find anything in your columns which casts a doubt upon the true sayings of God. This, the otherwise excellent sermon by the Rev. H. J. Gamble (p. 8, July 9) does. Referring to, and quoting the note of the Company of Revisers, at Mark xvi. 9—20, he says: "Now, I submit that this throws such serious doubt on its genuineness that we may well pause before accepting it." In this doubt he is confirmed by the want of corroboration of certain statements contained in that section by the other Gospels.

Now, it is admitted that two fourth-century MSS., Codices Vaticanus and Sinaiticus, do omit the passage. But it is also maintained, even by those who refuse the passage as spurious, that the quire in Cod. Sin. containing the end of Mark's Gospel, is written by the scribe of Cod. Vat., so that those witnesses count, not as two, but as little more than one. Furthermore, Cod. Vat. leaves a blank (the only one of the kind) after ver. 8, as though the copyist knew of the ending. The other copies which read the passage are legion. Why, up to the end of the fourth century only, twenty-nine or thirty versions and Fathers bear witness to its existence. Some of these are second century authorities. So that if mere antiquity settles the question, Mark xvi. 9—20 is undoubtedly genuine.

If anyone desires to see the question thoroughly threshed out, he will find it in Dean Burgon's "Revision Revised," pp. 36—40, 422—3, &c., and at still greater length in the same writer's "brilliant monograph" (as Dr. Scrivener calls it) "The Last Twelve Verses of St. Mark's Gospel Vindicated," &c., a work published in 1871, and as yet unanswered, if not unanswerable. Dr. Scrivener's "Plain Introduction" (Third Edition, 1883), pp. 583—90 may be referred to with advantage.

As to corroboration, who would refuse the account of the healing of the deaf-mute (ch. vii.) because found in St. Mark's Gospel only? How much of St. John's Gospel stands uncorroborated by the others? Do let me entreat your readers not to give up this section of God's Word, because, out of an almost superstitious reverence for two old MSS., many learned men have pronounced against it; others equally learned, and with far better reasons, maintain that it is genuine. The doubts of some do not make the passage doubtful.

I write not in the interest of the disciples of "faith-healing"; as to that I am as sceptical as the Rev. H. J. Gamble. I desire only to ask your readers not to give up the integrity of God's Word. There be many persons who would like to see verse 16 wiped out of the Canon. Why should we play into their hands?—Yours faithfully in Christ,

William Jeater.

RAMPANT RITUALISM.

Dear Sir,—There seems to be an ominous and ever-increasing cloud overspreading our country in the influence of the Jesuits, through the High Churchmen and Ritualistic party in the Episcopal Church of England. The Jesuits have been cast out of almost every other country in Europe. Why should they find not only a refuge but a welcome here?

In the small town where I am staying for a short time, there is a splendid old Parish Church. On entering it, there is practically no difference to be discovered between it and a Roman Catholic Church. The Communion-table is profusely decorated; twelve tall candles are conspicuous. Over the pulpit is suspended a crucifix. On either side of the chancel are two small chapels. One is elegantly fitted up in oak and crimson velvet; this is used for the confessional, and "the priest" is there on the last Saturday of each month to "confess" his flock, as stated on the notice tablets of the church. The other chapel, I presume, is dedicated to the Virgin, as there is a life-size image of Madonna and Child over the richly-trimmed table, or so-called "altar." The officiating "priests" are wondrously garbed, and the congregation, as they enter, bow or fall on one knee before the "altar."

"My brethren, these things ought not so to be." Is there no power in the principles of the Reformation which can cast out from amongst us the deadly evils of formalism and sacerdotal priestcraft, which are sapping the life of the nation? If Roman Catholic countries have found it necessary for their moral health and national prosperity to cast out the Jesuits from their midst, is it possible that we can take up the deadly viper and not suffer? It is not possible; we are suffering at the present moment, spiritually, morally, and nationally, exciting the contempt of nations, and provoking the judgments of God! It is high time to awake out of sleep, and to realise that where priestcraft reigns freedom is impossible. Was the blood of martyrs shed in vain?—Yours obediently, A. Jackson.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN FLORIDA.

Dear Sir,—Since I left last October we have had several very interesting meetings amongst the negroes. Anxious souls are coming forward, some have professed conversion. Those who received blessing last year are standing fast, and trustworthy testimony is given that their lives correspond with their profession. They have also built a nice little church in this place, and the negro village is rapidly increasing. A large hotel and college are in course of construction, and many coloured men are employed thereon, thus opening a large field for missionary effort. They welcome anybody who will either give a tract or speak to them of a Saviour's love. In several cases I have been earnestly asked to persuade my fellow countrymen, especially ladies, to come out and teach them. Both men and women listen very eagerly to a lady speaker, and there are many opportunities and openings for teaching lessons of Christian piety in the home and family life, such as women only can undertake. Many are striving to raise themselves in every way, and only need a kind, loving word of encouragement and sympathy accompanied with patient and prayerful effort to accomplish this end.

It is quite the exception to meet with deep poverty, which renders work considerably easier than when a great deal has to be given away. Simple, useful, and intelligent instruction is what is needed, and it will amply repay the Christian worker.

The country is being rapidly settled up, and a goodly number of English people are frequently coming to these parts. Land is rising in price, but there is plenty of room for many more (who have capital) by industry to do well for themselves in fruit-growing and other agricultural produce.

I will gladly communicate by letter with any who wish for further information, or I would, if the way opened up, return to England for a few weeks about August or September, to meet those who wished for further particulars, either for mission work or on general subjects.

Yours very truly, Joseph Hannington.

DANGERS IN LONDON PARKS.

Sir,—Anent the awful disclosures in The Pall Mall Gazette, will you assist to make public the terrible fact that a number of men and boys are constantly prowling about the parks and open spaces with the most vile intentions on the unwary, so that it is highly dangerous for any person who is alone to take a seat in any of those places? All this is perfectly well known to the police, and is fully proved by incidents that have cropped up in criminal trials within the last two years.

With the aid of a few detectives nothing would be easier than to stamp this out. But it really seems that the police authorities prefer this state of affairs.—Your obedient servant, Y.

IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

The committee of this Society have published their annual report, in which it is shown that the past year has been one of much blessing. More places have been occupied than ever before, and more work done. The income has been greater, and the staff of evangelists increased. More than two thousand meetings have been held, in 148 places. Five tents have been employed constantly during summer. As the result, whole neighbourhoods have been awakened, and large numbers brought out for the Master's service. A few extracts from letters written by the Agents will give an idea of the work being accomplished:—

"Yesterday morning I conducted a prayer-meeting, near to Crumblin. It is held at the house of one who was formerly given to drink, but was converted at the meetings. Thirty were present, most of whom were saved during my mission there, and now take part in the prayers." "One strong, rough-looking fellow, to whom I had spoken several times, came to me and said he could not sleep the night before, and that he cried to God for mercy, and obtained pardon and peace. Then he could not sleep for joy. His old companions followed him through the streets, crying out that he had become religious, but he stood fast." "One case, while at Glasslough, seems to be remarked by all, that of a young man who was possessed of considerable property, but through cock-fighting, betting, &c., had brought himself into difficulties. He came to the meetings, the Holy Spirit awakened him; he was enabled to cast himself entirely upon the finished work of Christ, and soon began to praise God with the new song." "The Lord is working here at Maralin in a wonderful way, particularly amongst the young men, many of whom, I believe, have been savingly converted. Scores besides are anxious to be saved. Yesterday was the grandest day we have had yet, a thousand people in the tent. Four hundred stayed for the after-meeting."

The work in Monaghan eventuated in a prayer union, formed among the converts, and under the guidance of the more experienced and older Christians. Also a weekly meeting for the study of the Bible and prayer, and on Sunday evenings an undenominational service. In many cases, persons were brought to Christ who were awakened as far back as the revival of 1859. One convert is now studying for the ministry. Another went to the meetings "to make fun and mock the preacher," but God saved him, and he is now thinking of entering the missionary field. The Hon. Secretary of the Society is Mr. James Barton, Dundalk. He says, "Our estimate of needed income for this year is over £2000."

EXETER HALL is truly a busy place. The Y.M.C.A. is doing a good work there, and, judging from a brief stay which I made during last week, all the different branches appear to be in active working order. This casual visit gave me the opportunity of hearing a few stimulating words at the mid-day prayer-meeting by the Rev. B. Senior, Minister of Surrey Chapel. The subject was, "What think ye of Christ?" Mr. Senior's remarks were deeply impressive, and spoken in a way which sustained the full interest and attention of his hearers. I was glad to see a good attendance, and I have no fear but that it will increase on the four following Wednesdays, when Mr. Senior will continue his Bible readings.—Christian Chronicle.

JULY 16.—EPHESIANS I.

v. 1.—"To the saints which are at Ephesus."—As R.V. says, in its margin, "Some very ancient authorities omit 'at Ephesus.'" This is explained by its having been intended not for Ephesus only, but for the other churches in Asia; in fact, by its being a sort of circular letter for that district, the space to be filled in with the name of the church as required. It is thus generally supposed to be the Epistle which the Colossians were to read "from Laodicea" after reading their own (Col. iv. 16).

v. 4.—"Holy and without blame before Him."—This describes the standing of Christians as viewed in Christ in the sight of God the Father. It is better therefore to take the words "in love" with what follows, as was done by the Syriac Version, Chrysostom, and the other Greek fathers, as well as by Augustine. Ver. 5 will then read, "In love having predestinated us unto the adoption of sons, though Jesus Christ, unto Himself," &c. So R.V. in margin.

v. 6.—"Grace, wherein He hath made us accepted."—R.V. is nearer to the Greek, "which He freely bestowed on us." The verb is formed from the word "grace" or favour; as one might express it, to keep up the connection, "favour with which He hath favoured us."

v. 10.—"Gather together in one," ("to sum up," R.V.)—Both renderings fail to give the idea of headship conveyed by the Greek word; "to head up" would be better, but with a slight paraphrase it may be best rendered, "to gather up under one head."

v. 12.—"Who first trusted in Christ."—Or, as in margin, A.V., "first hoped." R. V. is better still: "had before hoped in Christ." Old Testament saints are thus described as to their living before Christ appeared, and as to the nature of their faith, which was more that of expectation, as described in Luke ii. 38: "Them that looked for redemption."

v. 13.—"After that ye believed, ye were sealed."—Literally, "On believing ye were sealed."

JULY 17.—EPHESIANS II.

v. 1.—"And you, who were dead in trespasses and sins, . . . hath He quickened together with Christ."—This is the true grammatical connection, going down to the end of ver. 5 for the verb, which, when found, is not merely "quickened," but "quickened together with" Christ. The ordinary application of this first verse to conversion is therefore wrong, though expressing what is true. It really refers to Christ's resurrection, in which his whole Church was quickened with Him.

v. 5.—"By grace have ye been saved" (R.V.).—These words are thrown in parenthetically to show how little their own works—the uniform contrast to "grace"—had to do with their salvation, which was thus wrought out in the person and by the work of another.

v. 8.—"For by grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."—Here we have a fuller expansion of the thought thrown in parenthetically above. Grace is the source, faith is the means, of salvation; but this faith is itself God's gift, and salvation by grace is not of works, and excludes boasting. These things are stated in inverted parallelism, the first clause and the last going together.

v. 14.—"For He is our peace, . . . so making peace . . . . and came and preached peace."—These three stages of the attainment of peace are well worthy of attentive thought. First, the person of Christ; secondly, the work on the cross, "having slain the enmity thereby;" and, thirdly, the preaching or proclamation of peace. Through the third we grasp the second, and become incorporated in the first.

JULY 18.—EPHESIANS III.

v. 2.—"If ye have heard," &c.—From this to the end of the chapter is one magnificent parenthesis, descriptive of his call by special revelation to the knowledge of the great mystery of the dispensation expressed in ver. 6 (as rendered more accurately than before in R.V.), "That the Gentiles are fellow-heirs, and fellow-members of the body, and fellow-partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the Gospel." These last words, of course, qualify the first: it is only of those Gentiles who receive and believe the Gospel that these things are said.

v. 3.—"As I wrote afore in few words, whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ."—He refers to the glorious description, in chapters i. and ii., of the union of the Church with Christ in his quickening, resurrection, ascension, and session in glory.

vv. 10, 11.—"The manifold wisdom of God, according to the purpose of the ages" (margin, R.V.).—The change from one dispensation to another—from that of law with its restriction to the Jews, to that of Gospel with its expansion to the Gentiles—must have been very trying to the mental comprehension of the Jew especially. To meet this difficulty the Apostle shows that: "God's wisdom was not like man's—a wisdom easily apprehended by man's faculties . . . . —but his wisdom was manifold, multiform; it took one shape from the time of Adam to Abraham, another from Abraham to Moses, another from Moses to Christ, and yet another in the period which was just beginning."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 15.—"Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."—Beware of the R.V. rendering of this, "every family." The "Speaker's Commentary" well says: "In spite of the absence of the Greek article, the first words may be correctly translated, 'the whole family,' and there is a special force and signification in the expression here, which makes such a translation necessary."

JULY 19.—EPHESIANS IV.

v. 3.—"Endeavouring to keep."—Better rendered in R.V., "giving diligence to keep."

v. 4.—"There is one body," &c.—Not only have we the sacred number seven here used in describing the seven points of unity, but they fall into three groups of three, three, and one—the last afterwards expanded into three—thus giving distinctly the relation of these three groups to the three Persons of the Trinity. "The one body, the one spirit, the calling with one hope, have to do with the Spirit. The one Lord, the one faith, the one baptism, point to Christ (as baptism is into Him—Rom. vi.; Gal. iii.). The one God and Father is the seventh and last.

v. 11.—"Gave some apostles," &c.—This is liable to be misunderstood as if it meant "gave to some apostles," so R.V. renders it "gave some to be apostles." This is better, but "some" might be omitted altogether. It is literally "gave the Apostles, then gave the Prophets."

v. 12.—"For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—The R.V. is here more accurate: "for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ." The gifts spoken of (apostles, prophets, &c.) are given with a view to the adjusting (the word is used of setting a limb) the saints for work of ministering (evidently such ministering as all saints are called to, see "the ministry of reconciliation," 2 Cor. v. 18), for edifying the body of Christ.

v. 16.—"According to the effectual working in the measure of every part."—"That is 'according to the effective working of each part in due proportion.'"—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 21.—"As the truth is in Jesus, that ye put off" &c.—The R.V. though slightly more accurate in rendering this "as truth is in Jesus" have marred the sense by putting a colon instead of a comma after the word Jesus. The words "as truth is in Jesus" are parenthetic, and come in between the verb "were taught in Him" (R.V.) and the lesson taught, viz., "that ye put off," &c. The object of the parenthesis is to show that this teaching concerning the putting off the old and putting on the new man, rests on the ground of what has taken place in the person of Christ. See Rom. vi. 6.

JULY 20.—EPHESIANS V.

v. 1.—"Be ye therefore followers (imitators, R.V.) of God, &c.—The dislocation of this verse from what goes before, by reason of a most unfortunate division of chapters, is much to be lamented. There should be no break from iv. 31 to at least the end of v. 2.

v. 9.—"Fruit of the Spirit."—The word Spirit here has no anthority. All critical texts read "light" instead. This suits the context much better.

vv. 11-14.—"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather rebuke them."—The previous allusion to "light," and "fruit of the light," makes this clearer. The unfruitful works of darkness are not necessarily evil deeds—of these, "the things done in secret," it is "a shame even to speak"—but things that will not stand the test of the light, and are unfruitful in the sense that they do not present fruit of the light.

v. 13.—"All things that are reproved are made manifest by the light," &c.—This seems to follow the direction in verse 11, "rather reprove them." What, it might be asked, is to be reproved? Answer, all things are to be reproved that the light makes manifest to be worthy of reproof. The light here is not the light of nature or the light of moral philosophy, but Christ. Hence the quotation, probably, of the words of a hymn, as it is in Greek poetry, which (with slight alteration) is thus rendered in the "Speaker's Commentary":—

"Sleeper, awake! Rise from among the dead,
And on thee Christ his rays of light shall shed."

v. 15.—"See, then, that ye walk circumspectly."—The R.V. renders this, "Look, therefore, carefully how ye walk;" but the adverb, whether we render it "carefully" or "circumspectly," should be joined, as it is in the Greek, with the verb "walk," not with "see," or "look."

v. 26.—"Washing of water by the Word."—Beware of rendering washing by "laver," as many do. The word for "laver," often used in the Old Testament, is a different one. The washing spoken of here is more than mere baptism. It is the washing spoken of by Christ: "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." "By the word" points to the Gospel, rather than to Scripture. It is the word spoken, rather than written.

JULY 21.—EPHESIANS VI.

v. 2.—"Which is the first commandment with promise."—The difficulty here is that as no promise appears subsequent to the Fifth Commandment, it seems strange that he should call it the first with promise. Moreover, the second contains something very like a promise in the words: "Showing mercy unto thousands of them that love Me," &c. Perhaps the Apostle is thinking of the two tables of the law, in the first of which—that summed up in the first and great commandment—the fifth commandment appeared according to the Jewish Division, which gave five to each table. If this be the case, he would mean to point out the dignity of the commandment in question as being admitted to be part of the "first commandment," and then as an additional dignity, "with promise that it may be well with thee," &c.

v. 12.—"Spiritual wickedness in high (or heavenly, margin) places."—Jerome says: "Not that the evil spirits reside in heaven, but the air above our heads has received this appellation."

v. 14.—"The breastplate of righteousness."—Commentators discuss the question whether this is the righteousness of faith imputed, or the righteousness of Christian character. Hart in one of his hymns puts the matter wisely:—

"Righteousness within thee rooted
May appear to take thy part;
But let righteousness imputed
Be the breastplate of thy heart."

v. 20.—"I am an ambassador in bonds."—Literally, "I am on an embassy with a chain," referring to "the single chain by which his right arm was fastened to the soldier's left arm."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 24.—"Love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity" (in uncorruptness, R.V.).—"Probably it means 'with an eternal and unchangeable love;' this idea is expressed in the popular hymn:—

'And our love is love for ever,
For it is for Jesus' sake.'"

—Ib.

JULY 22.—PHILIPPIANS I.

v. 1.—"With the bishops and deacons."—This is one of the many passages which prove, what is now generally admitted, that the word "bishop" in the New Testament denotes the same office as that of "presbyter:" the episcopal office, as afterwards developed, resting for its Scriptural basis on the superintending office to which Timothy and Titus were appointed.

v. 13.—"In all the palace."—This is probably correctly rendered in R.V.: "Throughout the whole prætorian guard," and would refer to the soldiers of the guard, with whom, as a prisoner, he would come into constant contact.

v. 14.—"Many of the brethren in the Lord."—For "many" read "most" (R.V.). Bishop Lightfoot joins "in the Lord" with what follows, and reads it, "Having confidence in the Lord through my bonds." So "Speaker's Commentary."

v. 16.—"Preach Christ of contention" (of faction, R.V.).—Jewish party spirit is here evidently alluded to.

v. 19.—"This shall turn to my salvation."—"His personal safety cannot be intended here, as some have thought."—Bishop Lightfoot. Nor, it may be added, his personal salvation, but the welfare or prosperity of the cause he had at heart, viz., that of the Gospel. The Greek is literally, "This to me shall turn out for salvation;" what follows is the best explanation of what is meant.

v. 27.—"Let your conversation be," lit. "live as citizens." "Writing from Rome, whither he had been brought in assertion of his right of appeal as a citizen, to a Roman city where he had (Acts xvi 37—39) asserted his citizenship, he uses this word with manifold fitness."—Speaker's Commentary.

Pamphlets.

LA JOIE ET LA PAIX PAR LA FOI. 1d. Partridge. An excellent translation of that valuable little book, "Joy and Peace in Believing." May also be had at the Depôt Central, Palais Royal, Paris.

THE FIRST RIPE FIG. 6d. Shaw & Co. A careful and thoughtful account of Joseph Rabinowitch, the leader of the new Jewish movement among the Jews of South Russia. Mr. Wilkinson writes in the right spirit.

THOUGHTS ON PRAYER FOR THE HOLY SPIRIT. By Rev F. G SIMPSON. 4d. 11, Adam-street, Strand. The need of the Holy Spirit in all endeavours after holiness, and in all Christian activities, is here vividly pointed out and warmly insisted upon.

THE BIBLE AND WORLDLY PLEASURES. 10d. per doz. Glass, Glasgow. A truly wise and helpful little book. Should be circulated by thousands, for it contains loving and excellent counsel for young and old. But why is not the name of the author given? If we mistake not, it is from the pen of Dr. Pentecost.

THE REDEEMER'S RETURN AND THE COMING KINGDOM. By Rev. H. LINDSAY YOUNG. 6d. Partridge & Co. Another addition to the many works on this subject, but written in such a simple and truthful style as to bring a full comprehension of it within the reach of all who are watching and waiting the Redeemer's return.

THE RICHES OF HIS GRACE. By CHEYNE BRADY S. W. Partridge & Co. The "riches," so often hidden. even from sincere believers, are here unfolded. Present Justification, Acceptance, Sonship, and a number of kindred truths, are dilated upon with the author's accustomed felicity, and in a way that cannot fail to commend the teaching.

[ADVERTISEMENTS.]

Homes for the Aged Poor—E. V. 10s.

Wesleyan Orphanage at Tumkur, India (Rev. G. W. Sawday)—C. of E. £1.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer acknowledges, with thanks, from "Tradesman," on behalf of Purity Work, 5s.

Mrs. Robertson acknowledges gratefully postal order for 5s from L. J., Notting hill, for peasants suffering from floods in the Pyrenees.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers. sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in, which in all now amount to £300. Thanks to kind helpers. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,
120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

"WOMAN AND THE SCRIPTURES."

Lecture by Miss CORKE, published by request.

To be had post-free, price 9d., from Miss Annette Corke, 120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W

The entire profits to be devoted to the funds of the "Luther Memorial Home."

ALSO BY MISS CORKE,

"WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THEM?"

With Preface by the Earl of SHAFTESBURY.

"A book for all the year round."

To be had as above, price 2s. 6d., post-free.

Profits to be devoted to sending over-worked women, free, to Mrs. Marshman, London and Brighton Convalescent Home.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

BY ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,
Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.
With Preface by Professor Delitzsch.
Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"'All Israel Shall Be Saved.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'Jehovah Shammah,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract.

Shechem—Sychar.
Tiberias.
Bethany.
Athens.

And six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. Porter, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. Porter.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Trumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

EDITED BY

Rev. J. MILNER, M.A.,

With Essay and Additions by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, M.A.

With Twelve Full-Page Illustrations.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

"We cannot but express the desire that the circulation of this volume may be as extensive as its merit so well demands. It is elegant in the upgetting; and paper and print are a credit to its enterprising publishers."—British Friend.

Also published in 16 Monthly Parts at Sixpence each.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings;
And may be ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

The Tabernacle, The Priesthood, and The Offerings;

With the Spiritual Lessons derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensations.

BY

HENRY W. SOLTAU,

Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," "The Soul and its Difficulties," &c., &c.

With Memoir of the Author,

FOUR BEAUTIFUL COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS.

And numerous smaller Engravings.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings'-worth."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Of this work we can speak very highly. It is not a mere description of Temple Ritual and Jewish Ceremonies; but is more of a commentary and exposition; and is rich in evangelical teaching. The illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—Christian Age.

"The reading of this book has been to us a precious means of grace; and to all who love truth sweetly told we advise its study. It is full of Christ. The truths of the Gospel gleam on every page; and we feel that we shall be doing good work for any Christian brother whom we may induce to read it. Nothing seems strained; all comes out naturally. Of the get-up of the book, the binding is good, the printing is exquisite, the illustrations are elegant, and taken altogether we have not derived for some time so much pleasure and profit in reading a single volume."—The Baptist Messenger.

John, whom Jesus Loved:

A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple.

BY

REV. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.,

Principal of Bristol Baptist College.

"In Dr. Culross' new work, entitled 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. It is part of our appointed suffering in this present life to be compelled to winnow heaps of literature, with great result in chaff and dust, and small gain in bread-corn; and therefore our rejoicing is the greater when grain comes to our garner as clean provender in good weight and measure. It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes; but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Thoughtful chapters based on the leading incidents in the life of John. The admirable manner in which the subject is treated, and the excellence of the ideas themselves, should win for this work a large share of attention."—Rock.

"In a series of nine chapters of singular freshness and beauty the various aspects of the life, labour, and teachings of the beloved disciple are traced. While a tender affection for the subject of the work is evident, anything like hero worship is carefully avoided, and it is never forgotten that 'the servant is not greater than his Lord.' For the young Christian just entered upon the new life, as well as for the more advanced believer, the book is invaluable."

Professor HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve. And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer.

OGLE MEWS RAGGED SCHOOLS,

FOLEY ST., MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL, W.

ESTABLISHED 1843.

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

What must a working woman do with her little ones when compelled to add to the scanty income of the family?

A glance at our picture answers the question! Shall they be "Locked in for the Day," "Drugged to Sleep," or will you, by a kind response to this appeal, generously assist to maintain our much used Nursery? We have every accommodation, but lack sufficient funds. Fifty babies and young children taken care of daily by qualified Matrons—visited by a kind-hearted Physician—and the Mothers set free for their day's work. Who will help?

FUNDS ARE REALLY NEEDED.

Postal Notes may be sent to the Hon. Sec., 4, Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

RATIONAL TREATMENT.

OUR experience is being repeatedly enriched by additional proofs of the advantages of Odo-Magnetic methods of invigoration, in such cases as those detailed below, and with these facts of experience to support our method of treatment, we are not perplexed by the queries which would too often confound some practitioners if they attempted to give details of their practice. We are always willing to confer with any inquirer, and fearlessly invite the strictest criticism by interview or correspondence with ourselves or former patients. Modern therapeutics have taught us that instead of weakening an enfeebled constitution by artificial stimulants, there must be a radical invigoration of the system by natural means, if we would reach and affect the cause beneficially. By a force at once subtle, powerful, and continuous, Magnetism penetrates and permeates the innermost fibres and tissues of the system, imparting to the blood a rich and healthful quality, and to the nerves a vigorous tone, enabling the whole system to perform its functions with normal vigour, and the patient to engage in the activities of life with pleasurable alacrity.

Mrs. F. J. SMITH, 4, Holly Bank-road, Birkenhead.

"I am very glad to be able to say that the power is gradually coming back into the lower part of my body and legs, until now, I am very nearly able to stand. I think it was in October that I was first able to move my toes, just the least little bit. My husband seemed indisposed to consult the gentleman whose address you kindly gave us, as I was gradually improving.

"I have several friends whom I think would be benefited by your Appliances. Will you kindly send me some of your pamphlets for them, and also if convenient your private list of names."

February 24, 1885.

"My back is much stronger now than it was when I wrote and told you of benefit before. I can now walk about a mile, and can sit up for two hours, and occasionally longer than that. My friends are surprised to see such a decided improvement."

Miss SYMES, 14, Wollaston Road, Dorchester.

December 14, 1883.

"Your treatment, commenced a few months since, has proved very beneficial in my case, although at first it seemed to have no effect whatever on my ailment, which, you will remember, was one of spinal weakness. Thank God, I am now feeling better than I have done for a very long time, and I really believe I am stronger. I am certainly not so nervous as formerly, and I suffer less with my side. I can also sleep much better.

"It will be a pleasure to me to do anything in my power to encourage other sufferers to seek your advice, for I have the utmost confidence in the efficacy of your remedy."

March 2, 1885.

"I am sure you will be both surprised and pleased to hear that I am once again able to resume my occupation in life. I have now been in my situation eight months, and, thank God, I am feeling quite well. I firmly believe that my recovery is due to your treatment. God graciously blessing the means used, and I only wish that many other sufferers could be induced to try it.

"I now return you my heartfelt gratitude, praying that God will abundantly bless your work in the restoration of many others to health and strength, as it has been in my case."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

SAVING TO THE UTTERMOST:

The Story of GEORGE HATTON'S Mission Work in St. Giles's. By G. H. PIKE.

"Those who wish to profit by the experience of a volunteer worker who has been excavating the home heathen in St. Giles's for a quarter of a century, and who has been exceedingly successful in reclaiming convicted thieves, ought to procure 'Saving to the Uttermost,' a volume which records the work of Mr. George Hatton, one of the most modest and steadily persevering of all the evangelists in the great metropolis. It reads in some parts like a romance, but is everywhere practical and full of wise suggestion."—N. B. Daily Mail.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS TO THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

In response to the above the following letter has been addressed to the Clerical Secretary by Mr. STEVENSON BLACKWOOD, C.B.

Shortlands House, Shortlands, Kent,
July 8, 1885.

"DEAR MR. TOWNSEND,—I read last night with sincere sorrow the statement of the circumstances of great emergency in which the Irish Church Missions are now placed.

I cordially echo the concluding statement of the report of the Special Committee, that "the work must not be allowed to fall to the ground."

Apart from the supreme importance of the work itself, and the disastrous consequences of its curtailment, the result to the Clergymen, and other agents, whose services would be so suddenly discontinued, is most distressing to contemplate.

I cannot believe but that by prayer and effort those consequences may be averted.

Surely FOUR HUNDRED PERSONS might be found throughout the land who could, and would, each contribute £10 AT ONCE, and thus place the resources of the Society on a surer basis. I will be one, and lose no time in enclosing you my contribution.

Yours truly,
(Signed) S. A. BLACKWOOD.

P.S.—You can make any use you like of this letter, if you think it would stimulate others. Please send me some—say a couple of dozen—copies of the Special Appeal.

Remittances should be made payable to WILLIAM PASLEY, Lay Secretary, and Cheques crossed 'Ransom and Co.'"

The Bible Interpreter;

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY.

By the Author of "THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER."

This book is specially intended for the use of those who, whilst desiring information on Biblical subjects, cannot afford the purchase of large and expensive Bible dictionaries. The present small volume contains explanations of MORE THAN EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture words and subjects, and it is believed that many a painstaking Sabbath School teacher and many a humble Bible student will find "help by the way" from consulting this little manual.

In addition to the ordinary features of a BIBLE DICTIONARY, there will be found in an Appendix details of FULFILLED PROPHECIES, concerning the following peoples, places, and events:—

The Jewish Nation.
The Destruction of Jerusalem.
The Destruction of Samaria.
The Ammonites.
The Arabs.
Babylon.
Edom.
Egypt.
Moab.
Nineveh.
Philistia.
Tyre.
The Seven Churches of Asia.
Popery.

The volume also contains a Table, or List, of 361 HISTORICAL EVENTS AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES, by which the Bible reader is enabled to turn at once to the portion of Scripture where any particular event is referred to, or any Biblical character is named or described.

The book also contains:—

A List of the Prayers Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Miracles Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Parables in the Bible;
A Table of the Reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel: in parallel columns;
A Table of Scripture Proper Names, with their correct Pronunciation;
A Table of the Order and Dates of the Books of the Bible.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS, AND NUMEROUS SMALLER ENGRAVINGS.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12 Paternoster-buildings, E.C.;

The Christian.

THE SILENCE BROKEN.

MANY of the lively oracles of the English Press are still dumb, and will probably continue so, on a subject which is lacerating every tender feeling of innumerable hearts. Others have spoken; but evidently they have done so because they felt they could not well keep silence any longer, and they will soon relapse into reticence. Others, however—"may their tribe increase"—will never keep silence, and will give God no rest until these enormities are judged and stopped.

The pulpit has, to a large extent, been faithful, and we trust there are few ministers of Christ who have not, during the past two weeks, earnestly warned their people, or at least made more or less distinct allusion to the shameful crimes that have been unearthed and exposed to the light of day by one courageous man, who has risked his life in obtaining evidence, and his reputation in making it known. His name has been mentioned with contempt and reprehension; we will mention it with honour and esteem—Mr. W. T. Stead, Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette.

In sitting on the London Committee for the Exposure and Suppression of the Traffic in English Girls for the purposes of Continental Prostitution, we have learned with its chairman, the Chamberlain of London, to discern the guiding hand of God in the course and results of our inquiries; we are assured that the same overruling power has been at work in the form which these revelations have taken.

Had the judgment of a hundred people been asked as to the language in which the discovered villanies should be couched, ninety-nine would have protested against the great plainness of speech which the hundredth man, the explorer himself, actually adopted. But "the God of glory thundereth," and three times over in his Word He has declared that He would do things which should make both the ears of the hearers tingle. The more we think of it, the more we are convinced, that if veiled euphemisms had been used, if the railway bookstalls and many newsvendors had not ostracised the paper, the effect would have been comparatively small and feeble. And, after the worst has been said, we are sure that in the sight of God the very coarsest expressions which have been used are more than harmless in comparison with the cruel inhumanity which calls a harlot "a soiled dove," or a poor outraged child, "damaged goods."

A great deal depends not only upon what is said, but on the way of saying it; and the children of many of Mr. Stead's censors, as well as thousands more, may have personal cause to bless God that he told his story in a way that compelled attention. The Thames will remain an open sewer until some member of the Board of Works is suffocated in it, or until the scandal is denounced in a way coarse enough to arouse busy Londoners to their daily danger. It takes a very bad stench or loss of life through typhoid fever to make a man tear up and re-organise his drains.

The Church of Christ in England, throughout her history, has never been in a more critical and responsible position than she is now. In times past she has won immortal honour by being faithful unto death in protest against false doctrines; now she is called upon to sacrifice all conventional properness to the paramount necessity of arousing the nation's conscience to the enormous wickedness of sacrificing its children to Moloch. It requires as much moral courage, as much purity of heart, as much conscientious conviction, as much firmness of purpose, to stand firm amid burning and smoking fagots of execration from those who ought to stand shoulder to shoulder with you, as amid the fires of Smithfield. The real stake to which martyrs are bound is the cause for which they suffer, and the chains that bind them are not forged of iron, but of their own love of God and of his truth. There are martyrs now bound by their love of God and children, to the stake of Purity.

The women of England are being called, in the providence of God, out of the frivolous and empty life into which they have fallen, to tear off the bands of a degraded and degrading public opinion, to assert their womanliness, to refuse the insulting attentions of men licentious in character and demoralised in life, to do battle with that which is corrupt, and to defend their weak sisters or daughters against deceit and violence.

The Elijah of Northumberland-street is not alone; we have now, as Israel had in the days of Jezebel, our hundred prophets hidden by fifties in a cave; they are true at heart, but the time has arrived for them to come forth of their cave, and cry aloud and spare not.

And God has his seven thousand who have not bowed their knee to Baal, and whose mouths have not kissed him. Already is it manifest that God is on Elijah's side; his challenge—"The God that answereth by fire, let Him be God"—has been vindicated, and his people are responding through the religious press, some, indeed, with bated breath, but some with shouting: "The Lord, He is the God! The Lord, He is the God!"

The conspiracy of silence has been broken; it has lain like a deadly pall upon this generation, smothering it, and causing the disciples of Jesus Christ to give the lie to his last words on earth, "Ye are my witnesses." He was a King! To this end was He born, and to this end came He into the world, that He might bear witness unto the truth—the truth about God and heaven, the truth about the devil and his works. Would He have been content, or would his forerunner, or any of his apostles have been content, to denounce other sins, and to be silent concerning the deepest and darkest and deadliest of all? The Church of this generation must be ungagged, from the Methodist minister who gains three signatures out of his congrega- to a petition "on a certain subject" (see Methodist Times, July 16), to the lady who writes us the expostulatory letter given on a subsequent page.

Immediate legislation of an advanced and drastic character must be demanded, and insisted on until obtained; but of far more vital consequence is the waking up of every adult member of every family, to guard the purity of themselves and others, and especially to watch over the young children, who likewise should be warned against wandering into lonely places, and against making acquaintance with strangers.

SOUND THE ALARM.

NOW know we verily that there doth dwell
Even in our midst a tyranny of lust,
Unswayed by aught but golden passion's gust,
Which darkly drowns in its insatiate hell
Childhood, most helpless and most miserable.

Oh, English men and women, wake! arise!
In might and majesty of righteousness;
At length the stifled cries of helplessness
Are in your ears; and, reft of all disguise,
The appalling truth is naked to your eyes.

Arise to mercy and judgment! all too long
The obscene golden idol hath had power
The captive poor and needy to devour;
Arise and show in truth that right is strong
To quell the terror and the strength of wrong.

Let nothing stay or daunt your righteous quest,
Let the keen truth the black transgressors brand;
Albeit among the proudest of the land;
And rest not till the city, purged from pest,
Shall know the joy wherewith the pure are blessed.

T. Sharp.

COULD violated children tell a tale
Of perpetrated crime and base desires,
Of untold misery, the endless fires
Of hell could not produce so deep a wail.

Think of it, Britons! do not let it sleep!
A nation's heart is beating quick and strong,
And yearning to set right a hideous wrong,
That cries for vengeance from the deepest deep.

The little ones who wander from the fold
Are calling for protection, and their cry
Is sounding through the land to tell us why
Their lives are sacrificed, their virtue sold.

Let not false modesty deter our hand,
Nor fear of censure stifle any word
Of indignation that should now be heard
With burning shame throughout this mighty land.

Ye English mothers, let the fondest care
Encircle all your children—guard them well!
The trap is laid—no warning sound will tell
The moment when the demon will ensnare.

Then sound the alarm! stir up the nation's shame!
Expose the wealthy patrons of a trade
That casts a hateful and a loathsome shade
Upon the greatness of Old England's name!

THE EDUCATION IN BOARD SCHOOLS.

ON Thursday week a motion of the greatest importance was discussed in the London School Board. It was neither more nor less than an affirmation of the principle of free education, and was only lost on a division by one vote. Free education, it will be remembered, was one of the planks in the platform of the Birmingham Education League, whose motto was, "Education—Compulsory, Unsectarian, Free." The Education Act of 1870 was a compromise between the demands of the League and those of the National Education Union. It did not enact compulsory education, but it created School Boards, and empowered them to adopt the principle if they thought fit. It also permitted Boards to establish free schools in exceptional circumstances. While this power has been exerted in extremely few cases, compulsory attendance at school has been almost universally adopted by the various Boards, their action in this respect being a reflex of that of the School Board for London.

It seems to us clear that, given compulsory education, free education follows as a logical consequence, like free registration and free vaccination. We are aware that we shall be met by the objection that the same line of argument would lead to free feeding and free clothing; but we recognise a marked distinction between the claim of a child to be educated, and the claim of a child to be fed and clothed. On all hands it is admitted that it is for the good of the State as such that its people should be educated; but the animal requirements of a child constitute a claim against those who brought him into the world, and it is their bounden duty to supply his animal needs—food, and clothing, and shelter. We admit that in certain cases the State has the power to deprive parents of the custody and bringing-up of their children, but these exceptions only prove the truth of the universally recognised principle that it is the duty of parents to supply the animal wants of their children. Of course, parents of well-regulated minds will go far beyond this elementary duty, and will provide for the education and well-being of their children; but we insist that the provision of elementary education for every child in the land is the duty of the State. We recognise, therefore, in the action of the London School Board the admission of a right principle, and there can be little doubt that this action will be copied by the principal Boards in the country. As we have before observed, free education is the logical outcome of compulsory education. It would be useless to argue that Boards need not insist on compulsion; they do insist on it, and compulsion, therefore, is an established fact.

The result of the discussion is calculated to encourage the advocates of free elementary education, and renders it probable that before long the London School Board will declare in favour of the principle. It is one thing, however, for the Board to adopt such a course, it is another thing to get the Education Department to consent to the abrogation of school fees. There are grave difficulties ahead; still we have no doubt of the ultimate issue—free elementary education will become the law of the land. It will be an immense relief to hundreds of thousands of struggling poor, to whom the few pence paid in school fees often makes all the difference between a meal and no meal; it will remove the badge of pauperism from the children whose fees, on account of the circumstances of their parents, are remitted by the Board; it will operate to put an end to much of the friction and strife between parents and the School Board, and compulsion will thus be rendered a much less unpleasant task than it is at present.

We do not shut our eyes, however, to the prospect of much opposition on the part of the ratepayers. Rates are heavy enough already; and the struggling tradesmen, and the men with small salaries, have our sympathy. But many of these already send their children to the Board Schools, and they would get back in fees saved much of the extra amount of rates. The middle classes have a real grievance in being obliged to contribute towards giving to the children of others an education as good as, and in some cases even better than, that which they provide at great expense for their own children. It is a grievance for which we trust a remedy may be found.

We are distinctly of opinion that the elementary education given in Board Schools need not be so costly as it is. Free education should be such as would prepare the children for the various trades and industries: such subjects as French, mathematics, physiology, botany, music, not being essentials, should be paid for. To meet the cases of exceptionally clever children, the provision of scholarships might be extended, and so give to such children a chance of carving out a career for themselves. At all events, we recognise in the recent discussion in the London School Board the germ of what promises to become at no very distant date a new and important departure in elementary education.

THE DECLINE OF ROMANISM.

IT is but rarely that a skilled advocate of the claims of the Church of Rome can be brought to admit either a weakness or a failure, and it is, therefore, all the more surprising that one of her ablest defenders should volunteer acknowledgments of both. So much has of late years been asserted with regard to the rapid spread and increase of Romanism in Great Britain, one is scarcely prepared to find that, after all, alarm is, to a great extent, groundless; yet this admission, and a score of others not less remarkable and damaging, are made in a singular paper upon "The Conversion of England," from the pen of a distinguished writer, which appears in a recent number of a leading Roman Catholic review. The author, in considering the means by which the country might be brought back to "the fold of unity," gives much prominence to lay activity, organisation, work amongst the poor, and "the spirit of Christian poverty, a protest by plain living against the frivolity of the world."

There are but few who would object to see even the Church of Rome working more earnestly upon these lines. The writer, however, goes on to assert that in all these matters his Church is defective, lay activity being anything but pronounced, lay organisation not worthy the name, that "our work among the poor is trifling compared with what is within our power," that the spirit of poverty is scarcely ever mentioned out of the pulpit, and that, instead of making gigantic strides, it is more than questionable if Romanism is not sliding back, there being no room for either exultation or self-congratulation on the fulfilment of the anticipations indulged in and entertained in the excitement of the Tractarian movement.

The essayist at the same time congratulates himself upon the fact that during the last forty years the estimation in which his Church is held among Protestants has risen in a marked degree; but he attributes this in a very great measure to architecture rather than to spiritual power. The building of great churches, such as the Brompton Oratory, and others to which he refers, has given "a new respectability to the Catholic body" in the eyes of outsiders; nothing succeeds like success; and "to all outward appearance" great strides have been made. This outward appearance, however, will not bear close examination; for, although the number of chapels and stations in England and Wales has increased from 457 to 1259, and the priests from 542 to 2159, the writer discounts this by admitting that the figures are "most misleading as proofs of progress," and by a statement that the number of small missions has greatly increased, and a chapel or a priest now represents a very much smaller average congregation than at an earlier date. Many priests, too, are unattached, and a considerable number are engaged in schools and colleges, and religious establishments.

In 1841 there were in Great Britain, Mr. Lucas states, 800,000 Roman Catholics. According to the general growth of the population during the last forty-two years, i.e., 62 per cent. on the census of 1841, there should be an increase of nearly half a million in the numbers of the Roman Catholic body. Including the Irish in England, the entire number of Roman Catholics in Great Britain should "at the very least" stand at 2,360,000. Instead of this, the evidence afforded by school attendance, one of the best and safest tests, points to a total Roman Catholic population of only 1,362,760, or, as the writer tersely puts it, the figures show "a falling away of at least three quarters of a million of souls." No wonder that Mr. Lucas adds, "the results of an inspection are lamentable in the extreme," and that he seems to be afraid to consider what the falling off would have amounted to if there had not been the Irish immigration.

Discussing the possible remedies for "this terrible state of affairs," the writer points out that active charity is very rare in the Roman Catholic communion, that the work of such societies as that of St. Vincent of Paul is a mere trifle when compared with the needs of the poor; and that as the "crumbling" Church of England has "sucked in to itself, or at any rate, out of their faith, a vast number of the Catholics," thousands of Catholics having "disappeared into it," the exertions which would be quite sufficient in a Catholic country to prevent "leakage" are quite insufficient in England. Roman Catholics, as a rule, Mr. Lucas says, are deficient in determination to help to save the poor from eternal perdition; their distaste from coming in contact with squalor outweighs their charity and love of Christ.

These are serious indictments, and it is noteworthy that Mr. Lucas has no more powerful remedy to propose than an increase in the subscriptions from the Roman Catholic poor, "who will subscribe if properly approached," but however disheartening the outlook may be from the Roman Catholic point of view, surely those simple-minded Protestants who have been wasting time in bemoaning the spread of Romanism in England, may take heart again, seeing that their fears have been baseless. The Kingdom which cometh not with observation, is after all, surely, if slowly, extending its boundaries day by day. James Bowker.

THE PROPHETS OF PEACE.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART, Weston-super-Mare.

"Thus saith the Lord God; Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing!"—Ezek. xiii. 3.

THE lot of the last prophets of the Jewish monarchy had fallen on evil days. There had been times when the sun of God's favour shone brightly upon his people, when the land rested in peace, and the sacrifices demanded from those who carried his message to Israel were comparatively few. But those times had passed away. Not only had Jeremiah and Ezekiel to share the calamities which fell upon the people, they had also a duty to discharge, among the hardest man can be asked to fulfil. In the midst of judgments they spoke of God's burning indignation, and summoned the people to confess and abandon their sins. But they spoke to men who rejected the message as a wanton aggravation of their misery. This was bitter enough; but there was something harder still to bear. They were accused, by men who professed to be truer prophets than they, of misrepresenting the character and mind of Jehovah. These fearlessly bade the people pay no heed to views which were the offspring of gloomy fanaticism. There might be sin in Israel, but the Lord was merciful, and would never forsake his own.

The story has more than an antiquarian interest for us. It is the story of what is happening among ourselves. God's message is not a whit more pleasant now than it was then. It is, indeed, a message of love, and they who bear it may well be called "messengers of peace." But it does not speak peace to men where they are and as they are. It condemns unsparingly. It calls for change—change of heart as well as change of life. And the love it reveals is shown not only in the warning to flee from the midst of the most terrible peril, but also in opening up a way of immediate escape and leading into perfect and enduring safety. Such is the message, and it finds as little acceptance now as God's word found with Israel then. It is shrouded in unwelcome gloom. There is a tone of reproach and condemnation in it which repels. And the opposition it awakens sometimes takes a bolder form than that of mere rejection. There are those who speak in God's name against it. They have received, they say, broader and truer Gospel. There are no shadows such as we speak of: all is bright, unsullied sunshine. God is too loving for severity, and all this talk about God's anger against sin, and about the hell He has prepared for it, must be put away as the dream of a horrible past! The supposed necessity for the cross of Christ, and a new birth through faith in Him who is the propitiation for our sins, is a libel upon God, and is based upon too literal an interpretation of words which were never meant in the sense in which they have been taken! Men are God's children now, and they have only to open their eyes to this, and all is well. And so where the heralds of mercy call for fear and flight, these preach confidence and rest.

We might try to characterise the temerity of the men of the Broad school, and the havoc which they have wrought and are working still; but we gladly turn from our own dark thought to God's. This thirteenth chapter of Ezekiel is God's message to them, and it speaks of three things, the first of which only we touch upon now: It shows the source and the value of their testimony. They "prophesy out of their own hearts," and "follow their own spirit." It is strange that, though the confession is couched in high-sounding language, the truth of the accusation is fully admitted. I open one well-known work, for example, and am immediately met by these phrases: "the inward sentiment;" "the inward revelation of the heart;" "the instincts of the soul." What do these and the like expressions mean, if not that they can claim no higher authority than their own thought? Now, what place can our own untutored judgment claim in pronouncing upon these, the mightiest problems of the universe? Say that we have a house to build, or that some slight matter in connection with it, when built, requires to be attended to, we do not take the opinion of the first man we meet, nor do we trust to our own. We turn to the men whose special vocation it is to deal with such things, and from among these we select someone who we have reason to believe is best fitted for the work; for we know that little reliance can be placed upon "the inward sentiment" till it has been taught and chastened by experience. If we should not follow our own spirit in regard to the most trivial affair of business, what shall we say of the folly of those who speak so confidently regarding what is needed to bring back society to justice, purity, meekness, truth, brotherhood; to reconcile man to man, and all to God!

At this problem earth's best and noblest have toiled in vain. Philosophers have thought, statesmen have laboured, and philanthropists have sacrificed, and despite of all the problem is still unsolved by man. And yet these set their Nay against God's Yea without faltering or fear! Need we marvel when we are told that their confidence is a delusion and a snare; that they have seen vanity and "have spoken a lying divination"? There is nothing answering to the future of which they dream. The coming days know nothing of the peace and safety which they proclaim. And not only will there be a harvest of disappointment. That is the least part of the evil. Men are kept in the very place where judgment is sure to fall. The mistake of the foolish prophets becomes a crime. Their hands are red with the blood-stains of the second death.

EARTHQUAKES IN CASHMERE.

IN a letter received from the medical missionary stationed at Srinagar, dated June 1, he writes after the first shocks:—"The city is deserted. Every one is in the open. The barracks have fallen, crushing several; we have had them dug out and attended to, and carried to the hospital. There will be heartrending distress. I know of a village where the only two survivors buried their twenty-three neighbours. At Lopor 500 are killed. The mountains are fissured, and the ground cracked. We shall have to do our best to stretch hospital accommodation, but our funds are nil. We are putting up tents and matting huts."

Again on the 8th he writes from Baramulla, which is almost entirely destroyed. Their extemporised hospital there was a barge moored on the river. The computed number of killed is 3000, and it is impossible to guess the number of injured, but the demand for surgical help must be immense, and the distress wide-spread and almost overwhelming. If any are willing to help, by sending money, it would be gladly forwarded to Kashmir by Dr. Lowe, of the Livingstone Memorial Medical Mission, Edinburgh.

THE RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.

A SHORT time ago I paid a visit to the Sailors' Welcome Home. It occupies a conspicuous corner in the notorious Ratcliff Highway. From an upper window the house flag, with an angel in the corner holding out an open Bible, is displayed. On entering, the bright coppers of steaming tea, coffee, and cocoa, look most inviting and comforting. Sailors are sitting about at little tables reading, writing, or supping. Passing down a narrow stair to the "Focsle," as the seamen call it, we found ourselves in a good-sized room, brightly lighted up and pretty well filled. A lady was speaking and afterwards several gave their experiences. Among them one said:—

"I shall never, no never, forget the goodness of the Lord to me, when He brought me to see what a vile helpless sinner I was, and how He saved my condemned soul, now about three years ago. I went from the meeting to my boarding house where I lived, and I cried tears of joy. When I told my old companions with whom I used to spend my life, my money, my all, in sin and degradation, they thought I was mad, and said, 'Religion has put him off his chump.' But, ah, how little they knew of the peace and joy within. Since then I found out that the Lord is not only a mighty Saviour, but also a mighty Keeper. It was He who kept me all the time from my old companions. He who gave me grace and sweet joy in the time of my affliction, when I broke my thigh in a heavy gale; He who enabled me to keep and save my hard-earned wages together. So you see what the Lord has done for me He is willing to do for you to-night."

While the meeting was going on, some left for their ships, while others flocked in to take their places. One young sailor made a most earnest appeal to his companions. The addresses were interspersed with appropriate hymns, led by Miss Child. This lady has for years devoted herself to work among sailors, and bringing all her influence to bear upon their lives, both in spiritual and temporal matters. Not only the sailors themselves but their families have to thank Miss Child for her care over them.

At ten o'clock Mr. Blaauw, Miss Child's helper, asked me if I would like to look in at one of the music-halls of the numerous public-houses close by. Feeling not a little timid as to the result, I accompanied Miss Child, Mr. Blaauw leading the way, to a gin-palace in the neighbourhood. Entering, we with some difficulty wended our way through a crowd of women and sailors, &c., who were drinking at the bar, to the door of the dancing saloon. Here we stood for some time, our hearts filled with pity and sorrow. Everything in this sad house was made as attractive as possible. The large hall was brilliantly lighted, and the walls decorated with landscape paper. At one end was a balcony with musicians; below that another drinking bar, around which men and women clustered like bees at a hive door. Other women walked up and down the room, many of them dressed in silk and satin, in the most gorgeous colours, decked with flowers around the neck and head. Very soon the music struck up, and waltzing began. We stood silently looking on for a few minutes, and then withdrew, feeling more than ever the necessity for counteracting work among those who are so apt to be drawn into the net that is spread for them. I remarked, "I suppose this is an extra occasion," but Miss Child answered, "Oh, no, this goes on all the year round every night."

Returning to the Welcome Home, we found the meeting still going on, and realised the importance of its continuing as late as the sad scenes we had just witnessed. During the after hours of the night, which I spent at the Welcome Home, I was frequently awaked by the screaming and shouting of men and women in the street below, making me realise the self-denial of living in such a locality for the sake of the Lord's work. We breakfasted with sailors who were living in the home, one of them presiding at the coffee urn. Before leaving the breakfast table, there was a short Bible-reading, a hymn, and prayer. May God bless the Welcome Home, and all under its roof.

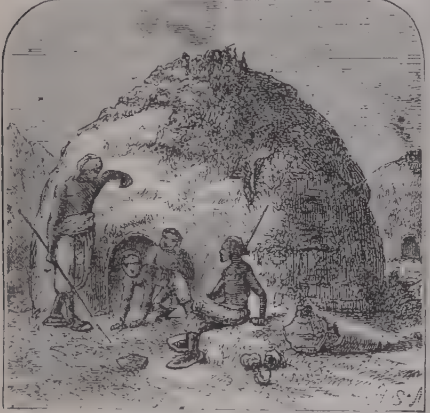
For the Young.

AMONG THE INDIANS.*

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

WHILE preaching in Chicago, in the State of Illinois, in 1864, I got very weary, and felt that I must have a little rest. So one day I started west for the banks of the broad Mississippi River. I thought no one would know me so far away, but in all these places I found friends, and many little children in whom I became interested, and could not help speaking to them: so I got no rest. At last, with a dog, a gun, and one guide, I started through a great forest, one hundred and sixty-three miles in extent. At night, we used to sleep on the branches of the trees spread out upon the ground for a bed. At times we heard the howling of the hungry wolves around us. Our track lay through Indian settlements, where there were no white men. The sight of the savage-looking Indians often troubled us, for we knew that they had killed many white men We were afraid they might take a fancy to kill us.

One day, as we were going down a long hill, away in the distance we saw five Indians coming towards us. As there were only two of us, we knew that, if they attacked us, they might easily kill us. We first thought of running away from them, but that would be of no use, for they were much more swift-footed than we, and could easily overtake us; we therefore looked well to our guns, and marched boldly on. As we drew near to them, they all disappeared in the bushes. Every moment we feared we might hear the click of their arms, aimed at us. When we arrived at the spot where they were hidden, we found that the Indians who had frightened us so much were five little Indian boys. They were as much afraid of us as we were of them. How foolish it would have been to have run away from them!



AN INDIAN HUT.

You, my dear little friends, feel that you have set out for heaven. As you walk the journey of life, you will sometimes be as much troubled as we were at the sight of those Indian boys. But if you keep your eye on Jesus, following his footsteps, the big Indians will become little Indians: you will see, as Bunyan's Pilgrim did, that the lions are chained. It is always safe to walk in the path of duty; but, if you run away from imaginary dangers, you will be ashamed of yourselves, and get laughed at besides.

I have just been reading in "The Pilgrim's Progress," Christian's journey from the City of Destruction to the Heavenly City. He had many trials; but, with God's help, he got the victory, after his burden of sin had fallen off, as he looked to Christ on the Cross. One day, as he drew near to the palace Beautiful, Bunyan says, he came to a very narrow passage, which was about a furlong off the porter's lodge, and, looking very narrowly before him as he went, he espied two lions in the way. Now, thought he, I see the dangers that Mistrust and Timorous were driven back by.

Then he was afraid, and thought also himself to go back after them, for he thought nothing but death was before him. But the porter at the lodge, whose name is Watchful, perceiving that Christian made a halt, as if he would go back, cried out to him, saying, "Is thy strength small? Fear not the lions, for they are chained, and are placed there for trial of faith where it is, and for the discovery of those who have none. Keep in the midst of the path, and no hurt shall come unto thee." "Then," says Bunyan, "I saw that he went trembling on for fear of the lions; but, taking good heed to the directions of the porter, he heard them roar, but they did him no harm. Then he clapped his hands and went on."

I think, though you may have been a Christian but a short time, that you understand these words. But, if you do not, the time will come, very likely, when you will think of them. You know the Bible tells us of a wicked being, called Satan. "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour; whom resist, steadfast in the faith."

This evil spirit tempts little children as well as grown-up people. Many who are not Christians hardly believe there is a devil until they begin to follow Jesus. In a nice letter from a girl to me, she says, "Satan often tries to make me unhappy, and doubting if I have really found Jesus; but, when I pray to God, Satan goes away, for he hates to see me on my knees."

My young reader, if you keep your eye on Jesus, and every day ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" you will, when Satan tempts you, be able to say, as this little girl did, "Jesus keeps me from yielding." Yes, Jesus can enable you to resist the devil. He will give the victory, if you place all your trust in Him; and you will hear Him saying to you, as did Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

BIBLE ACROSTICS.

Our young readers who have been interested in searching out answers to the Acrostics that have appeared in our pages, may be glad to know that the Religious Tract Society have published a packet of Bible Acrostics, prettily printed on attractive cards, with spaces for answers and references. The following remarks are furnished, by way of directions, on the cover of the packet:—

"As one way of using these acrostics, it is suggested that teachers should give them to their scholars on the Sunday afternoon, to be examined on the following Sunday. When they are brought back, the teacher should explain the lesson to be learnt from each one, with reference to the surrounding texts. For instance, Prayer, from Cornelius; Truthfulness, from the wheat, tares, &c. The initials of the names will give the answer, which is to be written on the front. The space below the answer is left for the scholar's name. To assist the younger scholars, the teacher may fill in the chapters of the answers, leaving the scholar to write in the particular verse."

We give one of the acrostics as a specimen. The initials give the name of the son of "a certain woman who was a Jewess, and believed, but his father was a Greek."

Y.M.C.A., MELBOURNE.—The secretaryship of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A. has been accepted by Mr. W. A. Southwell, who has for several years occupied a similar position in Cardiff. His departure, which will take place early in October, is regarded with deep regret by the Cardiff friends.

PREVENTION BETTER THAN CURE.

DEAR SIR,—At this time when all hearts are being deeply stirred for the welfare of our young women, may I offer a practical suggestion. The large number of young girls constantly travelling by rail and steamer is daily on the increase. Many of them are ignorant, and scarcely know their destination, and often fall into the hands of unprincipled persons, to the ruin of body and soul. With a view to help and protect them, great efforts are now being made to meet them at the stations, to guide them into respectable lodgings, and among Christian friends.

Feeling that the work of the Y.W.C.A. is essentially one of prevention, we have been led to make a vigorous effort to get the Directors of the different railway companies to allow us to place a large notice in the waiting-rooms of our railway stations all over the country, giving the addresses of our principal Homes and Institutes, with the address of the local secretary, who will arrange to have girls met at the different termini to which they may be going. The London, Brighton, and South Coast, the London and North Western, and the South Eastern have already kindly given their permission, and we trust their example may be followed by all the other lines. In this way they may give their help in meeting one of the great national questions which is weighing upon all hearts at this time.

The cost of the notice boards will of course be considerable, but if our country friends will share the burden by purchasing the cards (which are 6d. each) for their own station, providing every waiting-room with one, the labour and expense will be greatly lightened. Will those who are willing to help send the amount in stamps to Mrs. E. W. Moore, 15, Harewood-square, London, N.W., when the cards will be forwarded? In places where we have no Y.W.C.A. branch, we should be glad to correspond with Christian workers on this subject.—Believe me, yours faithfully,

L. Moore,
Hon. Sec. Central Council Y.W.C.A.

A friend on the Continent, in sending a contribution to Miss Macpherson's work in the East End, writes:—

While you are in many ways thus blessedly labouring at the stream of misery for its alleviation and see precious fruit therefrom by Divine grace, for which the Lord be praised evermore by all that is within us, I long to hear of more effectual labour at the sources whence these sins and miseries proceed. The times seem to require men of renown, graced and gifted of the Lord, to lead a new reformation, by his Spirit poured from above, affecting customs and laws as well as individuals in their principles. Coupled with heart searching and labour, this I feel should be a continual matter of earnest supplication.

"OUR BOYS."

IN connection with the Junior Section of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, an interesting work is being carried on amongst youths of thirteen to sixteen years of age. Many of these come up from the country to this vast city, and go into large warehouses where there are plenty of companions who will readily lead them astray. For such as these a branch of the Y.M.C.A. here has recently been formed. It is sought to reach them by means of a well-furnished reading-room, library, educational classes, gymnasium, games, popular lectures, entertainments, and last, but not least, Bible-classes, and devotional meetings.

This important work entails considerable expense, as the subscription is only one shilling per quarter. The branch is entirely on its own financial basis, and we rely upon the support of Christian friends. W. C. Minifie, Secretary, Youths' Branch.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

THE PETITION OF THE MORALIST.*

By Dr. CHARLES STANFORD.

"Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"—Mark x. 17.

I FIRST call your attention to the petitioner here. I have described him as a moralist, but in this description I use the word in a wide sense. Morality has to do with this life, and the moralist is one who tries in particular to cultivate what is right between man and man, what is right belonging to this life, what is right arising out of his position and connections as a creature of time and an inhabitant of earth. In a wide sense of the word, this man was a moralist; at least, it was as such that he uttered this request.

I next proceed to point out that it was a great spiritual crisis when this request of his was addressed to Jesus Christ. Perhaps now may be a great crisis with some of you. Life is full, if we but knew it—we often do not until the crisis is over—life is full of critical moments. History is crowded with records of critical moments, on which history depends, when what is thought or not thought, said or not said, done or not done, may for weal or for woe affect all the future.

It was a critical time: it could only come once in that man's history. That young man never saw his Saviour again in this life. Perhaps there may be a similar time in your soul's history which you may remember a million years hence. Not a night like the leaves of the trees in a forest, but a night the circumstances of which shall stand out for ever; a night in which you have to give your answer to the searching Spirit—an answer to Christ Himself, "Yes" or "No." If "Yes," in that word may be the germ of life; if "No," in that "No" may be the germ of death. May God help us, help me, help you. What if this should be the commonplace talk of man? Eternal life is not commonplace; the question of gaining eternal life is not commonplace.

Let us look at the petition. It has two elements: first, what he wanted to have, and then what he wanted to know. He came to Jesus, wanting to have something. There are persons in this circle to-night who would have been ready to say, "What can you want?—you have everything." But though he had in all externality everything, there was one thing he wanted to have, and that thing was eternal life. He wanted that first. He had the great blessing and privilege of youth. There are some old men anxious about eternal life, but without, perhaps, the right feeling. They say, "If I were young again, I should not be so agonised as I am now." Oh, to be young again! There is nothing like youth; and, true, there is no privilege like youth. Youth! the very word has a fascination in it, when life is at its best with hope and poetry. Youth can run; youth can rest—no easy thing to rest; youth can rejoice. Youth! full of freshness of life's morning. To think of youth with no stain on its glory! I do not wonder that persons who have not found the great secret think that if they had youth they would want nothing else. How long would you like to have that youth?—five years, ten years, twenty years? You are not permitted to have the youth spoken of here for a longer period in this life.

That would not be enough for me; to have youth for a thousand years would not be enough. I like the idea of youth, but I want it in reality, and that is in Eternity. Speak about a million million years: what after that? Once a Hindoo who had left all his property to his priests, said to them, "What shall I be after I die?" "A bird." "What after that?" "A beast." "What after that?" They could not say. After that! That is the awfulness of life! A million years of youth! What after that? When you come to think, if you have youth, you want eternal youth; for while you are speaking about youth, it flies. Youth in the strongest sense, too, is life. What causes a web of wrinkles upon a face is something that is not youth. Well, eternal life is eternal youth. I want that; I want it to work with. It is so fresh and emotional that I am right in thus speaking about it.

But there is an awful shadow over it. This youth must soon be gone, and what then? And this thought pressed upon the young man's mind, and made him say, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" The thing he wanted to have was eternal life, although he had great possessions. Some persons think if they had wealth, they would want nothing. The very word "wealth" is connected with the word "well" and the word "weal." Our Saxon ancestors thought that one of the things reckoned well for a man to have would be wealth. This man had wealth, but somehow he was not satisfied. If wealth is enough, it depends upon whether it is the right kind of wealth. This man was wealthy, but he could not carry his wealth with him across that mysterious thing called death. Death comes and shakes the power of the rich; they carry nothing out of the world. I want something out of the world. I want durable riches; I want bills that will be honoured in heaven; I want gold that will have celestial currency; I want things that will not fade away—in one word, I want eternal life.

One thing this young man wanted—to have eternal life. He had station, good social influence. Many persons prefer that to wealth. Many a man would be content to be poor if he could have power. Such men are ready to part with health, and sometimes with their bodies, and even to sell their souls, that they might have power in the world. Men will have power in the world. Well, if they have it as this man had, what then? The day comes when the king must die. We want something after this life. So this man went to Jesus, whom he believed to know all about eternal life; he went to Him in the attitude of worship, and said, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

Look at the thing he wanted. He had already a good many things. This question, "What shall I do?" simply meant, "How can I make good my title?" It was simply a question of how he should get the title to eternal life. He said this, although he had got many things that seemed to help him. He had got a good creed about eternal life. It was the fashion among the Jews of that day to repudiate the old Hebrew creeds, and to accept the doctrines taught by the Greek philosophers. There had been, owing to commerce with classic thought, growing up a disposition to discard old Hebrew notions as narrow, to clothe Hebrew philosophy in a Greek dress. It was considered a clever thing to scout the idea of a life beyond the grave. As to the antiquated doctrine of eternal life, the companions of the young, the educated, would laugh at such a doctrine, or say to that man that he was following the faith of his grandmother.

There was something very good in a man who could stand the shafts of scorn. Are you ready to do so for the creed of your father? There is that young man who said to you yesterday, "Where are you going to-morrow?" and when you said, "To church;" he exclaimed, "Is it possible!" I can understand that in such a case it is not easy for a young man to stand his ground. This man was, at any rate, right as to the main matter—eternal life and its reality—but he felt somehow that this was not enough, and do you not feel the same? A sound creed is a right thing to begin with, but not the right thing to stop at. You may have a sound creed about sowing seed, but you may not sow it at the right time. I am not certain as to whether this man had a definite opinion as to whether this sound creed was not enough; at any rate, it seemed to cross his mind that it was not enough to make a title to eternal life.

This man wanted to know how to make good his title to eternal life. Jesus Christ tested him, and said, "Thou knowest the commandments," and then gave a summary of the commandments; and the young man said, "Master, all these things have I observed from my youth." If he had kept these commandments outwardly in reference to the body—had not commited adultery, nor murder, nor robbery, nor borne false witness, nor defrauded, and had honoured his father and his mother—it shows a strong probability that the young man had had a good religious education according to the standard of the time. When I see a young man has maintained his outward integrity and morality, I always feel that he has had not only a true education, but a wise education—that his father and mother had not only screened him from evil things, but had warned him about them, and trained him in what was right.

There is a story about a poor old woman who never told her grandchild that there was such a thing as a well, lest she should fall into one! If there has been in the case of parents rather a screening from harm than a teaching about harm, as soon as the restraints of home are lifted, the young easily fall. These are things that teachers cannot teach, but which must be left for parents.

I advance to Christ's reply. It is summed up, "One thing thou lackest." He answers unspoken thoughts that are burning in the young man's mind, as to certain things he had done which might, perhaps, make a title to eternal life. This young man comes and brings his case before the sovereign counsel and sovereign judgment of the King. He has a hope, and yet he has a fear; sometimes the one is high, sometimes the other. He hopes—I think you will detect this—that this good Teacher will say he has done enough. Perhaps he thinks he will have a compliment for his sensitiveness; but Jesus sees through the surfaces, and weighs in the balance the moralist or the ritualist, and this man He found short weight. He had many things, but says the Judge, "One thing thou lackest."

Does Christ say to any one of you, "One thing thou lackest"? At first sight it seems delightful for Him to say that we have all things but one. Does it not, however, depend upon what that one thing is? For a ship to have all things but one thing. What is that thing but a compass? Or a watch to have all things but one—the mainspring! Or for a house to want one thing, and that thing the foundation? Or a plant of fragrance and beauty having everything but one, and that the root. For a body to have everything but one thing, and that thing the soul: poor man, to have everything but one thing! An inquirer after eternal life to have everything but one thing, but that one thing the thing needful, that one thing the true title—that the one thing lacking! That was the one thing which this man lacked. A man can be young and wealthy and influential, and have a sound belief, and have a true morality, and yet be lost; he can have a beautiful and winsome address, and be lost; he can have a house in the country and many servants, and be lost; he can come running to Christ, and be lost.

There are two conceivable ways in which a title to eternal life may be gained. I am speaking about a conceivable way—perfect obedience to the law. Now it seems that the first thing missing in this young man was a want of true understanding of the perfection of the law. The right standard of goodness—that is the very first thing which Christ indicates. The word "good" occurs in the three Evangelists. This young man wanted to know what good thing he could do. He called Jesus "Good Master." Christ was not going to accept that term "good" as a compliment. He addresses this term to Him as he would have done to any Rabbi. In the absolute sense, Christ is speaking about goodness when He says, "Why callest thou Me good? there is none good but One, that is, God." He now speaks in his man-nature. He wishes to call the man's attention to the ideal goodness—God without flaw. But the man would not see it; he could only see surfaces, so Jesus Christ tells him to sell all he had and follow Him. It was not a command to you; it was a command to him for a special purpose—a command from Him who saw that the weak point in that man was an excessive love of wealth. He wanted to make him see it, too; but when the young man heard these words, he turned sadly away. If he had to give up one of two things, he would rather give up the future than the present. He gave up the eternal rather than the temporal; and would not the thought come to him: "I can get to heaven on the principle of perfection"?

There is the Gospel way, and that is trusting in Christ; but the man preferred his wealth rather than the Saviour—trusted in his riches rather than in Christ, so that he lacked trust. I put it to you whether you have got the trust. Your title is in Jesus Christ, and the one thing you have to do is to get it by faith. If you had to do anything, what could you do? Go to the forest, select many trees, and with them build an ark of salvation? Could you build a bridge that could span the abyss from the house of Dives to the house of Lazarus? No; if the plan of salvation were left to you, you must give it up. But there is no need for it; Jesus Christ has done it.

So I come to the old Sunday-school story—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." But I want to rescue Jesus Christ's Gospel from a misconception. How easy it is to travesty Gospel truths! Our true doctrine is, that we trust to the work of Jesus Christ for our title. But when we have an interest in Jesus Christ, what is the salvation that He gives? We have it described here—"life." Not merely safety, but life—eternal life, that follows the example of Jesus Christ's life; and this eternal life begins now, directly we believe. Heaven will be but the consummation of that which will begin in you now, if now for the first time you believe in the Lord Jesus.

AFRICAN MISSIONARY NOTES.

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR has succeeded in locating some of his large party of missionaries at Mayumba, two degrees south of the Equator. The rest are at present making Loanda their headquarters until they can be scattered over the Portuguese territory, to which they are the first Protestant missionaries.

Mr. Halligey, formerly Wesleyan missionary at Lagos, and now about to return thither, appeals for six men to labour on the Niger and in the Yoruba territory.

The hoisting of the British flag at St. Lucia Bay and the flight of many Zulus into Swaziland, present two coigns of vantage from which to offer Christianity to the Zulu nation.

It must not be forgotten that in the transfer of land to the English, which the Christian Chief Khoma of Shoshong is now making, he distinctly specifies that there must be no trade in strong drinks in his territory.

The annexation of Bechuanaland, while it brings into connection with Britain a territory nearly as large as Spain, opens the way to the basin of the Zambesi for British missionaries and traders without passing through the Transvaal.

The slave trade with all its attendant horrors is carried on close to the Sierra Leone territory, over roads in part made by the colonists, and to the detriment of at least one mission station, Mabang, on the River Ribbé, where school children have been stolen, a Sunday congregation broken up and British property destroyed by the marauders.

There are four Bechuana Christian preachers labouring in connection with the Wesleyans of the Transvaal beyond the Limpopo, and one beyond the Zambesi, without salary of any kind, being impelled by love of the Gospel, and a sense of duty. Christian negro traders from Bathurst are reading the Gospel in Mandingo to the people at their trading stations on the Gambia, as they pass up and down the river.

LANSDOWNE-PLACE SCHOOL, BOROUGH.—This is situated in Tabard-street, where, says the report, many of the adjacent streets contain houses in which people of all ages and of both sexes huddle together without regard to cleanliness or decency. The various meetings have been well attended, God has owned and blessed the work, friends and helpers have been raised up in time of need. In most departments more workers are wanted. The Band of Hope has been resuscitated, great numbers of garments have been made by the sewing-class girls, evangelists from the Metropolitan Tabernacle have regularly addressed the mothers' meetings, and the library well supplied with periodicals. Mr. J. Passmore, junior, 4, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., is the treasurer.

JOE MIDDLETON'S TRICYCLE MONEY.

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

"I'VE been wishing that Lucy would let me send her a proxy," said Joe, smiling. "It would be a good idea, only Lucy would have the trouble."

"Whom would you choose, dear, for your proxy?" asked the mother. She thought in an instant of Rex Carter and Wallie Clyde, who were intimate friends and schoolfellows. But they were already out of the city, one on the mountains and the other at the seaside.

"If Lucy and her father and mother would not think it too much trouble, I would like to send Mike O'Byrne, the washerwoman's boy, in my place. I would like to see what fresh air and milk, and the freedom of a farm for a month, would do for Mike. He's not a bad boy, nor a rough one, mamma, but of course he hasn't had a chance to learn the best manners there in Vantine's Alley."

"Mike has no clothes fit to go in," said Mrs. Middleton, doubtfully. "And his travelling expenses would amount to something. How would you provide for them?"

"I do not mean to buy my tricycle, mother," said Joe. "The money which is in the bank set aside for that would fit out three such fellows as Mike, and surely I may use it for one—some of it at least."

Mrs. Middleton thought a moment. Presently she said, "Joe, my son, tell me your real, innermost thought about this. Why do you want to send your proxy to the country?"

Joe was silent a few moments in his turn before he replied.

"Well, mother, since I have been lying here I've had a good many thoughts about God and his mercy in sparing my life. I might have been killed by that fall, or I might have broken my back and been a poor cripple for life; while as it is, Dr. Simmons tells me that with time and patience there will be a complete cure and I shall be as spry and active as ever. Now, I want, in some way or other, to make a thankoffering to God, and this seems to be one way of doing so. I'd like to spend all my tricycle fund in making other boys happier."

Mrs. Middleton considered the matter, and the result was that Lucy was written to, and immediately replied that she was willing to take a Fresh-Air boy, and, at Joe's particular request, he should be considered Joe's proxy; sit in Joe's chair at the table, be introduced to the young people who would have been Joe's companions, and occupy Joe's beautiful big room, with its outlook towards the hills and the sunset.

Mrs. Middleton's private and confidential suggestion, that she would pay Mike's board for the month, saying nothing to Joe about that part of it, Lucy declined to consider.

"Aunt Milly," she wrote, "I'm surprised at you to offer such a thing. Joe knew better. No, Mike shall be our guest, and we'll treat him just as if he were the dear, merry cousin we've been counting on having here."

In due time Mike O'Byrne, sandy-haired, freckled, awkward, and desperately shy, blushing and stammering whenever he was spoken to, made his appearance at Sunnyside.

He was not in the least like the ordinary Fresh-Air child, who is supposed to run wild over the fields, showing boundless delight at the first sight of green grass and trees, and not knowing how to contain himself for the pleasure of making acquaintance with cows and pigs, ducks and chickens. He was quiet, helpful, and evidently happy, though he had little to say. He absorbed pleasure from the farm life, so wholesome and hearty, and health, too, at every pore. As the days passed, Lucy, always bent on doing good, read to him from some interesting book, or taught him a little while every morning, so that he began to read very well in the Psalms and Proverbs.

The boy, who was used to the close, stuffy atmosphere of a narrow city alley, who slept in a little bedroom under a tin roof, and had such food as Mrs. O'Byrne, with her two or three days' steady places, could procure after saving up her rent (for let what would come, the shelter must be made sure of and the monthly stipend kept ready for the landlord), this boy expanded visibly in the room and space, out-doors and in, which the country life afforded him.

Better still, as every day, morning and evening, he knelt with the family at worship and heard Lucy's father talk with God as a man talks with his friend, he gained an idea of religion, of our connection with the invisible world, and of the ever-present love and care of our Heavenly Father which nothing else could have given him.

Lucy was pleased to observe how readily he learned to be courteous and to understand little things in manners. After the second day he found out that people did not eat with their knives and noticed what napkins were used for.

He soon learned not to go blundering out of the room in front of a lady, but to let her pass out first, and to take off his hat if he met one of his girl acquaintances on the road or in the lane.

"Joe need not be ashamed of his proxy," said Lucy to her mother. "He's turning out finely. Proxy or not, I believe it would be a Christian thing to take a Fresh-Air child another summer, and try to lift him or her into the sunlight."

"I cannot find it in my heart to send this one home," said the lady. "I think we might ask his mother to come for a few weeks and help along with the work, if she felt that doing so would make her more independent. We might have them both here to the edge of the cold weather."

So they did. When the snow was flying through the air Joe's proxy and his mother were still housed at Sunnyside Farm. And when they returned to the city in the winter there followed them barrels of apples, potatoes, and pork, and so cheered and heartened were they that Mrs. O'Byrne got through the season, rigorous as it proved, in great comfort, and Mike, finding a good place in a great publishing establishment, is on the highway to success as a business boy.

Joe's leg in time got well, and he has never for a moment regretted the use he made of his tricycle money.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

COMMEMORATION DAY AT ADDLESTONE.

THIS event came off on July 9, and was an interesting time for all who work among neglected destitute children. There was a thanksgiving service by the vicar of Addlestone, and an address by Canon Hussey. A distribution of prizes to girls who have kept their places in service one year and more, and to children who have earned distinction for knowledge and conduct, was presided over by Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, who represented Princess Mary, of Teck. The guests numbered several of the friends who have been builders of the cottages, and the supporters of the village since its foundation, including Lady Waterpark, Hon. Mrs. Okeover, Lady Whitaker Ellis, Lady Selwin-Ibbetson, Sir Arthur Lawrence, and many of the local gentry.

Mrs. Meredith, who received the guests, had much pleasure in the increased number of the party that assembled this year, as showing a larger number of helpers in a work which is extending, and becoming annually more important. During the proceedings a "waif" was received, whose state was illustrative of the use of such a refuge for miserable children. She had suffered terribly, and when put into a comfortable bed, and fed and clothed, she slept for thirty-six hours. When she awoke she could not walk, and was obliged to be treated like a baby for some time, though she had attained eleven years of age. Surely schools that provide for such, and not only repair the injury of their early years, but teach and lead them in the way of life everlasting, through the precious love of Jesus the Saviour, who blessed little ones, demand the support of the public.

PLACING OUT LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

MISS MACPHERSON'S FORTY-FIFTH PARTY.

We regret not to have space for the interesting notes of the voyage of this party of children from London to Montreal. The journal proceeds:

June 4.—We were all very glad to land at the Stratford station. We saw the Home first under very favourable circumstances, for the moonlight was grand, and we received a delightful welcome from many friends.

The children are enjoying the freedom. How they shouted the next morning! It seems as if they could not express their joy at the surroundings. Some of the boys are now fishing by the river; some are lazily enjoying themselves on the grass, the girls are gathering flowers on the lawn, there is not one sad-looking face in our party. Wee Johnny is so rosy, and marches about like a young lord. Edith is a general favourite, and the boys agree, "'tis a lot better than London." It is so nice to know that our dear little ones are to stay in this beautiful country, instead of being in dull, wicked London! The only sad part is that our happy party must soon break up.

We had a nice prayer-meeting with all the elder children last evening. After thinking over the training-time and the many longings after Canada, we made it a picture of the training-time on earth for the beautiful home above. It was really a solemn time; the dear boys felt it, too, for it was one of the last times we should all gather, one family on earth, round his footstool. We have cause to believe we shall meet a good many of these dear children on the other shore!

June 12.—It is very pleasant to be now realising all that one has heard and read of the work on this side. On Monday morning the parting commenced. Quite early, while we were at prayers with our little ones, two well-to-do farmers and the wife of one of them drove up, and asked for a little girl with dark eyes. They came to the schoolroom and stood with eyes filled with tears, listening to the prayer that our Father would just send those who would care for his own.

In a little while the pretty dark eyes of L. A. attracted them, and the lady stooped down and kissed her, asking if L. would like to be loved by her. The little one looked up shyly, and said "Yes." The two farmers were greatly touched; one had come to help the other, and as they each took a little hand and led her out of the schoolroom, neither of them spoke. We soon got the little one ready, and we are quite sure she will have a wealth of love and tenderness lavished upon her; best of all, they are true Christians.

Soon after T. had to depart; he had been chosen the second day after his arrival, but was not allowed to leave us till Monday. The morning seemed long for him, and he began to fear his master was going to give him up. When, however, the farmer arrived, good-byes were soon said; proudly he marched with his bag to the buggy, and took his seat by the "boss," who is a fine, working Christian, and T. will have spiritual help. We are so glad, for the lad gave evidence of a change of heart before he left the ship.

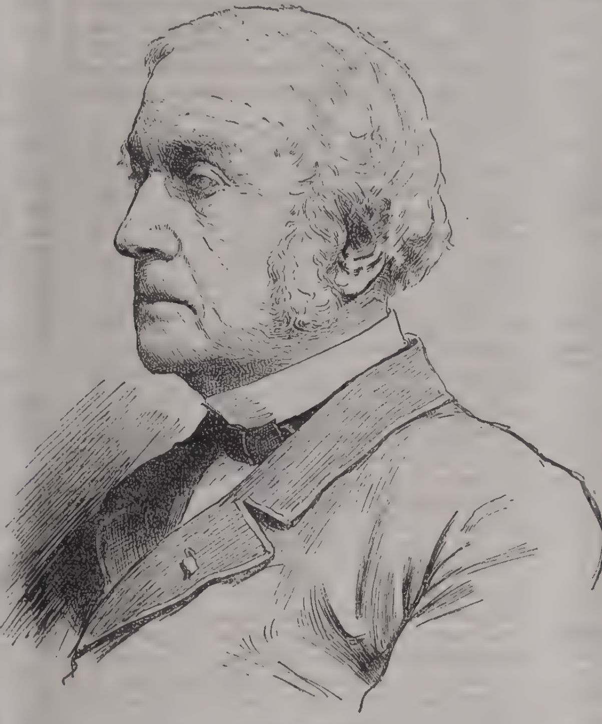
I shall never forget all I see from day to day. These dear kind people just seem to take the boys and girls at once for their own, and when one compares the past lives with the bright future, it gives one such cheer and encouragement and a longing to begin again at the Training Home, and prepare other poor little ones for this beautiful country.

We have had such happy times with them. On Sunday afternoon they sat under the trees on the lawn, and sang their hymns, and listened to a Bible story. Far above was the blue sky; the river so still, reflecting everything around, the lilac-trees in perfection, and happy faces around. How could we help loving God, when so many evidences of his love were close by?

The partings are the only sorrowful part of our lives just now; but the children are so eager to go, each one hoping it will be his or her turn next. Then it is good to get a letter soon after: "I like my place, and think I shall be very happy."

June 26.—It seems like a dream that we ever brought our little band, for they are nearly all dispersed and appear to be very happy in their lovely Canadian homes. It has been pleasant to see some old faces. One day the German lad, Jacob, came in with his master. He is working well, and has won golden opinions, and is now to receive wages. He seems very anxious to see you, and said he would ask for a holiday and pay you a visit when you come out.

One little lad was sent back after being in his place a year; the excuse was he was too small. However, the second day after, the people wrote expressing sorrow at parting with the boy, for he had won their hearts, and they just longed for him to be with them again. D. G. was only too delighted, and went back most joyfully to his old place.



Mr. SAMUEL MORLEY, M.P.

A well-to-do farmer and his wife from —— came the other day for a little girl. She was not to have brown eyes, as their only little baby, who died long ago, had. We dressed four of our little ones in pretty pinafores; they looked so nice and bright.

The youngest, A. H., a very shy little girl, attracted their attention, but the wife's heart was too full to speak; she just choked with emotion. Mrs. Merry came in and understood everything at a glance. She caught up the child in her arms and began to talk to her and attract her attention, then, turning to the lady, chatted away, and soon all were bright and laughing. A. is to be the adopted daughter. These friends spent the rest of the day with us, but they could not part with their new treasure. It was touching to see them with her, coaxing and loving in turn. A. has a very happy home, and will thank God some day that He ever sent her to you.

In sending to us the foregoing notes, Miss Macpherson writes: Those who take an interest in our threefold home work, rescuing, training, and supervising in Canada, will join us in hearty thanksgiving that our financial year has closed (June 30), free from debt and a few shillings on the right side. We can say that, as a little band of workers, the strictest economy has been used in every department, united with liberality as means were sent, to the widow, the fatherless, and the deserving amongst the poor. There has been more blessing than in former years, more Bible-classes, a gathering in of some of the last handfuls before the Master comes. Those wishing for details of the "Bible Flower Mission," &c., can send to the Home of Industry, Spitalfields, for the report.

We humbly ask dear friends to remember us in prayer, as we go forth with our forty-sixth family, making over 4000 who have been trained for a start in life. We expect to sail by the Sardinian, July 30. The party will consist principally of young girls. The last two received were entrusted to us by a very poor widow who is always out charing, and has been in terror lest her girls should be ruined for want of the care she cannot give them owing to the strain of earning bread for them. Her affection for them endures the pain of parting with them that they may be saved from moral evil.

Yours in the service of children,

Annie Macpherson.

THE EVICTED MINERS AT DENABY.

Sir,—I thank you very sincerely for calling the attention of the readers of The Christian to the distress of the evicted miners at Denaby. No one, who is not on the spot and moving about among the poor families as I am, can have any idea of the extent of the suffering which exists. The lock-out has now continued for thirty weeks, and the suffering of the poor women and little children has been painful in the extreme.

Death has come to the relief of several. Between eleven and twelve o'clock on Sunday night last I was sent for, to visit a family in one of the small tents. A child, twelve months old, was suffering from bronchitis. There was no fire: the only fire they have had for weeks past has been a little coke, in an old tin pail, with a few holes knocked through the bottom and sides, which they had to keep out of the tent. The child has since died. I gave bread on Tuesday to 280 families, containing 1635 persons; and on Thursday to 291 families, containing 1727 persons; and to about an equal number to-day. Help is still greatly needed.

T. J. Leslie, Congregational Minister.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. GRAHAM.

Many of our readers will hear with sorrow of the death of Mr. W. Graham, late M.P. for Glasgow, who must be well remembered by those who attended Mr. Moody's meetings in 1875. He passed away on Thursday morning last, at his London residence. He had been ailing for many months, and during the last ten or twelve weeks the doctors gave no hope of his recovery. He was sixty-eight years of age. His remains have been interred in Glasgow.

REV. DR. IRENÆUS PRIME.

We regret to learn from the telegraphic intelligence in the daily papers that this prominent Presbyterian clergyman, a noted author and traveller, and the editor of the New York Observer, died no Saturday from paralysis.

Notes and Comments.

THE Congregationalists have held their Ministerial College anniversaries, and leading ministers of the body have addressed the students. There has been a marked consensus of opinion on very vital questions. Especially have these points been insisted upon: A minister must not pose as a professional; he must be a truly converted man; he must recognise evangelical truth in its saving power; after piety, unselfishness, which would go into all his actions and make him in his speech unconscious of his little self, must be a primary qualification; he must have sympathy with the thoughts and experiences of men; in presiding over churches, he must make the principle of a regenerated membership of the first importance.

All Christian men must have some thought about institutions which train men for the ministry of religion. Pastors spiritually strong and capable will be welcomed anywhere: self-seeking and unspiritual men will be less and less endured. There has of late years been an impression that among Nonconformists a forcing process as to literary degrees has placed culture in a false, because the foremost, place. Very timely, therefore, was the general sentiment of the above addresses—that the ministers who can move the heart and life of this generation are the men of sincerity, earnestness, and unmistakable spiritual goodness.

The report on the examination of Board School children and pupil teachers in Scripture knowledge has been presented to the London School Board. It shows that 205,360 scholars (not 250,750 as given in The Times) presented themselves at the preliminary examination on February 13, and 9433 scholars and 1,032 pupil teachers at the competitive examination on March 6. The examinations were for prizes offered by Mr. Peek in conjunction with the Religious Tract Society.

George Dawson once said of Cobbett's "History of the Reformation" that it was an admirably written book, but it had the one defect—that it was not true. The publication of a volume upon the same subject by a well-known Roman Catholic priest has drawn from a reviewer of the same communion a remarkable and somewhat similar statement. Father Stang, says the critic, ignores the fact that the Roman Catholic Church at the eve of the Reformation was corrupt: pride was dominant with the clergy, their faith weak, "and not all irreproachable their morals." The too zealous author is instructed that "it is better to tell the honest truth that, though the Church is ever spotless and immaculate, her faithless children are sometimes very corrupt, and a large proportion of them were so on the eve of the Reformation."

In days when men need truth that shall meet their soul-cries, it is not pleasant to read in The Guardian the request of a vicar in Wales for a suitable written prayer at the dedication of a new porch and belfry; or in The Daily News of the encouragement which a London curate gives to the Secularists in Leicester to outrage the people of the place by establishing Sunday cricket.

"This road leads Romewards" may be said of much now seen and heard among us. And while there are those who will be led, and who will believe in a priestly pretension which promises to ensure their salvation, there never was a more fatuous ignorance than that which trusts to lead the hard thinking artisans of England to throw themselves into the arms of the Papal Church.

We commented favourably a fortnight ago on the first address of the Bishop of Southwell to the Diocesan Synod. The Spectator has since said, "If all the Bishops could use a tone as firm, wise, and large-minded, we should have no fear of the near approach of Disestablishment."

A recent Roman Catholic writer has expressed a sincere hope that, with her wider freedom, Ireland may not depart from the conviction that in true religion is found the cycle of all duty. He has expressed fears, not by any means groundless, that her liberty may come on terms too dear. Whatever view may be taken of the legislation of the last few years with regard to Ireland, there can be no doubt that, under the agitation by which that legislation was forced on, the religious sentiment has degenerated deeply. Respect for sacred things has given way, perhaps, not to scepticism, which implies some exercise, however unhealthy, of the intellectual powers, but to a contemptuous disregard.

Although in Ireland, as in most other Roman Catholic countries, the Sabbath was looked upon by the masses of the people as a holiday rather than a holy day, the portion of it after mass being devoted to amusements, more or less objectionable, the priests, as a rule, held themselves aloof from what to the Protestant mind appeared to be the profanation of the Lord's Day. All that has been changed, however. The priests, having lost much of their power over their once obedient flocks, are now forced into positions which are not becoming to them, and which must affect very injuriously the religion of which they profess to be the teachers. A Sunday or two ago numbers of local meetings of the Irish National League, a political association, which has taken the place of the old Land League, were presided over by parish priests, boycotting resolutions and references to Earl Spencer as "Foxy Jack" being the order of the day. The stream is becoming stronger and more turbulent, and the priests who have cast themselves upon it are as powerless to control it as drifting straws would be. It only remains to be seen where it will strand them.

In the Leven shipyard, some time ago, a ship was put down on speculation, merely to keep the men together. The riveters and caulkers, sensible of their employers' kindness, have recently held a meeting, and resolved to ask the firm to reduce their wages ten per cent., and to intimate that they were willing to do a fortnight's work on the steamer without any wages at all. It is very pleasant to find the kindly feeling which existed between Boaz and his men put into actual practice in our own day.

It looks as though the Disestablishment of the State Church were to be an agitating and dividing question. The Archbishop of Canterbury spoke of it before his Diocesan Conference as likely to turn the Episcopal Church into a political organisation. Subsequently he has modified his language, but since the utterance discourses on the subject that have looked political have pained many in even evangelical churches. In a letter to The Spectator, Bishop Bromley expresses the opinion that the way to stave off the agitation is to enlarge the power of the laity, to control the law of patronage, to give influence to parishes through a "council of advice," and to return, as far as can be, to "primitive modes of Church government."

A strong party of Nonconformists maintain that Ecclesiasticism is gaining strength and trying to lead the English Church backwards to the Divine-right notions and intolerant days of Laud; that laws for the sake of suppressing a Romanising sacerdotalism have utterly broken down; that religion is being hindered and social life embittered; and that the only remedy to save the Protestantism of the land and of the Episcopal Church is disestablishment.

But Nonconformists seem likely to be divided on the matter. The Revs. W. M. Statham and G. S. Reaney, Congregational ministers, maintain that Dissenters should go in for Church reform; that, if this reform is not speedily brought about, disestablishment would hand over the parish churches to the sacerdotalists, and that in fifty years' time they would be under the control and supreme sway of the Pontiff himself.

Truth says that "Convocation has been again discussing the advisability of forming a House of Laymen, but appear to be at their wits' end to know how to form a House of Laymen that shall be a sham and not a reality. They wish to appear to confer upon the laity some actual power, but in reality are anxious to confer none at all, and the manipulation of the matter is not easy. Only a few weeks ago a certain Canon said that a House of Laymen could not expect the guidance of the Holy Spirit in its deliberations!"

"The most knotty point in connection with this subject is as to whether the House of Laymen is to discuss any matters which touch faith and doctrine. In this sphere the clergy profess to have exclusive and supreme authority. Sir J. Phillips reminded his brethren that in Apostolic times laymen had a good deal to do with faith and doctrine. But such an appeal to primitive Christianity as this is regarded as rank heresy in Convocation. Canon Liddon is shocked at the idea of laymen discussing questions of doctrine. He says:—

> 'If a layman may vote on a doctrinal question in a Church Synod it is not easy to understand what authority to minister the Word of God is given by ordination which the candidate for Holy Orders does not already, as a Christian layman, possess.'

"Exactly. It is not easy to understand what authority is given. I have puzzled my brains over it many a time, and the conclusion I have reached is that a man has as much authority to preach before ordination as after."

At the Home of Industry the workers' meeting last week was one of those solemn seasons when the dear gathered children are commended to the Father of the fatherless. Each little rescue has its own touching history, known to Jesus, who has given to his followers the high honour of going after and personally caring for them. Mr. W. R. Lane gave a practical address to the workers, and several brethren led in prayer. As will be seen from Miss Macpherson's note on another page she and her next party sail on July 30.

We have received a large number of applications for letters for the Sandgate Convalescent Home of the London Samaritan Society. After disposing of the few letters we had, more than twenty applications remain which we are unable to satisfy. In view of the widely felt need for the benefits of such an institution we should be glad if our readers would, by subscriptions of a guinea, enable us to furnish letters to as many as possible of the friends who have applied. A guinea donation enables a patient to stay at the Home for three weeks on the nominal payment of 5s. a week.

A correspondent utters a warning against a book given to her young servant and entitled "Spiritual Guidance" with introduction by Rev. T. T. Carter, Rector of Cleever. "It teaches that Jesus enters into his servants by the Holy Eucharist," makes confession a necessity, and inculcates the need of a Director, showing how to select him and how to regulate intercourse with him; says the penitent should trust to his Director's opinion rather than his own, and be generally reserved except with his Director. For men to teach these Romish doctrines while receiving Protestant pay, is simply obtaining money under false pretences.

I am continually begging for other good works, but seldom for those in which I am personally interested. Having, however, been made President of the Y.M.C A. at Finsbury-park, which is doing a splendid work among young men and others, I am bold to ask my friends to help us according to their ability in paying off the £1,000 incurred in purchase of lease, and conversion and furnishing of premises. The young men throng to this convenient suburb, and there is not a more active committee in London seeking their salvation. R. C. MORGAN.

We quote the following from a Spiritualistic paper:—

(1) "No doubt necromancy, or holding intercourse with the spirits of the dead, as Saul did with Samuel, through the mediumship of the Witch of Endor, was punished, with nearly a hundred other offences, with death by stoning, but this is a proof that such intercourse with the dead was a fact then as now."

But, to those who acknowledge the claims of God to our obedience, its prohibition and punishment are more than sufficient reasons for abstaining from it.

(2) "In 1842 the Beechers, in New York, declared that spiritualism was real—but that it was of the devil—as the religious papers in London are doing now. Meantime a sister of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is holding Spiritual Conferences in her Beacon-street drawing-room, attended by the élite of Boston."

The fact of the Boston Conferences may be held rather to corroborate than to disprove the contention of the religious papers.

(3) "The 'Christian Scientists,' or 'mind-curers,' of Boston, think they are curing General Grant. Eighteen persons are at work for him. They do not pray—not that they know of. They only unite in thinking of him, so that the influence of their united mental power is bringing him into the 'understanding of God'—whatever that may be. But how this differs from mesmerism, which, it is claimed, can act by united effort and at any distance, it would be rather difficult to explain."

We quite agree with the spiritualist organ that, if the mind-cure has any reality, it has affinity with mesmerism rather than with God.

(4) "The principle of faith-healing, as explained by the Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, is simplicity itself. All disease is of the devil, and came in with the Fall. Take away sin, and all disease goes with it. Health and holiness are one, as the two words have the same derivation. Conversion is sanitation. Christ continues to heal all manner of diseases—and so on; so that an invalid Christian is a contradiction in terms. Every D.D. is an M.D., and vice versâ; and Mrs. General Booth's treatise on 'Water Cure,' reprinted in the July Herald of Health, is naturally of no use to any but unconverted sinners, while every ache is a system of diabolic possession, and no real Christian can have the rheumatism."

This is a rather roughly-stated reductio ad absurdum, but it is not far from the truth.

Our contemporary is anxious to obtain facts as to spiritualistic communications, and says that "Writers in the lower stratum of religious journals insist that the phenomena, which they admit by forming a theory, are the work of the devil." We are well content to take our place among the lower stratum, from a spiritualist's standpoint. We admit that there are phenomena which are not imposture, though there is a great deal of this. But we do not "need the facts to make good our hypothesis," for the reality of familiar spirits and of demoniac possession is sufficiently demonstrated in the Old Testament and in the New.

The advice to inquirers as to the forming and conduct of spiritualistic circles for communion with the spirit world, suggests that God in his mercy has barred the way to such familiarity, and that the barrier can only be broken from the human side. The adviser says, "Patience is essential, and it may be necessary to meet ten or twelve times, at short intervals, before anything occurs." The Son of God laid down his life to make the way freely open for communion with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ; but the Father of spirits has made it difficult to become familiar with evil spirits, and has positively prevented Satan from taking the first step in such forbiddden intercourse.

A leading society paper satirically says:—"The accumulating signs of national distress are trying to the inmost soul. At Newmarket thirteen of Mr. Chaplin's yearlings were sold for the paltry average of 1,630 guineas each, and some of the more fashionably bred animals only brought 3,000 guineas each. One handsome filly was actually disposed of at the rate of about one guinea per ounce, if we take her weight at twenty stone. In the midst of the dire distress illustrated by this sorrowful sale we are asked to provide a monument to General Gordon. There is good reason to believe that a free and high-spirited people will not endure the new burden. While only three thousand sovereigns can be got for a young horse, it is sinful to think of heroes."

Probably Amos would comment hereon after this manner: "Woe to them that are at ease, and to them that are secure, the notable men of the chief of the nations. Ye that put far away the evil day; that lie upon beds of ivory; that stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock; that sing idle songs to the sound of the viol; that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the revelry of them that stretched themselves shall pass away."

After his arduous labours through the winter and spring, Rev. E. P. Hammond is now resting for a time. He hopes to commence evangelistic work in London in September, at the Mildmay Conference Hall. On a recent Sunday evening, being present at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. Spurgeon requested him to assist in officiating at the observance of the Lord's Supper. At the close, various friends who had been associated with Mr. Hammond's work in London seventeen years ago came and thanked him for the blessing then received.

☞ Our last week's issue is now out of print, and many inquiries are being made for it. To meet this demand, the first page of that number, together with the leading articles in that and the present issue, with correspondence, poems, and various other matter on the same subject, will be ready this day (Thursday, July 23). It will consist of eight pages, price 6d. per dozen, and will be a very useful and convenient medium for giving the publicity which is so necessary at the present moment.

We feel sure that many of our readers will be glad to see the portrait of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., which we give in this issue. While he is held in the highest esteem by those who are honoured with his personal acquaintance, his career as a public man has been one of which the Christians of this nation may well be thankful to God. We pray that he may long be spared as a foremost champion of the good and the true.

In our next issue we shall give a Portrait, with brief Biographical Sketch and condensed report of Farewell Sermon by Rev. Samuel Hebditch, of Clapton Park Congregational Church, who has accepted a call to a church in Australia.

This is the season of the year when we usually receive visits from American friends, who cross the ocean for rest or change or sight-seeing. Dr. Cuyler and Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, are both on this side the Atlantic in search of recuperation. With unusual pleasure we have also, during the past week, welcomed back to our shores Mr. Edward Murphy, who, with his esteemed father, awakened such a deep interest among us in the Gospel Temperance reform. Mr. Murphy brings with him his young American wife, and hopes to pay brief holiday visits to Scotland and Ireland before he returns to his native land.

We regret to hear from Miss West, of Constantinople, that, in consequence of illness (bronchitis followed by inflammation of the lungs), she is forbidden to prosecute active missionary work for some months. She hopes, however, to do some Christian work with the pen, while unable to use the voice. Speaking of her recent six weeks' mission among Armenian women, Miss West adds:—

"It was a great joy to find so many traces of Dr. Somerville's visit to Smyrna, in the shape of Testaments with his name inscribed. A deep and, we trust, abiding impression was made there by the veteran evangelist."

In the midst of the current excitement we are in danger of overlooking the services that have been rendered to the cause of national morals by those pioneers of the movement who toiled quietly but persistently and not without success. The London Committee for the Suppression of the Foreign Traffic in English Girls were the first to direct public attention to this hellish commerce. They obtained some fourteen convictions in Belgium, and, notwithstanding the difficulties arising from the defective, cumbrous, and expensive English law, have brought one prominent London "trader" (Mrs. Jeffries) to justice. The Committee have, therefore, a strong claim on the assistance of the public. Its individual members have contributed of their substance, according to their ability, but they have still to meet liabilities to the extent of £200. We trust the Christian public will immediately subscribe this amount. We shall be glad to receive contributions.

LONDON'S SHAME.

LONDON has not yet recovered from the terrible shock that came upon it, with little warning, through the pages of The Pall Mall Gazette, the week before last. We trust it may never recover until everything is done, that human wisdom and pity and righteous indignation can devise, for the abatement of the fearful crimes that are staining our social life. Our fear is lest familiarity with these nameless evils should breed the proverbial indifference and acquiescence. As the knowledge of the facts is spread abroad, we trust that the provinces will be moved to fill up the measure of the nation's horror, so that its united voice may be irresistibly heard on the side of stringent and sufficient legislation, not only of a punitive, but of a preventive kind.

Above all, we need to bow before God in humiliation, clothing ourselves in sackcloth and ashes, for the abominations that are permitted and practised in our midst, if so be that He will pour out upon us the spirit of true repentance, and heal our backslidings, and make us as a nation more worthy the Christian name we bear. We must not forget that, after all, neither legislation, nor the hulks, nor the cat-o'-nine-tails will avail anything in our moral regeneration, if the hearts of the people be not turned from evil to serve the living and the true God.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

Many large and influentially-attended meetings are being held in London and the provinces in order to give vent to the rising tide of public shame and indignation and resolve, that has arisen through the disclosures in The Pall Mall Gazette. The editor of that journal, despite the hard things that have been said about his action in a certain section of the British press, may well feel encouraged by the many resolutions of approval and of cheer that have been passed at these meetings. The Government have evidently gauged the power of the public opinion that has been expressing itself, for it has declined to adopt the suggestion of Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, his aiders and abettors, that a legal prosecution of the offending journal should be entered on for its publication of the gruesome and horrible details of vice and crime. Whether the executive authorities and the House of Commons generally will be equally sensitive to the public touch, in remodelling the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, has yet to be seen. We fear it will need all the pressure that can be exercised by the friends of morality and righteousness in that assembly, backed by the strongest possible representations from constituencies all over the kingdom, before an adequate Bill receives the Royal assent and takes its place among our working laws. We would therefore urge continued vigilance on the part of all who desire that this agitation should be permanently effective, by enlightening the public conscience, by holding indignation meetings, and by flooding the chamber at St. Stephen's with petitions on behalf of a strong and adequate measure. The Pall Mall articles are now republished in separate form, price 2d., and can be had from the office of that paper, Northumberland-street, Charing Cross, London. We would counsel a judicious, but by no means an indiscriminate, distribution.

In our last issue we referred to the women's meeting at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, when stirring addresses were delivered by Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mrs. Booth, and others. The rousing words of the latter will be found reported at length in The War Cry of Saturday last, as well as a letter from General Booth addressed to his Salvation Army comrades throughout the world.

On the following day a crowded meeting open to all was held in the same hall under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P. Many persons of social distinction and influence were present, and the proceedings were characterised by an enthusiastic determination, and seems to have set an example which is being imitated in like assemblies in many parts of England. Mr. Morley said the existing condition of things, and especially the ineffectiveness of the law, as applied to different classes of society, was a scandal to a professedly Christian nation. Professor Stuart, M.P., moved a resolution of thanks to Mr. Stead, the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, and those who have aided him, for their fearless action in exposing the hidden crimes of this great and wicked city. The resolution was ably and feelingly seconded by Mrs. Butler (who herself has been largely instrumental in forcing this question to a crisis), and was enthusiastically carried. Mrs. Butler stated that she purposed making a tour in the northern provinces during the autumn, with the view of arousing public sentiment prior to the pending General Election.

Mrs. Booth moved a resolution demanding that the age of legal protection be raised to 17 at least. In her speech she insisted that the law to be passed must be made so clear and unmistakable, as to be beyond dispute in its construction, and to be easily put into operation. In seconding the resolution, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P. (the Parliamentary champion of the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts), said he thanked God for the disclosures that had been made. They were necessary, and therefore they were right. He thought that society, whose duty it was to fight against the evils of the time, had no right to be in ignorance of the evils they had to combat. Before the resolution was passed, an amendment in favour of raising the age to 18 was proposed, carried, and incorporated in it. Further addresses followed from Lord Mount-Temple, Mr. Percy Bunting, Miss Ellice Hopkins, the Chairman, and Rev. W. H. Aitken.

Another immense gathering took place in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Salvation Army, at which earnest addresses were given by Rev. W. Booth, Professor Stuart, M.P., Mrs. Butler, Mrs. Booth, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.. Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Benjamin Scott, &c. The following letter was read to the meeting :—"The Dowager Duchess of Roxburghe presents her compliments to Mrs. Booth, and is desired by the Queen to acknowledge Mrs. Booth's letter of the 3rd inst., and to say that Her Majesty, fully sympathizing with Mrs. Booth on the painful subject to which it refers, has already had communication thereon with a lady closely connected with the Government, to whom Mrs. Booth's letter will be immediately forwarded." Mrs. Booth said a mothers' appeal to the Queen would be promoted. Mr. Booth said that the Salvation Army proposed to start further Rescue Homes, as well as a central Home for inquiry and help to young women of all nationalities, if the public would supply the means.

Mr. J. B. Wookey has addressed meetings of men, in some cases very large, in every case very enthusiastic, at Wood-green, Mile-end, Leicester, Hackney, &c. To Mr. Wookey's address at Luton, reported in The Sentinel, in which he publicly named and denounced some of Mrs. Jeffries' aristocratic patrons, may probably be traced the beginnings of this agitation in its recent development; we are glad to know that his rousing addresses are having a good effect in focussing the opinion of large masses of his countrymen. Space will not permit us to refer to the multitude of other gatherings that have been held, both in London and the provinces, or the many strong expressions of opinion that have been given from pulpit and press. We may, however, furnish some

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

We select some portions of the many we have received on this subject. The writers of all of these, with one exception, strongly commend our action in referring to the exposures made through our evening contemporary. We give, as follows, the single expostulatory letter that has come to hand. We sincerely sympathise with the writer in her desire to keep her relatives free from all knowledge of the evil that flourishes around them. Were it not for our deep persuasion that the only effective way to preserve the young from falling into the snares laid for their feet, is faithfully to warn them of the existence of these snares, we should gladly be silent on the subject. The lady

"presents her compliments, and inform the Editor how grieved she is to find that those very objectionable articles in The Pall Mall Gazette have been alluded to in The Christian. —— —— has always felt so safe in seeing The Christian in her nursery and schoolroom, and has given it with such confidence to her daughters and other young girls. She was horrified to find one of her girls about to read it to-day, and tore the paper up into such small pieces that it could injure no one in the house, and she is telling the bookseller not to send it at present until all fear of such danger has passed away. Only yesterday —— —— recommended The Christian to some young ladies who wanted to find some explanations of the Scripture Union Portions, and now —— —— must beg them not to take in The Christian at present."

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, General Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, writes :—"I have just read your editorial on the awful revelations of vice made in The Pall Mall Gazette. Very hurriedly I write to express my hearty thanks to you for so ably supporting the manly conduct of Mr. Stead in his unflinching exposure of the evil. My letter is, no doubt, only one of many, but I deeply feel the thanks I write."

Mr. J. B. Williams, Rochester, writes :—"I wish you God speed in your efforts to promote purity, to shield the unsuspecting, and pillory the wrongdoer."

A lady writes :—"I am thankful for your bold utterances. Mild writing or speaking would answer no end, and would, therefore, be unjustifiable. I hope these appalling revelations may be used of God to soften and subdue mere party feeling during the coming elections."

Mr. W. Sewell, 26, Walter-street, Stepney, E., says :—"Would it not be possible to raise a fund for the purpose of posting bills in very large type throughout London, if not all the large English towns, begging all who have anything to do with children to be on their guard against those who decoy our sisters and daughters into this frightful slavery?"

"J. H. F.," Glasgow, sends the following suggestion :—"For such a gigantic evil, agitation on a gigantic scale will be necessary. In the meantime, however, when the iron is hot a decisive blow might be struck at the import and export 'trade.' Could not the suggestion of 'an ex-slaver' be acted on—that the steamers plying between this country and the Continent be watched by paid Christian men (and women, if necessary)? Permission would surely be given by Government and the steamship owners to stop all young women either coming or going, where there was the slightest suspicion that they were the dupes of some of these fiends who traffic in human beings. Not only so, but if Government apprehended these decoys and tried the effect of the 'cat' upon the men and imprisonment on the women, we might see the end of this diabolical business, so far as export and import are concerned at least."

"M. L. P.," writing with reference to our letter of warning about "Danger in the London Parks," gives some strongly corroborative cases from her own observation, and that of friends. She asserts that the danger is far greater than parents or mistresses are aware of, and adds, "I spoke on the subject to a well-known clergyman's wife, who said: 'It is dreadful; I am obliged to keep my nurse and children within our enclosure, rather than let them run such risks.' I should not put pen to paper on such a subject, except for the earnest desire of warning mistresses to look after their servants as they would after their own daughters."

From "A Mother," Chislehurst :—May I thank you most heartily in my own name and my husband's for the attitude you have taken with regard to the terribly painful subject now before the public? No doubt, when men and women come to their senses, and the truth of the revelations is confirmed, the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette will be regarded as little less than a hero, a sort of Gordon, and, in the popular enthusiasm which will follow the originators of his daring scheme of exposure will be lost sight of. But I do not forget that more than two years ago your paper was the medium of publishing the indignant words of that fearless woman, Ellice Hopkins, "that such things should be." It is, I believe, to this pure, high-minded woman, and others like her, that we owe the present unearthing of our national degradation.

The beginning of such movements as the Social Purity question is attended with immense difficulty. Such prejudice exists in the minds of good people, to say nothing of the opposition of the bad. Perhaps the hardest thing to bear, especially for a woman, is the insinuation as to her delicacy, in venturing to speak on such subjects. My heart is very full of burning indignation towards those who would thus "strain out the gnat, and swallow the camel." I must not trespass on your time, and only again assure you, and all who are in the forefront of this fierce battle, how, as a woman and a mother, I honour you.

"L. L." writes:—The Standard has broken silence on the subject which has filled the minds of so many with horror and indignation, and is very irate indeed with the journal which has made the terrible disclosures. As to the manner in which these disclosures have been made, I have no desire to join issue with The Standard; but one looks in vain in the article alluded to, which appeared on the morning of July 17, for one single word of sympathy with the victims of the infernal appetites of those to whom they fall a prey, or a single line of condemnation of the persons whose depravity is the cause of this fearful traffic. It is not the moral infamy involved, but its exposure, that is deprecated.

While, then, I regret that the articles will fall into the hands of many who will draw evil from them, all honour to those who have not been deterred, by any considerations of false delicacy, from uttering words of scathing condemnation against the really guilty parties. By "really guilty" I mean, not the wretched panderer to vice, but those to whose pleasures they pander. The panderer is regarded by all as an abandoned wretch, who has sold the bodies and souls of herself and those she has enticed for greed. But the man in whose interests she sacrifices name and fame, and sinks to the lowest place among womankind, twirls his moustache in the Park, and touches the hand of the unsullied maiden in the drawing-room, and walks abroad unabashed, and is admired and spoken of as "a man of the world."

I would venture to speak one word of caution to those in high places and to the journalists who represent their sentiments. "An appeal to the right feeling of our Legislature was made on behalf of the young and the injured, and that appeal was made in vain. But it is at your peril that you again turn a deaf ear to the cry of the oppressed. The feelings of the people have been roused to their very centre, and they are watching to see what will be your line of conduct. Take warning in time. To use fresh swelling words of indignation against those who expose the infamy, while avoiding all action that shall remove the accursed thing, will be to disregard the deep growling of the thunder till the tornado bursts upon your heads. You have read the history of ancient Rome, and you know the story of Lucretia and Virginia:—

> And thrice the tossing Forum sent up a frightful yell;
> See, see, thou dog, what thou hast done, and hide thy shame in hell.'
> 'Those that would make our maidens slaves, must first make slaves of men.'

"There is not a mother, a father, or a brother, connected with these girls who are now known to be the principal victims of this diabolical traffic, but will watch to see what course you pursue. They know right well that without a receiver there would be no thief; that without a sensualist there would be no panderer. They will nail the indictment to the right door, and woe be unto you if they perceive an inclination to screen the true culprit because he is one of your own order. Be warned, I say, in time, or the results will be such as we shudder to contemplate."

"An Englishwoman," in a lengthy communication, breathing horror and indignation at the cruelties perpetrated by the priests and priestesses of this Moloch god, says:—These nameless horrors are not done as between man and woman alone, nor with our young girls only, awful as that is; but this that is now committed in our land is done upon our children—those children who but a few years ago came fresh from their Maker's hands to us—the little children whom the Saviour of men blessed, and said that unless we become as one of them we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.

Fathers and mothers, think of it if you dare, realise it if you can, that these, our children, are taken whilst they are yet of tender years, and their poor little bodies, unformed, unfitted by the very laws of nature herself for this deed of hell, are ruthlessly, deliberately handed over to devils in human form, who deface, maim, and brutally outrage them, and care not, so that they may gratify their brutal passions.

Oh, hapless, helpless, trusting childhood, God help you, for you get little help or redress from the laws of your land. O death, death, death, come quickly, come at once to them, before the image of God in which they were born is effaced from their souls—for thou only, O death, canst deliver them.

Men of England! This work is being done here, in the very midst of us, in the land that boasts itself as the most just, the most civilised, the first Christian nation in the whole world. Say, shall this thing be any longer, now that we know it? Then dare we no longer call our nation by the sacred name of Christ.

The God of Heaven lives and reigns; and through the true men and women of England must He now work his righteous will. We are his children's keepers; their murdered innocence cries aloud to us, and in his name, who is King of kings and Lord of lords, we must appeal that righteous judgment be given, and this accursed, thrice accursed thing, be uprooted from our land.

Oh, my countrywomen! my countrywomen! from the highest to the lowest, shall we not be as one? for above all others, this cause is ours. Let each one of us do her part, however small, and rest not until this degradation of our children, this black stain upon our Christianity, this deep stigma upon England, has been for ever blotted out. May God help each one of us, in this our country's hour of need, to prove herself a true Englishwoman.

Mr. E. Martin, Upper Tooting, writes:—Surely the keynote you have struck, viz., of humiliation and woe, is the right attitude of all those who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," in regard to the recent revelations of vice. Should it not be followed up in a still more public manner? Why should not a day be set apart for confession, humiliation, and supplication on behalf of our national sins?

MISS SHARMAN'S HOMES.

THE nineteenth report of these Homes differs in some respects from the one issued last year. Fourteen of the children were then smitten down with scarlet fever, and, later on, four with smallpox, of whom one died. Consumption carried off another, who gave clear evidence of being fully prepared for the change. Then came a falling-off of the funds, until all were exhausted, thus presenting "a full house and an empty purse." Friends, however, were forthcoming, and the pressing needs were met, and the total income for the year amounted to £4600. The summer outings have greatly benefited the orphans. All who send gifts for this branch of the work are desired to send them as soon as possible, so that the necessary arrangements may be made. Baby-linen and ladies' underclothing are made by the girls, and supplied to applicants.

Those who have left the Homes and kept their place seven years, have been presented with a watch, of whom there have been four. The mistresses write about them with the greatest satisfaction. In the three Homes—Southwark, Gravesend, and Tunbridge Wells—there have been, during the year, 270 children, of whom the elder ones have been employed in the work of the Homes, laundry, and workroom. The London Home is in Austral-street, West-square, Southwark, S.E. The tenure of the Gravesend Home expires in September, and a new permanent building is required, towards which about £1000 has been received or promised.

The report is published at the office of this paper, price 2d.

SCRIPTURAL TEXTS ASSOCIATION.

THIS Association seeks by placing God's Word in tramcars and omnibuses, &c., to spread the knowledge of the Gospel. Since it was started, two years ago, texts have been placed in sixty-four tramcars; but, owing to lack of funds, we are unable to extend the work. The cost of one text in a tramcar is ten shillings annually.

It is impossible to tell how many anxious burdened ones have found rest through reading in this way the Saviour's loving invitations, but the seed is sown in faith, and God will give an abundant harvest. Will any help in this work for the Master's sake? The Hon. Sec. is Mrs. Wood, 191, South Lambeth-road, S.W.; and the Hon. Treasurer, Mrs. Dorin, 342, Clapham-road, S.W.

TEMPERANCE IN EAST LONDON.

BY the kind permission of Mrs. Guinness, the annual meeting and garden-party of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was this year held at Harley House, Bow-road, on Wednesday, July 15. A large and influential company gathered in the spacious grounds in the afternoon, and afterwards assembled in the College Hall for the meeting. Lady Hobart presided, and introduced Mrs. Temple (wife of the Lord Bishop of London), who called special attention to the steady progress which the cause of Temperance is making all over the country, and the growth of public opinion in its favour. She gave several instances that had come under her notice of evil that had arisen by sending children to public-houses for drink, and also through Christian people offering it to others. While admitting that even moderate drinkers might help the cause by rigidly observing the rules to which they had subscribed, it was urged that the fearful havoc caused by intemperance calls imperatively for total abstinence on the part of all who would materially aid the movement.

Mrs. R. Pelly, of Stratford, asked her sisters to arise and shake off the yoke of bondage that oppressed the nation, and to begin by discouraging the evil, in all its forms, at home. Brutality, adultery, and murder all flowed from drink. "The other day I saw a dear babe nearly dead; the father had struck it a terrible blow when drunk. The next day I called, and saw him hugging and kissing the poor little victim; and when I spoke to him about his cruel treatment, he cried, and said he dearly loved his child, and would never have done it had it not been for the drink."

A resolution was moved by Mrs. Andrew Johnson, of Woodford, in favour of the Bill now before Parliament, for the Protection of Young Girls. "Who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?" was God's call to the women of England in this matter, and those who respond to it must be prepared to make sacrifice. Rev. T. Richardson, Mrs. Gregson, and Rev. C. Servantè briefly spoke, and the company, numbering about 400, adjourned to tea in the marquee.

The hall was again crowded in the evening. Miss Hastings, of St. Luke's Mission, presided, and a vigorous address was given by Miss Brewster. A touching incident was told of a beloved child who went astray, and finally came home to die. "Promise me, dear father, ere I die that you will banish all drink from the table from this hour, for it was my first step toward ruin." Never again was wine seen upon that table.

Mrs. Corfield said she had spent most of her time in Spain, and had found the evil there as much as at home. For the first three days little infants are mainly kept alive by gin, and later on wine is given them until they are nearly intoxicated. It was a mighty hindrance to mission work, and much mischief was done by doctors recommending it to their patients.

Miss Hastings urged the brevity of life and the nearness of the Lord's Coming, as furnishing a powerful stimulus to diligence in the work. Miss Messer added a closing word.

CHRIST-LIKE DEVOTION.—"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me." Here we see such devotion to work that even the natural and ordinary care and comfort of the body is set aside. There are many ministers who have managed to secure for themselves comfortable and pleasant surroundings, and a well-curb is not the pulpit they would care to preach from. To forego their dinner for a fallen woman is not a thing to be thought of. The will of Him that sent us is all well, but we are apt to say we cannot do without our dinner. An uptown and not a down-town charge; a city and not a country parish; a cultivated and not an unlettered congregation; parishioners who live on the avenues and broad streets, and not those who live in the "third story back" apartments—these are more to our mind than God's will. "Workers together with Him!" Who of us are such workers in the full and precious meaning of this phrase?—New York Independent.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE.

LAST week, as announced, several meetings were held, at which this evangelist bade farewell to his English friends and fellow-workers, prior to his leaving for America and the British colonies. At the meeting on Monday evening, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon occupied the chair, and was well supported on the platform by members of the movement. Mr. Spurgeon testified to the good work carried on by Mr. Orsman at Hoxton on the Christian side of temperance, and also to the work in which Mr. Noble was engaged. Mr. Noble, in speaking upon the evils of drunkenness, said that his intention was to get renewed health, and to see what was being done abroad in regard to the Gospel Temperance movement. Addresses followed by other supporters of the work.

A large number of friends, including many prominent workers, met at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, in response to the invitation of Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading, and the Committee of the Blue Ribbon movement. After an hour of social converse, short addresses were given by representative brethren, expressive of the high esteem in which Mr. Noble is held, and the prayerful good wishes that will waft him on his journeyings around the globe. Mr. Palmer, the chairman, remarked on the gratifying progress that has been made in recent years in temperance reform, in bringing about which Mr. Noble has borne an active part. Mr. John Taylor, Mr. S. Shirley, Mr. Joseph Malins, Mr. Raper, Rev. G. M. Murphy, and Mr. Gurney Sheppard, most of them representing various temperance organisations, joined as with one heart and voice in bidding Mr. Noble God-speed, and in exhorting those who remain at home to still greater earnestness in combatting the evils of the drink. In the course of his interesting remarks, Mr. Malins spoke of the growth of the temperance movement in Sweden, Norway, and Finland, chiefly through the influence of a yound Swede who was indoctrinated with Blue Ribbon principles during a visit to London.

In his address, Mr. Noble referred to his early experiences in the work, and briefly sketched the rise and expansion of the Hoxton Hall Mission, which has proved such a boon to those in the locality, as well as a centre of blessing to many distant places. Alluding to the words of regret uttered by previous speakers, that Mrs. Noble was prevented from going with her husband on this tour, Mr. Noble very feelingly expressed his deep indebtedness to his wife for the unselfish devotion she had shown to the cause with which he was associated. He hoped not only to gain rest and gather strength, but to assimilate fresh thoughts, and learn new methods of working that would be helpful to him in his future work.

Mr. Ferry, U.S. Senator, eloquently bespoke for Mr. Noble a hearty welcome on the other side of the Atlantic, and urged the workers in England to continue the fight against intemperance, mainly in the direction of moral persuasion.

Dr. Theodore Cuyler, of Brooklyn, who had only arrived in London a few hours before, said he was glad to be present to join in heartily commending Mr. Noble to God on his departure. If he had only been at home he would gladly have welcomed his "noble" brother to the American shores. He would answer for it, however, that the friends on that side would give him a genuine British welcome.

Mr. Noble sails from Liverpool in the Servia on Saturday, and will, in the first instance, pay a visit to Mr. J. B. Gough, at Worcester, Mass.

MANCHESTER CITY MISSIONARIES.—Mr. W. N. Heald, of Parswood, Didsbury, invited the staff and members of the Manchester City Mission and their wives to his residence on Wednesday, 15th inst. The afternoon's pleasure began with a strawberry fête at Parswood, and closed with a tea meeting in the mission hall, the provision for which was on the most generous scale. The kindness shown was much appreciated by the hard-worked missionaries, who spend so much of their time amid the slums of the city.

REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

NOT only as an earnest labourer in God's vineyard herself, but as the helper of many a worn and wearied worker, Miss Mason deserves the warmest sympathy of Christians in all the churches. In her recently published report she gives a touching insight into her varied and conflicting experiences in providing for the ever-increasing needs of the institutions under her care. The letters of thanks from those who have "rested" under her happy roof, occupy several pages, and furnish many striking testimonies to the value of the Kilburn and Eastbourne Homes. Says one: "I never spent so happy and blessed a fortnight before. The bodily rest was good, but how much sweeter the help and comfort derived from those precious meetings." Another writes: "The physical strength derived from the change enabled me to keep on in my work; the Scripture-readings, prayers, and spiritual converse, were productive of such a blessing in my soul as I shall never for get." Yet another: "While at Eastbourne I was enabled to surrender all to Jesus, and now I can truly say there is nothing between my soul and Him."

Further testimonies are given as to the value of the all-day meetings held at Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, on the first Friday in each month, to which all Christian workers are invited. The Home and Foreign Mission Fund has sent a little help to thirteen missionaries, including workers in Africa, India, and Jamaica. The re-establishment of failing health, invigoration of drooping spirits, and a fresh quickening of the spiritual life seem to be the almost invariable results flowing from a visit to these Homes of real rest for body, mind, and spirit. A small sum occasionally forwarded to embarrassed toilers in the field, has cheered the heart of many a desponding toiler among the poor and the needy. In the report there is a list of the varied kinds of work engaged in by those who receive the benefit of the Homes; these include Temperance and Zenana work, nursing the sick in their own homes, teaching in mission schools, rescuing the fallen, domestic missions, and other forms of Christian labour. Copies of the report may be had of Miss Mason, 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W., who earnestly desires prayer for continued blessing on her work, as well as increased help in maintaining it.

SCHOOLS IN SPAIN.—The schools established at Puerto Santa Maria by the late Miss Ross, have been closed for some months by order of the Mayor of that town, on the plea that the teachers had no certificates. They had done their best to carry on the work of their late valued teacher, and had conducted the schools to the satisfaction of the two Pastors who visited them alternately, once a week. Whether the schools be open or closed, the rent remains the same, for the place is used regularly for public worship, at a cost of £4 per month. Further particulars can be had of Miss E. Lucas, 17, High-street, Wycombe.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN BRUSSELS.—Last week a meeting was held at the Mansion House in support of the British Institute in Brussels for Homeless and Friendless English Girls. The Lord Mayor presided, and said the object of the institute was to provide for English girls in Brussels protection and assistance whenever they found themselves in difficulty or want. A large number of English girls were driven by necessity to seek their living abroad, and many of these at some time or other found themselves destitute and without friends. Such an institution was as necessary in Brussels as in Paris—two very similar cities. The English community in Brussels was not a rich one, and he thought this institute had a strong claim on the benevolent in this country. Mr. Vivian, the British Minister in Brussels, said that, noticing the difficulties in which many English girls in Brussels were placed, Mrs. Jenkins, the wife of their late chaplain, had opened rooms and made it public that all English girls in distress could obtain advice and assistance there. The Home had been opened ten months, and up to the present 155 girls had availed themselves of it. It was now felt necessary to enlarge the Home and provide extra lodging accommodation. For this purpose another £120 a year was immediately required. It was announced that subscriptions had been promised in the room to the amount of nearly £100.

SILENCE AND SPEECH.

HUSH! for the Lord is listening.
  Oh, check that angry word!
Such accents from his gentle lips
  No creature ever heard.
Oh, let no tones of harshness
  Fall on that listening ear,
Let nought but love be cherished—
  The Lord is standing near.

Speak! for the Master listens.
  Tell of his faithfulness;
Tell how He loves to pardon,
  Tell how He longs to bless.
Tell how He died to save us,
  Tell how He lives to keep;
Tell of his constant leading
  Of the weak and wayward sheep.

Hush! for the Lord is listening.
  Oh, do not pain his heart
By words which disappoint Him,
  And cause Him to depart.
Speak! for the Master listens,
  And grieved may go away,
If his children sit in silence,
  With never a word to say.

Speak! for the Lord is listening,
  He loves to hear the voice
Of his gentle, faithful children;
  It makes his heart rejoice.
Then, bravely speak for Jesus,
  And a rich reward shall be,
When, face to face in glory,
  The Master speaks to thee.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

ON Monday evening last week, a very interesting meeting was held in the Edinboro' Castle, Limehouse. It marked the twentieth year of work by Dr. Barnardo in providing homes for destitute children. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird presided, and was supported by a numerous company of friends. The boys who were going out to Canada occupied rows of seats by themselves, and when in the course of the evening they stood up that the large audience might have a good view of them, they looked a band of handy young fellows who, with a fair field, and a continuance of health and strength, would be likely to make their way anywhere, and more especially in the country for which they were bound.

Dr. Barnardo said that, having reached the fortieth year of his age and the twentieth of his work, he was more resolved than ever to go on with it. Addressing the young emigrants, he told them they were going where they would have a chance of succeeding that they never had yet. If they did not get on it would be their own fault. Let them keep honest, true, sober, and, better than all, have Christ for their friend, and, whether they rose to eminence or not, they would do their duty in that sphere of life in which God had placed them. In proceeding he said that the institution, which now contained 1400 children, was growing rapidly; during the last four months 100 boys and girls had been admitted each month. He believed that in 1886, when the institution attained its majority, they should be able to report that the Homes did not contain less than 2000 boys and girls.

The Chairman said they ought to be very thankful to God who had so graciously preserved all who had gone out, and that they had so readily found kind friends to care for them. He trusted that the lads who were now about to go to Canada would be remembered in prayer by those whom they were leaving. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. Dr. Rosedale, Mr. R. Paton, Rev. W. H. Inglis, and Mr. R. C. Morgan. The latter said that he was reminded that evening of a meeting at which he was present when the friend whom they now knew as Dr. Barnardo was a young candidate for going as a missionary to China. His course, however, had been Divinely directed otherwise, and all could now see that no mistake had been made when he was kept at home.—Record.

SOCIAL ETHICS.

Dear Sir,—I believe great good will result from he recent discussions in your columns on Co-perative stores and the like questions—discussions n which the principles of God's government of the vorld are applied to the practical details of life. Vill you allow me space to apply these principles o a far more important subject—that of moral urity? I may seem to start a long way off from ny subject, when I begin with pointing out that he earth is the source of all real wealth, and that he tillers of the soil and the keepers of cattle are he only real producers of wealth. But hear me to he end.

We must have food, and the man who with his wn hand tills the soil is the fundamental unit in he world. He raises more food than he needs for imself, and he gives a portion of his food to other nen to supply him with clothes, tools, and house. hese, again, can spare some of the food they have ot from the tiller of the soil, and they give it to ome one else to supply them with luxuries, set up hops, &c. This is the elementary idea of the ocial system,—the exchange of food. No doubt noney is that which is actually exchanged, but the rinciples of sociality will never be understood till he position of food in the social system is fully pprehended.

One has only to study the history of Israel to see ow fully this principle was recognised when the eople were settled in the land—they were to ossess the soil as their wealth—and the Book of Proverbs is full of allusions to the importance of illing the land. Whenever the bread-winner sinks ocially and morally, society is in danger; and that s precisely what has taken place.

The labourers who reap down the fields (taking his service in its widest application) have not eceived their due share of the fruits—God's orders ave not been followed, and hence penal consequences are resulting. Among the most notable of hese is that young men, instead of living healthy ives in the country, tilling the soil, marrying early nd begetting healthy children, crowd into the owns, are employed in shops on salaries which will ot allow them to marry, and immorality is the onsequence. If people will crowd into cities and ive an unnatural life, they must reap the consequences.

Again, the craze for education has overspread the ountry with schools, but instead of teaching boys ow to work, and girls how to sew and cook, and urse infants, and be useful women, it has crammed oth sexes with useless intellectual knowledge. Geography and history are good in their place, if ightly taught, and especially if the moral lessons f history are taught, in place of lists, dates of eigns and battles; but they should be subordinate o more important things.

Further, the Civil Service examinations have led housands of young men to engage in a course of tudy which can be of no possible use to them in fter life. Not more than a tenth can get the Government appointments, and the rest are only it to be clerks in offices or warehouses. Hence here is an enormous superabundance of them, nd salaries are just what a single man can live on. Hence marriage is impossible, and immorality ollows.

Yet again, the habits of life of the majority of he middle and middle-lower classes are far too xpensive. Thousands of people eat and drink too nuch, and therefore thousands hardly eat at all. Christian people eat far too much, as a rule, and pend too much on dress. God's laws know of no xceptions, and therefore Christian men who eat oo much break down and die between sixty and ixty-five, when they might live and work to ighty or ninety. Five or six shillings is all that nyone needs to spend in the week on food and rink, and when he reaches middle-life, he may ery well live on four and sixpence.

Now, what I would urge is that Christians study o live a far more simple life. Let the table be imple, and far less butchers' meat eaten than is sual—use it for seasoning, and not as a staple food, nd the weekly bill will soon show the result, and o will the doctor's. Let the children be taught onest trades, according to the Apostle's injunction, nstead of being trained to be clerks and shopmen. Let them learn to till the soil. If England were scientifically cultivated the produce would be increased fourfold. Why should not respectable young men, who at present are trying to get employment as clerks, learn to be boilermakers, machinists, &c., and take the places of the drunken, ruffianly crew who are usually engaged in these employments? Boilermakers often earn a pound a day, and spend it as fast, and machinists make from two to three pounds a week. A steady man on such wages, who does not need to keep up style, can marry early if he marries a woman who has been taught how to act as a wife and a mother. Surely this is better than aping the gentleman and leading a dissolute life.

I feel assured if people would live according to God's laws, as revealed in nature and Scripture, there need not be that emigration which people seem to think the only remedy for the present condition of things. Yours, &c., M.D.

MARK XVI. 9—20.

Dear Sir,—As you have inserted a letter of criticism on Mark xvi. 9—20, I must throw myself on your courtesy for a brief reply, which will be, to all, my last word.

Mr. Jeater expresses regret that there should be "anything in your columns which casts a doubt upon the true sayings of God." That is a regret in which no one would share more deeply than myself. But this gentleman, who appears to be a scholar, must know, what every intelligent young person in the advanced classes in our Sunday-schools, chiefly through the Revised Version, knows by this time, that there are many disputed readings in the text of the New Testament, which, however, happily, affect no vital doctrine. Moreover, he ought to know, which evidently he does not, that these disputed passages have nothing to do with the "Canon" of the New Testament, which solely concerns the list of books to be accepted as inspired. There is not one of these books, however, in which examples are not to be found of various readings, and the efforts of modern scholarship are bent on discovering the true ones.

The genuineness of certain passages has long been questioned, and amongst them none more so than Mark xvi. 9—20. The array of opinions on both sides is remarkable; so much so, as to lead a plain reader of God's Word, like myself, to look into the internal evidence for or against the passage, and to raise the question of "corroboration," or otherwise. One Evangelist, I am aware, often records what another omits, and an omission of itself is not of much importance; but it becomes serious where such a passage as that in Mark xvi. 9—20 not only stands alone, but deals with such a vital matter, and is found wanting in those manuscripts where we should naturally expect to find it.

Mr. Jeater's statement that the "quire of the Sinaitic MS. containing the end of Mark's Gospel is written by the scribe of Cod. Vat." is open to grave objections: (1) Tischendorf, the editor of both, regarded the Sinaitic as more ancient than the other; (2) The MSS. differ in size, number of lines, and columns to a page; (3) The readings of the two MSS. differ, moreover in the subscriptions; (4) The blank spaces in both MSS. follow the subscriptions, showing that the writers knew of no omissions. The identity of handwriting can only be decided by comparing the two MSS.

A doubt, Mr. Editor, is not a denial, and it is of no importance to my argument with the "faith healers" to show that the passage in Mark is not genuine. I only referred to the dispute because it is not customary with faithful expositors of the Word of God to base an argument for a doctrine upon controverted texts. Whereas the passage in Mark is appealed to with as much confidence as if no question had ever been raised by some of the ablest critics with reference to it.

I should have laid myself open to grave censure if, in a paper like yours, I had expressed a "doubt" with regard to any "passage" in the Canonical Scriptures, unless that doubt had been notorious, and made still more so by "the Revised Version."—

Yours truly, H. J. Gamble.

The Manse, Upper Clapton, July 16.

BROADSTAIRS.—The crippled and afflicted orphans, in connection with Mrs. Ginever's Homes, having now entered their permanent premises at Cuthbert House, Granville-road, a meeting for thanksgiving and prayer was held on Wednesday, the 22nd July, when Mrs. Ginever gave a brief account of her eleven years work amongst orphaned children A weekly prayer-meeting will be held every Tuesday evening at 12 o'clock, to which visitors are cordially invited. There are now 106 orphans in the three Homes. The new report is just issued, and will be gladly forwarded to any reader of The Christian on application to 3, Maun-road, Holloway.

THE CHICHESTER AND ARETHUSA.

THE annual distribution of prizes to the lads on board these training-ships, lying off Greenhithe, took place on Wednesday, last week. The ships are maintained in connection with the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. Since the establishment of these refuges—which, it must be remembered, are for destitute and not criminal juveniles—down to the end of the year 1884, 10,151 boys and girls have been admitted, and during the same period more than 7158 boys have left the refuges and ships for the Royal Navy and merchant service, the Army, to situations at home, and as emigrants to the colonies, and more than 1540 girls have left for service at home and abroad.

A large number of visitors proceeded to the ships by a special steamer. At the distribution of prizes, Mr. W. E. Hubbard said they must all regret that the president of the institution, the Earl of Shaftesbury, was unable to be present. Mr. J. H. Fordham, in his Lordship's absence, distributed the prizes, some of them being awarded to "old boys" who had distinguished themselves. Mr. W. Williams (the secretary) in addressing the meeting, said that these refuges comprised seven or eight homes. The Society was the first in the field, and he appealed to subscribers not to forsake it. They had passed through these training-ships more than 3000 boys, but with the other branches over 10,000 children had passed through their hands. Mr. Fordham congratulated Captain Willan, R.N., on the admirable manner in which the boys had fulfilled their duties, and this portion of the proceedings was brought to a close with the National Anthem, sung by the boys. Subsequently, there were boat races, and the visitors shortly afterwards returned to town —Record.

AN EVANGELISTIC RETREAT.

THE buying of a home in Northfield (Mass.) by the evangelist singer and co-worker with Mr. Moody, Mr. I. D. Sankey, is another indication that Mr. Moody is gradually drawing about him people of a kindred spirit who intend permanently to locate at Northfield. Dr. Pentecost has a fine summer residence there, and others are looking about to find suitable homes. With such a "coterie" of Christian workers in the same neighbourhood, others are bound to follow. So delighted are people who visit Northfield for the first time, with the balmy air, beautiful scenery, and pleasant residences, that they are prone to speak of it as a future summer resort. When Mr. Moody was recently asked to divorce himself from his own home and school associations, and give his opinion of Northfield, he replied, "I have travelled a great deal in this and other countries, and I have never found such a beautiful spot, all things considered, as old Northfield." And Dr. Pentecost promptly endorsed the sentiment by saying, "I have no home or school associations there, and I can heartily say amen."—Springfield Republican.

"THE ICEBOUND."—In writing to thank those who have responded to the recent appeal in our columns, Rev. B. La Trobe, secretary of the Moravian Missions (29, Ely-place, London, E.C.), writes:—The barque Harmony has left London for Labrador with three missionaries on board. She never touches at Greenland, as there is a regular service of ships from Copenhagen to that Danish colony. She is the fourth of the Society's vessels bearing that suitable name, and the ninth of the series of missionary ships which have safely accomplished the perilous voyage ever since 1770. The present is therefore the 116th annual voyage of the Society's vessel. One or two of the numerous gifts received were sent to other Moravian missionaries who know what it is to be shut off for months together by snow and ice from the rest of the world This year witnesses the commencement of a mission among the Eskimoes of North-West Alaska. The five pioneers, who left San Francisco for that country on May 18, will find a climate as rigorous and surroundings as dreary as their brethren and sisters in Greenland, or even colder Labrador.

Notices of Books, &c.

Teresa's Secret. By Laura M. Lane (2s. 6d., Partridge) is a delightful story of an Italian girl, who had many hardships to endure in her youthful years; but—"all's well that ends well." The descriptions of Italian scenery are vivid, and altogether the tale is one that charms the reader by its naturalness and wealth of incident.

Mother's Darling. By Miss Bewicke. This is one of Field & Tuer's shilling "Parchment Series." It is written in the style of a Society novelette, though we are assured the story is true. The incidents are very pathetic, while the ignorance and helplessness of the family of hereditary law makers, who here feel the injustice of a cruel law, are positively ludicrous. We hope it may have the desired effect in moving public opinion in the direction of getting the infamous laws altered which deprive a mother of the custody of her infant children.

Mr. Fisher Unwin has issued an interesting volume compiled from official documents by Captain Pasfield Oliver, giving "The true story of the dispute in Madagascar, between the Hovas and the French." As this dispute is still unsettled, we hope the friends of Madagascar, in all English-speaking countries, will read this concise and reliable account of the relations that have existed between the opposing parties. In a prefatory note the volume is commended by Lord Shaftesbury, the Lord Mayor, and other well-known philanthropists.

The Reality of Faith. By Newman Smyth, author of "Old Faiths in New Light," &c. Ward, Lock & Co. 1s. 6d. A volume of religious discourses, under the title of the first. As the writer says in his preface that they represent no party in the Church, and no school in Theology, the reader knows what to expect. Illustrations and speculations abound, but there is a lamentable absence of sound doctrine. We look in vain for any clear teaching on Repentance, Faith, the Holy Spirit, and the Atonement. Indeed, we find it hard to trace much connection between the discourses and the texts that head them.

Thoughts at Fourscore and Earlier. By Thomas Cooper. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. The matured opinions of a man of such an original, independent mind, and of such long and varied experience as the veteran author of this book, ought, primâ facie, to be worth reading. We are sure this impression will be more than confirmed by the actual perusal of these racy and eminently practical pages. Mr Cooper deals with such varied topics as politics, strikes, old age, the doctrine of the future state, evolution, music, &c., and on each he has much to say that is of importance, as the fruit of observation and reflection. Old and young alike will find this handsome book (which is adorned with a portrait of the author) a lively and profitable companion.

Saving to the Uttermost. By. G. Holden Pike. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. There is, perhaps, no more remarkable or gratifying chapter in the history of Christian effort in mighty London than that which tells of the work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, over which Mr. George Hatton has presided for about a quarter of a century. Mr. Pike has produced, from the ample materials at his disposal, a very interesting record, and one that ought to secure much public sympathy and cooperation in the blessed work of rescue and reform sustained by Mr. Hatton and his able lieutenant, Mr. Wheatley. The second portion of the book refers exclusively to the work among discharged prisoners, which is the latest development of the Mission, and which has met with the special approbation of all who are acquainted with it. Lifelike portraits of Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley add to the interest of the prettily-bound volume.

Gotthold's Emblems; or, Invisible Things understood by Things that are Made. By Christian Scriven, Minister of Magdeburg in 1671. Translated from the 28th German Edition by Rev. Robert Menzies. (5s., 4th Ed.) T. & T. Clark. Messrs. Clark have conferred a boon of no small value on English readers by the addition of this inestimable book to their list of publications. German Neology has done much to unsettle English Theology, but these devout meditations are instinct with the simplicity of Christ. They are the breathings of a holy soul, and produce rather than inculcate holiness; because they manifest that holiness possesses the writer, not that the writer professes holiness. Nothing could better describe the character and quality of Gotthold's Emblems than the well-known couplet on its title page—

"Find tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and God in everything."

The British and Foreign Evangelical Review for this month has a good selection of papers, mostly on theological subjects of general interest. Professor Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" furnishes a theme from two of the articles, in which that famous book is once more dissected, and, in the judgment of the writers, "weighed and found wanting." A paper on "George Eliot's life, as illustrative of the religious ideas of our time," is a very able and readable critique.

Quaint Sermons of Samuel Rutherford, hitherto unpublished. With Preface by A. A. Bonar. Hodder & Stoughton. Those who delight in Rutherford's Letters will welcome these fresh flowers from the Anwoth garden. Additional interest attaches to the Sermons, as they are no mere expansion of notes, but evidently reported by a contemporary of Rutherford's, who entered deeply into the spirit of the preacher. The type is clear, the paper good, and the quaint Scotch phraseology is wisely preserved throughout, footnotes being affixed wherever the sense is really obscure.

Did Jesus Rise? By James H. Brookes. Gospel Book and Tract Depository, St. Louis. Under this simple title Dr. Brookes sends out an able and valuable little book. There is no attempt at novelty, or writing for effect. The conflicting theories of Strauss, Rénan and Keim are stated clearly and fairly, and then as clearly demolished by facts. While showing true sympathy for the unhappiness of doubters, the writer does not hesitate to expose the folly and perverseness of much that is styled free and advanced thought. We strongly recommend the book to preachers, teachers, and divinity students, as well as to those "honest sceptics" for whose benefit the book is specially written.

Mary Chute; or, Incidents in the Life of a Village Girl, by Mary Batchelor (Elliot Stock), is an excellent little book to put into the hands of those entering on domestic service.

A Service of Song, entitled Queen Victoria and Her Reign, is published in both notations, price 4d., by Messrs. Curwen, 4, Warwick-lane, E.C. The music is lively, and the connected readings most appropriate to the subject.

Mr. F. Longley has compiled and published a series of useful Holiday Guide Books to various parts of Scotland, to North Wales, Scarborough, and famous castles on the Great Western line. They are well illustrated, and are only a penny each.

A remarkably well written and finely illustrated Holiday Handbook is that to "The Hartz Mountains," edited by Percy Lindley, and published at 125, Fleet-street, E.C. (1d.) No traveller or tourist need be at a loss if he studies the clear and ample descriptions given by the compiler.

A third edition of Mrs. Hilton's paper, "Our Homes in Danger," has been issued (1d., National Temperance League), and may be perused with advantage by all Temperance reformers. On a different branch of the same subject, "Legislation on the Lines of Local Option," an admirable and conclusive lecture, was delivered by Mr. John Hilton, several months ago. It is also published at the National Temperance Depot, 337, Strand (price 2d.)

TRUE SELF-DENIAL.

ON the South-western line there is a small village in which lives a poor old couple. The old man is over 80, and his wife nearly the same age. They have had a large, trying family to bring up, amidst much poverty and hardship. Now they are left to the care of the parish, which allows them each 2s. 6d. a week, out of which they have to live and pay their rent, &c.

It happened one day when I was visiting this aged couple that I was talking to them about the dark benighted state of the people in India, especially the women. I read a few anecdotes from some of the Zenana reports. Mary and John were very much interested, and the old woman said, "John, we will each give a penny a week to help to send them the good news." "Yes," said John, "so we will." I tried to prevent them from doing so, as I felt that twopence a week out of their poor pittance was far too much for them to undertake; so I proposed to halve the amount, but still they wished to try.

I heard little more about the mission box which I had given them to put their pence in, until one Saturday afternoon about eighteen months after, when the servant came in and said old Mary wanted to see me. There in the kitchen stood the poor old woman with her box in her hand, heavy with pence, and asked to have it opened. 13s. 4d. proved to be the contents of it. Who can tell what self-denial and privation that 13s. 4d. represented? What a lesson for those whom God has furnished with abundance of silver and gold. E. J. P.

A NEW CAMPAIGN IN CHINA.

THE Rev. Henry Blodget, writing from Pekin, on May 8, to The New York Independent, with respect to the band of young China missionaries, headed by Messrs. Stanley Smith and Studd, says:—

At Shanghai they parted company, some to go by the river route to Han Chung, while Messrs. Smith, Cassel, and Hoste came with Mr. Bolles to Tientsin and Pekin, to go thence by land to Tai Yuan-fu and Ha Chung. At Tientsin the same blessing followed their labours. Some who had long halted between two opinions were brought to take a decided stand for Christ. At Peking their circular letter, inviting all to attend evangelistic services, brought together many who seldom or never before had been found in such places. Among them were Roman Catholics, a Greek Catholic, and Protestants of various denominations. All listened most attentively while Mr. Stanley P. Smith set forth with great eloquence and power the simple truths of the Gospel. The services lasted for ten successive evenings, while meetings were also held each afternoon in different parts of the city. The simplicity and earnestness of these young missionaries won all hearts, and their preaching of the Gospel was with unusual power. Mr. Stanley P. Smith is only twenty-four years of age, but he has the burning zeal and eloquence of a Zavier.

These brethren preach and teach the old Gospel in the spirit and power of such men as Finney and Kirk, Moody and Spurgeon. They have no new notions in regard to eschatology. They give themselves wholly to their work. The most remarkable thing in their preaching is their familiarity with and dependence upon the Bible. Their mouths are full of the most apt quotations from the Old Testament and the New, and they use these with great power. Their lives are marked by self-denial and prayer, with fasting. They visited no remarkable places in Pekin, saw no sights, wondered at nothing, but made it their one object, while here, to seek for themselves and for Christians the power of God's Spirit according to his promise.

There are now in Cambridge University forty men or more who are looking towards missionary work in the foreign field; a large number, also, in Oxford. From these old Universities fresh streams are issuing forth to gladden the desert wastes. One can but think in this connection of Yale and Harvard. Is this kind of religion dying out in these Universities? Have the officers and students in these seats of learning nothing to learn from the parent universities in the mother land?

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

GENEVA.—The Canton of Uri, the only one which had no Protestant place of worship, has this year ceased to be the exception, and now possesses a little church at Erstfield.

BUDA PESTH.—A Home has been opened here for giving hospitality to governesses and nurses, and for procuring situations for them. This Institution supplies a great want.

BELGIUM.—The twenty-seventh general reunion of the Alliance of Christian Unions of Young people in Belgium, was held this year at Antwerp. It includes fourteen Unions. The reports show satisfactory progress. Papers and pamphlets have been sent to soldiers. This is a most important work as the barracks are very centres of unbelief.

MORMONISM seems to have fallen upon evil times, and almost every day something happens to harrow up the souls of the Latter-day saints. No word of cheer comes from north, south, east, or west. For nearly a year they have watched and waited for the light to dawn; but the darkness has grown thicker instead. The worst was reserved for the last of June. Then Justice Field tarried a day in Salt Lake, en route for the Pacific Coast—he, the democratic judge, and whom the Mormons have always regarded as their champion; and he, even he, under the very shadow of the great temple, and not far, probably, from where Taylor and Cannon lie hidden for "the Gospel's" sake, uttered these words: "I believe it is the determination of the Government, so far as legal efforts are concerned, to continue the enforcement of the law."—New York Independent.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

LATYMER ROAD.—On the first Sunday in June a tent was opened in the Latymer-road, Notting-hill, in connection with the London City Mission, for the purpose of holding a series of Gospel services. Much spiritual blessing has attended the effort.

MOTHERWELL, N.B.—Mr. J. W. Moodie has held a series of meetings here. Every evening for two weeks the large tent was packed full, and every evening souls professed to be born again. Mr Moodie, having gone to Banff, the work here has been taken up by Mr. W. Spencer Walton.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—Special missions, which bid fair in most cases to become permanent, have just been commenced at Monkwearmouth, Great Marsden, Hereford, and Wakefield. Others are about to be begun at Leeds, St. Giles, Morpeth, Bethnal Green, Brandon, and other places.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.—We are leaving London on the 21st inst. for mission work among our Jewish brethren at Brighton. We shall therefore be thankful to Christian friends if they would kindly send us, up to August 25 (D.V.), suitable booklets and tracts for distribution.

PAUL WARSCHAWSKI.

52, Lansdowne-place, Brighton.

THE BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN has lately visited many of the most important towns of Lancashire, and is now in Yorkshire en route to Bridlington-quay, where we hope to hold meetings on the sands and elsewhere during the month of August. At each place we have visited, large and interesting crowds have stood to hear the Word.

WHARTON AND WEAVER.

MR. JAMES FLANAGAN, of Liverpool, has been working very successfully in Leicester for two weeks against the teachings of secularism. He is a very powerful controversialist. Discussion was allowed at the end of his lectures, and at several meetings the infidels made an attempt to defend their cause, but the lecturer sent the truth of God right home to the people's heart in his addresses.

HIGHBURY.—The mission by Mr. W. Forbes, at Highbury Corner Mission Hall, was continued for eleven days. Many pledges and blue ribbons were taken, and sinners professed conversion to God. Mr. Forbes afterwards conducted a six days' mission at the New Hall of the Highbury-vale Mission, which was brought to a close on Saturday night. He is now holding services for Dr. Barnardo, at the Edinburgh Castle.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Very interesting services in connection with this Mission were lately held on Killiney Sands, near Bray, co. Wicklow. They were the first of the kind ever attempted there, and the attendance was very encouraging for an initial effort. It is intended to continue the services weekly during the season.

S. A. MARTIN.

HUDDERSFIELD.—A good work is being done by Mr. Charles Clements, agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society. During the last ten days many copies of the Scriptures have been sold in this neighbourhood from the platform of the Society's Bible van, and a large number of Christian periodicals and religious tracts presented gratuitously. Crowds of the working class have gathered each night, and listened very attentively to the faithful and earnest words spoken.

CHESTERFIELD.—A breakfast and conference was lately held at the Ragged-school, Chesterfield, in connection with the Lodging-house Mission, when interesting statements were made bearing on this branch of Christian work. It was mentioned that at Sheffield, Clay Cross, and Bangor similar work is being done. In Chesterfield, for about fifteen years, a regular band of about thirty men and women have been carrying the tidings of salvation to the inmates of the common lodging-house.

SEVEN DIALS.—Amongst the most earnest workers in the good cause of Gospel Temperance must be numbered Mr. James Howard who, for upwards of twenty years has laboured well and earnestly in devoting his energies mainly to the enlightenment of that at one time dangerous vicinity, the "Dials." Mr. Howard is a speaker of considerable power. His varied experiences of twenty years of Temperance work stand him in good stead, and his reminiscences of the trials and difficulties in connection with Temperance work are extremely interesting. Secretaries of Temperance Societies would be amply repaid by availing themselves of Mr. Howard's services during his short absence from London; his address is 221, Pentonville-road, Pentonville, N.

PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The report before us reviews the work from its commencement, with narrations of timely help in answer to prayer. The mission ketch Annie, moored in Portsmouth Harbour, has witnessed to much good done through the preaching, &c., many having been saved. "The schooner Mystery has been in use along the coast of France, and has been wonderfully owned of God, being filled night after night with souls thirsting for the word of life." Mr. Henry Cook, Belle Vue Place, Stoke-road, or Sailors' Resort, Gosport, is superintendent.

TO SMOKERS.

By WILLIAM M. OATTS, Glasgow.

MY DEAR FRIEND,—If you are not a Christian, I do not want you to read the following lines; but if you profess to love Jesus, and desire to serve Him, will you give this appeal your prayerful consideration?

What has your pipe or cigar done for you? "It has been a good companion," you say, "it helps me in many ways; when I am tired it refreshes me, when I want to think out some difficult problem it calms my brain and enables me to get through my work. I don't know what I would do without my tobacco." Just so, my dear friend, you have become such a slave to your pipe, that without it you are miserable. Try to give up smoking and see what a terrible struggle it will be. Should you, a Christian, be under bondage to such a habit?

Have you ever calmly considered your position as a smoker? You say it is a very bad thing for a boy to smoke, it ruins his health, it excites his worst passions, and leads him into bad company. "If my boy smoked I would thrash him." What about your example? Boys want to be men, and they think it is manly to have a pipe in their mouth. You want to help these boys; "Christ pleased not Himself:" then will you not give it up for their sakes?

Think about the comfort of others? Every one does not smoke. To many the smell of tobacco is most unpleasant. I cannot walk along the street but I must inhale the smoke that comes out of the mouth of the man who is walking in front of me. I cannot go on the top of a car but I am subjected to the same inconvenience. Often, in the train, a smoker will come into a compartment for non-smokers, light his pipe, and make every one uncomfortable. But, you will say, you have the law in your own hands. I know I have, but I also know what it sometimes costs even to suggest such a thing. The majority of smokers are selfish, and think only of their own comfort and happiness. Should a Christian act thus?

Another consideration is the expense of the habit. You will be ready to answer, What is that to you? But you are a Christian. Did you ever take a note of how much your pipe cost you each year? Add it up. Don't be afraid to face the question. One shilling a week? Two pounds ten shillings a year! That would buy you a suit of clothes! You are a young man living at home, your father may have a struggle to keep things "straight," would that fifty shillings not be a great help? Your sister may find it difficult to get a new dress, but you, a Christian brother, spend as much as would "rig her out," and it has all gone off in smoke!

Do you know how much is spent in the United Kingdom every year on tobacco and snuff? £8,980,000!! For the conversion of the heathen the Christian world gives £1,050,000; but smokers waste eight times that amount on their own selfish gratification. I want to ask you, as a Christian young man—a member of the Church, I presume—do you contribute as much for the support of your congregation as you spend on tobacco? Ponder this question well and ask God's grace and guidance.

Are you a member of the Y.M.C.A.? I suppose a fourth of our membership are smokers. If they only spend 6d. a week each, their tobacco money would more than support the whole work we do for the 105,000 young men of Glasgow. The money element has much to do with you as a Christian young man, and you are responsible for the way you spend your money, when there is such a loud call for help both at home and abroad.

"When I began my ministry, I felt that God would have me give up the habit—that had been fixed on me from my boyhood—of smoking. It was quite a struggle, but I yielded to what I felt was God's will. I separated myself from it. I left it in the camp behind me; but there it was in plain sight. For five years I saw it, I loved it, it was a brother to me. It lured me back to itself by its fragrance and by its social nature, until at last, by subtle argument and gentle persuasion, after five years of separation, I found myself back again in the camp of the smokers, dancing round my 'calf,' again rejoicing in the 'burnt offering,' and regaling myself in its 'incense.' After years, the Lord once more called me to separate myself from my cigar. I thought of my former experience, I hesitated, I parleyed, I dallied with my idol, until I could withstand the Lord no more. So once more I separated myself from it; but with the remembrance of my old experience and the consciousness of my carnal love for it (never more strong than at that moment), I turned to the Lord and cried out to him, 'Lord, at thy bidding, I separate myself from this thing; but I know this separation will not be enduring unless I be separated from it as by death; my death to it—the death of my love for it. Let it henceforth be a dead thing to me.' And so, having prayed in substance this prayer, the Lord brought suddenly to my mind this passage of Scripture:—'Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord' (Rom. vi. 11). I knew in an instant that it was the sword of the Spirit by which I was to put to death that enemy, and so, seizing it, I girded it on and in the name of the Lord I consecrated myself upon my cigar and slew it. It is a dead thing now; it has no power to lure me; I see it often, but it is slain to me."

TRAVELLING CHILDREN.

A LADY, at Rochdale, has written to Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, for his views upon the formation of travelling schools for gipsy and van children, and he has replied as follows:—

"The subject of travelling school and mission vans to visit fairs, races, and feasts has been having my attention for some time. For mission purposes some God-fearing couples living in vans would do much good at fairs, but as a means to bring about the education of the gipsy and van children, the results will be doubtful. Of course much will turn upon what form the much-needed legislation will take to bring the 30,000 children living in the vans and tents under education and sanitary influences. The number of travelling children of this class we have among us should be lessened—not increased as the tendency would be if school vans were started—by bringing them under settled schoolmasters and into settled occupation.

"Our present day gipsies, and other travellers of this class are vastly on the increase. Through the tightness of town life, and the laxity of village and country life, many artisans and labourers have taken to travelling, with prospects that are very black for the children, and foreboding no good to the country.

"The canal, gipsy, and van children must not on any account be looked upon and treated as separate and distinct from the children of the working classes. All efforts put forth for the good of the travelling children must be focused on the main thing, viz.: that of the children being taught and encouraged to work for themselves and the welfare of the nation, in good producing channels as a stepping-stone to heaven. The mixing of the canal, gipsy, and van children in our public elementary schools will, in time, bring these results about.

"If the education of the gipsy and van children is to be conducted on wheels, a vast machinery will be required, and hundreds of vans will have to be set in motion, which will not be needed if an Act is passed on the lines I have sketched out, and which I have laid before the Government."

Notes on Daily Readings.

JULY 23.—PHILIPPIANS II.

v. 6.—"Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God."—"Counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God," R.V. The word in the Greek for "being" is rather "subsisting." "Its tense contrasted with the following aorist points to indefinite continuance of being."—Speaker's Commentary; which also gives the general sense of the verse thus: "Though He was from eternity God equal with the Father, yet He did not account His divine state a thing to be tenaciously grasped; but, on the contrary, stripped Himself of its glories." Though this is the interpretation of the passage agreed to by most modern critics of note, it is by no means satisfactory, seeing that the Greek word for "robbery" or "prize" is literally a thing to be seized or taken by force. The word itself occurs only here in N.T., but the verb from which it is formed occurs often, and almost always in the sense of forcible seizure. In three places (Matt. xi. 12, John vi. 15, Acts xxiii. 10) it is translated "take by force." If we give the word this its most natural meaning, it might be understood of our Lord thus: "Who, subsisting (as He did) in the form of God, did not deem the being on an equality with God a thing to be seized"—or taken forcibly from Him—but (nevertheless) He humbled Himself." Compare, as parallel expressions of thought, his own words referring to his human life, "No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself," John x. 18; also of the safety of his people, "Neither shall any pluck them out of my hand," John x. 28, where "pluck" is the very verb in question.

v. 10.—"At the name of Jesus."—"In the name," R.V. "The words do not admit the sense put on them by A.V. of reverence done to the name Jesus. . . . They can only signify that worship is to be done to Jesus (see Psalm lxiii. 4), or prayer is to be made through Jesus: of these the first is to be preferred."—S. C. Why not both? Those who now truly bow the knee in prayer through Jesus as a Saviour, are rendering that worship which those who refuse it now will be compelled to render hereafter to Jesus as a Judge.

v. 12.—"Work out your own salvation."—Not "work for" in order to get it, but having got it, work it out to its results; one important result being noticed in ver. 15, "Shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of life."

JULY 24.—PHILIPPIANS III.

v. 2.—"Beware of dogs."—"St. Paul retorts upon the Judaisers the term of reproach by which they stigmatised the Gentiles as impure."—Bishop Lightfoot.

"Evil workers."—"Not 'the workers of evil,' but such as, though they do a work, do it in a wrong spirit, on false principles, with evil results."—S. C.

v. 4.—"Though I might also have confidence in the flesh."—He assumes for a moment the position of the Judaisers, that he may show them how on their own ground he can surpass them. St. Paul's use of the word "the flesh" to cover his religious life shows that it does not mean merely the evil of the flesh, but includes the best that flesh can do. Unconverted human nature can be, as this passage shows, very religious.

v. 9.—"The righteousness which is of God by faith."—The Greek is literally, as noted in margin R.V., "upon faith," probably parallel to Rom. iii. 22, "unto and upon all them that believe." Compare also the figurative description of righteousness as a robe, Isaiah lxi. 10; Matt. xxii. 11; Luke xv. 22.

v. 11.—"If by any means I might attain."—This "expresses not doubt, but rather the eagerness that strives by all ways to reach its end."—Sp. Com.

The strong expression in the Greek, "the out resurrection from among the dead," clearly points to the first resurrection (Rev. xx. 4—6).

v. 12.—"Not as though I had already attained."—Better as R.V., "obtained." The Greek is literally "received" or "taken,"—viz., the prize.

JULY 25.—PHILIPPIANS IV.

v. 1.—This belongs properly to what has gone before, and should have stood as the close of the last chapter. In reference to the Lord's coming his words, "My joy and my crown," have a peculiar appropriateness. See 1 Thess. ii. 19, "What is our hope or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye, in the presence of our Lord Jesus, at his coming"?

v. 3.—"True yokefellow."—"It is doubtful whom the Apostle thus addresses. On the whole, however, it seems most probable that Epaphroditus, the bearer of the letter, is intended; for in his case alone there would be no risk of making the reference unintelligible by the suppression of the name."—Bp. Lightfoot.

"Help those women who laboured," &c. More accurately rendered by R.V. "help these women (referring to Euodias and Syntyche), for they laboured with me in the Gospel." "For the large part played by women in the first days of the Gospel at Philippi, see Acts xvi. 13—18, 40. These two may have been among the "women by the river side" (Acts xvi. 13).—Sp. Commentary.

v. 3.—"Whose names are in the Book of Life."—There would be little point in this way of describing genuine Christians—for that is evidently what the words mean—if their names might subsequently be blotted out. As to Rev. iii. 5, a promise not to do a thing does not prove that the thing may be done.

v. 5.—"Let your moderation," &c.—The word in Greek signifies "yieldingness," the being satisfied with less than one's due, and is opposed by Aristotle to the stickling for one's rights. On "the Lord is at hand" Bishop Lightfoot says, "The nearness of the Lord's advent is assigned as a reason for patient forbearance."

JULY 26.—COLOSSIANS I.

v. 2.—"To the saints and faithful brethren."—"This unusual addition is full of meaning. Some members of the Colossian Church were shaken in their allegiance, even if they had not fallen from it. The Apostle therefore wishes it to be understood that when he speaks of the saints, he means the true and steadfast members of the brotherhood."—Bishop Lightfoot.

v. 5.—"For the hope," &c.—R.V. gives the full force of the Greek preposition, "because of the hope." This is best joined with the immediately preceding "love to all the saints." Just as a common object of hope amongst men links together the hearts of those who are interested in that hope, so should "love to all the saints" be drawn forth "because of" the heavenly hope which is common to them all.

v. 6.—"Since the day ye heard (of it)."—These latter words should be struck out. They are not in the Greek, and mar the connection, which is well given in Revised Version, "Since the day ye heard and knew the grace of God in truth."

v. 10.—"Increasing in the knowledge of God."—The oldest reading is, "growing by the knowledge of God." Bishop Lightfoot says: "The simple instrumental dative represents the knowledge of God as the dew or rain which nurtures the growth of the plant (Deut. xxxii. 2; Hos xiv. 5)."

v. 12.—Hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance," &c.—Literally, "qualified us for the portion of the lot (or 'allotted portion') of the saints in the light." What this qualifying means the following verses show. As to the reference to "the allotted portion," Bishop Lightfoot remarks: "The inheritance of Canaan, the allotment of the promised land, here presents an analogy to, and supplies a metaphor for, the higher hopes of the new dispensation, as in Heb. iii. 7—iv. 11." "It is called lot to show that it is not won by our worth."—Chrysostom.

v. 16.—"By Him were all things created" ("in Him," &c., R.V.).—Almost all modern Commentators urge that this should be "in Him," but the Greek Commentators took it to mean "by."

v. 24.—"Fill up that which is behind," &c.—"The afflictions of Christ" are not the propitiatory sufferings which were his personally, but those common to the members of his mystical body. The sufferings, in fact, of Christ mystical, not personal.

JULY 27.—COLOSSIANS II.

v. 1.—"What great conflict I have for you."—There is a close connection between the Greek word for "conflict" and the verb "striving," in the last verse of the last chapter; to preserve which the R.V. renders this, "How greatly I strive for you." The reference is to conflict or striving in prayer, as in iv. 12.

v. 2.—"The mystery of God . . . Christ."—The words omitted are now rejected by all critical texts. R.V. renders it, "the mystery of God, even Christ."

v. 6.—"As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, (so) walk ye in Him."—The "so" is better omitted as not being in the Greek, and as seeming to imply that they are to walk in the same manner as they had received Christ, whereas it is simply "seeing ye have received Christ, walk in Him." Only those who have received Him can be exhorted to walk in Him.

v. 7.—"Rooted and built up in Him."—The tenses of these verbs should be expressed thus, "having been rooted and being built up in Him."

v. 10.—"And ye are complete in Him."—The R.V. preserves the close connection between the Greek for "complete" and the previous word "fulness," by rendering this "in Him ye are made full."

v. 11.—"Putting off the body . . . of the flesh."—"Of the sins of" rightly omitted by R.V., with the vast majority of ancient authorities.

v. 12.—"Buried with Him in baptism."—As this is in apposition with "the circumcision made without hands," it cannot refer to the mere ordinance of baptism, which cannot be administered without hands, but points rather (as the definite article in the Greek implies) to "that baptism" "wherein also ye were raised with Him through faith in the working of God who raised Him from the dead," (R.V.); in other words, to baptism as administered by the Spirit—the baptism into Christ's death spoken of in Romans vi. 3.

v. 14.—"The handwriting of ordinances that was against us."—"Ordinances" does not here mean ceremonial rites, but "decrees." It is literally "the against-us-handwriting by its decrees," and the reference seems to be to the Ten Commandments viewed as a bond which Israel had accepted as such. Bishop Ellicott says, "The Jewish people might be said to have signed the contract when they bound themselves by a curse to observe all the enactments of the law." But the reference is probably to Exodus xxiv. 3—7.

JULY 28.—COLOSSIANS III.

v. 1.—"If ye then be risen with Christ."—This is the counterpart of what was said ii. 20, "If ye be dead with Christ." Believers are called to participate in the resurrection as well as in the death of Christ. They professed this participation in baptism. The Apostle's exhortation is founded on this profession. If it be so, let the fruits appear; let death with Christ be death to legalism, let life with Christ be life of heavenly-mindedness.

v. 2.—"Set your affection."—Better in R.V. "Set your mind on the things that are above."

v. 10.—"Which is renewed in knowledge."—R.V. is more accurate: "Which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of Him that created Him." Does not this mean that the renewal which is taking place in the sphere of the new man is tending to his being known after the image, &c? God's image is again being reproduced, so as to be known.

v. 13.—"Forgiving one another, if any man have a complaint (R.V.) against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."—Compare John xiii. 14: "If I, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet."

v. 15.—"Let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts."—"Rule" here is literally "act as umpire." He refers to the quarrels or disputes alluded to in the previous verses. The peace of Christ should act as umpire in settling such disputes.

JULY 29.—COLOSSIANS IV.

v. 5.—"Redeeming the time."—Literally (as in margin R.V.), "buying up the opportunity." "A metaphor taken from mercantile life. Eagerly purchasing, as it were, each golden opportunity for helping forward the cause of Christ."—Sp. Com.

v. 6.—"Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt."—"The Apostle is not speaking of Attic, but of sacrificial salt; not of wit, but of sanctity."—Ibid.

v. 6.—"How ye ought to answer every man."—Literally, "each single man." "Their speech is not to be vague and declamatory, but to be appropriate to the individuals to whom it is addressed, to their wants and feelings."

v. 14.—"Luke, the beloved physician."—Bishop Lightfoot remarks: "It has been observed that St. Luke's first appearance in company with St Paul (Acts xvi. 10) nearly synchronises with an attack of the Apostle's constitutional malady (Gal. iv. 13, 14), so that he may have joined him partly in a professional capacity. This conjecture is, perhaps, borne out by the personal feeling which breathes in the word beloved."

v. 16.—"Ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicæa."—"There are good reasons for the belief that St. Paul here alludes to the so-called Epistle to the Ephesians, which was, in fact, a circular letter addressed to the principal churches of Proconsular Asia."—Bishop Lightfoot.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

There is a prospect of this Bill passing into law this Session; but Christians ought not to rest until it has received the ROYAL SIGNATURE, but continue to pour petitions into the Commons, and write to Members of Parliament to support the measure. Further, watch to see how Members vote.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Dear Christian Friends,

Kindly allow me to commend to your thoughtful attention and sympathy the Annual Record just published of another year's PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK in connection with the above Mission.

Partly in consequence of the extra expenditure incurred in fitting up our new Commodious Home for Discharged Prisoners, and partly from enforced absence through ill health, our finances are more than £1000 behind. This is a serious deficiency at this season of the year, when so many of the Lord's people are away from home, for rest and recreation; but, relying on the assurance of the Faithful Promiser, we await delivering help as in all the past.

The Report can be had free of charge on application. Sincerely yours,

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.

Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England: and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Mission and other Appeals.

ANY contributions of work for sale, in aid of a Fund for a "Retreat" for wearied workers in the Lord's vineyard, will be gladly received by Mrs. Philip, Free Church Manse, Carnoustie, N.B.

HACKNEY Y.M.C.A.—This branch has arranged for a series of special meetings during the present week in a large tent behind the premises. Addresses are to be delivered on "Gospel Temperance," "Social Purity," &c. The committee appeal for help in meeting the expenses, which will amount to £60. The secretary is Mr. F. L. Porter, Y.M.C.A., The Grove, Mare-street, Hackney, E.

NOEL PARK, Wood Green, London, has naturally attracted the builder; and the Artisans' Dwellings Company have built many streets of small houses. Noel Park, as the estate is called, will soon be the residence of thousands of operatives. The Presbyterian Church, Wood Green, of which Rev. Duncan Macrae is pastor, desire to erect a place for Gospel preaching. About £1000 in land and building, on a 999 years' lease, will provide a hall for evangelistic effort. Rev. Duncan Macrae, Arran Villa, Wood Green, London, N., will receive contributions.

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION (4, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W.)—During 1883 the committee were enabled, by the generosity of numerous friends, to increase eight annuities from £20 to £25, and it is gratifying to note that this fund has recently shown evidence of special activity. Mrs. Macdonald, of Herne-hill, S.E. (to whom all donations for the Augmentation Fund should be sent), has volunteered to devote her energies to this branch of the Association as hon. secretary. They earnestly appeal for co-operation in this good work. Two hundred and seventy-eight annuitants in receipt of the smaller amount are anxiously waiting for the larger sum, and every £50 collected enables the committee to increase one annuity.

NATIONAL REFUGES AND TRAINING SHIPS.—Owing to the great depression in trade and commerce during the last three years, there was a deficiency in the income of the National Refuges and Training Ships over the expenditure for those years amounting to £5860 9s. 7d. This debt greatly interferes with the work the Committee are anxious to carry on for the welfare of the destitute children of London and the provinces. It has been suggested that this amount might be raised if thirty friends would each give £100, and sixty other friends would each give £50. Thus £6000 would be raised, and this great and noble charity freed from debt. Names and addresses of those willing to contribute will be thankfully received by Mr. William Williams, Secretary, Boys' Refuge, 25, Great Queen-street, Holborn.

WOOLWICH AND PLUMSTEAD.—We have had for many years eight City missionaries labouring in this district, but from the very commencement we have failed to raise the full amount required by the Central Committee as a guarantee. They inform us that they will be reluctantly compelled to take away two of the missionaries unless more is raised. Our neighbourhood is poor, and that makes the need for the missionaries greater, while it increases the difficulty of collecting the money for their support. There is no part of London where the missionary is more wanted, and where he is likely to do better work. The population of Plumstead alone is increasing at the rate of a thousand a year, which creates a most urgent demand for more missionaries; instead of being able to obtain them, we have to face the threatened withdrawal of some of those already at work. Donations will be received by the treasurer, Mr. T. R. Richardson, Matlock Villa, Hanover-road, Plumstead.

FULHAM.—The special meetings held last week in the tent in Lillie-road by the Railway Mission were most encouraging, and a number professed to turn to the Lord. The Railway Mission and the London City Mission are working this tent together, taking alternate weeks, and they hope to continue throughout the summer. A Railway Mission Hall is about to be built in the Lillie-road, and will be opened early in October. The District Railway men are chiefly located in this neighbourhood. Helpers in the Tent Mission will be welcomed. Particulars of Mr. D. Spencer, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, July 18, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? And amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Moravian Missions in Labrador—V. W. £5.

Mrs. Robertson acknowledges gratefully, "Gathered Pence," 2s., for peasants in the Pyrenees suffering from the floods.

Mrs. Barker Harrison gratefully acknowledges for "One Tun" Day in the Country, from a few friends, Ireland, £4.

The Committee of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen gratefully acknowledge a donation of £50 from W. W. towards the cost of the Society's work in the North Sea trawling fleets.

CAIRO.—In a recent letter, Mr. B. Cooper Seed says:—"I look forward each week to my CHRISTIAN with great expectation. We are here cut off from much that ought to help us in our spiritual life, and have to contend, almost single-handed, against impurity and drink, too horrible to contemplate! Two hundred cases are in the Citadel Hospital at the present time. The racecourse and the gambling-table are the fashion; yet there are some who do not bow the knee to Baal." Mr. Seed will be thankful to receive by book post, free, copies of The British Workman, Cottager and Artisan, Friendly Greeting, Friendly Visitor, Sunday at Home, Leisure Hour, or Herald of Mercy. Cairo being in the Postal Union, parcels may be sent at the same postage rates as in England. Address, Mr. B. Cooper Seed, Army Scripture Reader, Cairo, Egypt.

"'ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'JEHOVAH SHAMMAH,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mrs. E. BURGOYNE, HULL.

This patient applied to me in February last year. She had always been delicate, but had now been twelve months especially ill—hacking cough, blood-spitting, pains in the chest, spasmodic difficulty of breathing and palpitation; loss of flesh in face, arms, and legs.

At the time my advice was sought the patient was confined to her room. Pleurisy and inflammation had prostrated her, followed by congestion of the right lung (such was the doctor's report). "I get no rest (she says) from coughing night or day, and my chest is very sore."

In less than a month she writes:—"I have quite lost the pain; my chest feels stronger, so that I can bear the cough better than before. The expectoration is more free." Directions were given with a view to soothing the cough, and stronger aperient medicine prescribed.

Subsequent letters reported continued improvement. On the 29th December last I received a letter in which she says:—"I am happy to tell you that, by God's blessing on your medicine, I am quite a different woman to what I was. I am strong now, and able to do my work. My doctor said last February (Feb., 1884) he could only patch me up. I shall recommend you to all that I know who suffer with their chest."

I wrote to inquire if this patient continued well, and received a letter dated June 1, in which she says: "I have had no symptoms of any return of my complaint, and am quite restored to health. Make any use you like of this.—E. BURGOYNE."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

MANNA CAKE.

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1s. 3d. per packet of one doz., of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of BARCLAY'S; EDWARDS; HOVENDEN'S; NEWBERY'S; MAY ROBERTS; SANGER & SONS; SUTTON & CO.; &c., &c.

"THE CHRISTIAN" for July 2 (price 2d.), containing Full Reports of the MILDMAY CONFERENCE, may still be had.

AFTER YEARS OF AGONY.

REV. F. A. VINCENT, B.D., Rector of Elsted, Trayford, &c., writes:—"Dec. 23, 1884,—I shall be glad to reply at my own expense, to all inquiries as to the effect of the invaluable remedy 'Tikheel' After taking two bottles I derived benefit I never could have anticipated, after suffering many years of agony. I had in vain tried all specifics known, as well as consulting physicians. I hope this testimonial, if it will not requite you will at least exhibit my gratitude."

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve. And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Dear Christian Friends,

Kindly allow me to commend to your thoughtful attention and sympathy the Annual Record just published of another year's PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK in connection with the above Mission.

Partly in consequence of the extra expenditure incurred in fitting up our new Commodious Home for Discharged Prisoners, and partly from enforced absence through ill health, our finances are more than £1000 behind. This is a serious deficiency at this season of the year, when so many of the Lord's people are away from home, for rest and recreation; but, relying on the assurance of the Faithful Promiser, we await delivering help as in all the past.

The Report can be had free of charge on application. Sincerely yours,

4, Ampton-street, Regent's-square, W.C. GEORGE HATTON.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

SAVE YOUNG GIRLS FROM THE SNARE OF THE DESTROYER.

I have much pleasure in making known to the Readers of The Christian that my Committee of the Homes have determined to further extend efforts on behalf of REALLY FRIENDLESS YOUNG GIRLS attached to the PARSONS' GREEN HOMES. There is a dilapidated old house which is to be taken down, REBUILT, and adapted as indicated above. THE FATHER OF THE FATHERLESS has already graciously provided A GREATER PART of the required outlay, and it is believed that He will dispose the hearts of HIS stewards to supply all that will be wanted. WHO WILL HELP? I shall be pleased to SEND FULL PARTICULARS in answer to inquiries.

Office, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W. EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will as usual receive donations for general purposes, or for the above special object.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,

10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer the Rt Hon. the Lord Mayor, M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P. Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

GREAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to
Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

LIVERPOOL BETH-SHAN Faith Healing Home, 11, Great George-square. Meetings every Tuesday, 7.30, and Friday, 3 o'clock, Sunday, 7.30.—Address Miss Bailey.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

CONVALESCENT AND SEASIDE HOME, Beach Rocks, Sandgate, Kent.—Admission by small weekly payments, with recommendation by subscriber or by arrangement.—For particulars, apply to Henry H Board, London Samaritan Society, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C.

OPEN-AIR MISSION. — Thirty-second Report, illustrated, 4d. Tracts, Scripture cards, and hymn sheets, at reduced rates, may be had at the office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C. Treasurer, Lord Kinnaird; Hon. Sec John MacGregor, Esq., M.A.; Secretary, Gawin Kirkham.

A PROPHETIC CONFERENCE will be held (D.V.) in the Council Room, Exeter Hall, on Thursday, July 30, at 3 p.m., and 7 p.m. Several clergymen and various laymen will speak, and remarks are invited from Prophetic Students.

Educational.

HIGH-CLASS SCHOOL, in Highgate, London.—Rev. G D. Bartlet, M.A., receives twelve Boarded Pupils (from nine years). Thorough grounding, individual attention. Careful Christian training, and a superior home. Among 2,385 candidates, in Latin (last Local Cambridge Examination), a pupil of this school stood fourth in merit. Highgate is strongly recommended by the medical profession. Reference permitted to Rev. W. Boardman, 3, Highbury-place, London and Rev. Chas. Graham, Shepherd's bush.

MOUNT RADFORD SCHOOL, Exeter.—During the last ten years pupils have gained upwards of 150 certificates in the Oxford Cambridge, College of Preceptors and London University Examinations. Sixteen of these passed in honours, and ten obtained prizes. In June last a pupil passed the London University Matriculation Examination in the First Division. The Word of God is made the sole basis of a prayerful Christian training, and only Christian tutors are engaged. A lady for juniors.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. Fleming can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful, Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations which are optional. Resident foreign and English governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 guineas.

EDUCATION.—High-class School for Young Ladies.—Finishing masters, certificated governesses, and personal supervision, with home comforts. Pupils prepared for any examination. Instruction made pleasant, and no overworking countenanced. Terms moderate and inclusive. Highly recommended by parents of pupils and Rev. C H. Spurgeon. Prospectus on application to Mrs. Hale, A C.P., 1, Carlton Mansions, Clapham-rise, London, S.W.

"Balham, May 29, 1880.

"I am very reluctant to recommend schools, because I am not always able to judge of the interior arrangements; but in this case I have the utmost pleasure in standing as reference. I can highly commend Mrs Hale, and have the greatest confidence in her capacity, management, and character, having known her for several years.
"C. H. Spurgeon."

GERMANY.—Coblence on the Rhine.—Fraulein Von Griesheim receives a select number of pupils, to whom she offers every attention and home comfort. Highest musical advantages. Eminent professors. English church regularly attended. Terms, inclusive, 120 guineas per annum. Highest references from the German nobility and clergy. This Institution is transferred from Diez to Coblence, the summer residence of the German Empress, by the express wish of Her Majesty, who takes a special interest in the British community there.

BEDFORD. — Melrose House. — Principals, the Misses Ray, daughters of the late Rev. R. Ray. Pupils received for high-class education and board. Personal supervision, with Christian training and home comforts. Preparation for Cambridge and other Local Examinations when desired.

MORAVIAN EDUCATION.—Fulneck, near Leeds. Established 1750. Apply to Miss Shawe for the Ladies' School, and to the Rev. W. T. Titterington for the Boys' School.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. Thorn, Paddington, London.

MALVERN HOUSE SCHOOL.—The rapid growth of this School has necessitated enlargement of premises. Two good houses have been made into one large detached house. There is now splendid accommodation for Boarders. Kind and careful training. Good home. Boys prepared for public schools. A kindergarten for the younger children. Orphans, and children of parents living abroad, received. Sisters may accompany brothers. Highest references to parents of pupils. Next term begins September 23, 1885.—Principal, Miss Davies, Malvern House, Lewisham-park, Kent.

THE OLD HALL SCHOOL, Wellington, Shropshire. — Principal, Dr. Cranage, M.A.; Vice-Principal, Robert Weston, Esq., B.A., T.C.D.; and masters for different branches of study. The School is recommended by: Edwin Arrowsmith, Esq.; Dr. Barnardo; The Editor of The Christian Herald, Rev. Michael Baxter; Rev, Dr Bullinger, Walthamstow; W. S. Caine, Esq., M P.; Rev. Dr. Flavel Cook, Lock Hospital; Thomas Cooper, Lecturer on Christianity, Lincoln; The Editor of Word and Work; Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson; Mrs. Pennefather; The Rev. Dr. Talmage; Reginald Radcliffe, Esq.; Rev. Denham Smith; Dr. Gilbert Smith; W. Hind Smith, Esq.; Joseph Weatherley, Esq.; Rev. John Wilkinson. The next term will begin (D.V.) Thursday, September 24. Full particulars on application to the Principal.

YOUR BOYS will have a happy Home and sound Education with Mr. and Mrs. Dixon, Middle-class School, Kingston-on-Thames. Christian influence unlimited diet; beautiful neighbourhood. 20 to 25 guineas.

TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—First-class Education for the daughters of gentlemen in a school where only a limited number is received. Religious training and the formation of mind and character are the essential objects of attention. Finishing masters. Individual attention, with home comforts. French and German constantly spoken, and where necessary, the summer holidays are spent on the Continent for the benefit of the languages. References kindly permitted to the clergy of the neighbourhood, officers in the Army and Navy, and the parents of pupils.—For particulars and prospectus, address Lady Principal, Baines' Printing Office, Fairfax-place, South Hampstead.

EDUCATIONAL HOME for the Daughters of Gentlemen, Fair View, 89, Cazenove-road, Stamford-hill, London, N.—Miss Brown and Miss Good (who for ten years conducted Mrs. Pennefather's Educational Institute at Clapton House) receive 20 Resident Pupils. First-class education, with careful Christian training and home comforts. Preparation for the University Local Examinations. Children from India and the Colonies received, and lovingly cared for. References kindly permitted to Mrs. Pennefather, J. E. Mathieson, Esq., and others. Prospectuses on application.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in, which in all now amount to £300. Thanks to kind helpers. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE
THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE
MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers Society."

HOMES OF HOPE.

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of Penitent Fallen Young Women.

Special efforts are made on behalf of young mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications for admission every day are very distressing, and the Committee are very urgently in need of funds to carry on the work.

THE PROPHETS OF PEACE.—2.

Ezekiel xiii.

IN concluding our study of these words, let us remember that they are a message of mercy. We may measure the love which speaks by the length of its remonstrance and by the variety of the considerations to which attention is directed. Mere annoyance or anger would speak only in indignant condemnation—a spirit that sought to smite would say its fiercest and turn away. But the Spirit of God lingers. It explains, reasons, expostulates, threatens. It is unsparing in its exposure of the wrong that is being done, and unflinching in its description of the vengeance which will be exacted; and why? Because upon its imparting a right sense of he sin and the danger depends the victory t seeks to win. It would turn them while et there is time, not torment them before he time. Behind the sternness there is the Father's love, and over all there is written: "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: e zealous therefore, and repent."

We have been told whence springs the estimony of those who prophesy peace when here is no peace, and we have now to hear God's estimate of their work. Too often has t seemed a light thing that such work should e done among our churches, and we ourselves, in our desire to be fair, may have spoken admiringly of the sincerity of these men and their fearless following of what they eem to be the truth. And all this might be well enough if the matter ended there, if heir work had no results. But they are asting seeds into the deepest thought and eeling of humanity, they are sowing iligently in the great field of God, and who an help asking, What will the harvest be? hey are too numerous, too able, too popular, ot to leave their impress upon the age, and o mould the belief of very many. I should e glad to think that the danger is ver, and that their numbers and nfluence are declining, but they must ave small knowledge, indeed, of the times, ho can console themselves with this ssurance. The tokens are only too numerous hat the very opposite is the case. There is, r one thing, the quiet acceptance of the new aching as a necessary evil. It is recognised ready as too powerful to contend against, nd those who would lift up a cry of warning re admonished by their own friends that heir wisdom lies in silence. I do not believe prosecutions for heresy, but there are hurches which do believe in them, and hich dare not prosecute for teaching, the very aming of which twenty years ago would ave secured its instant condemnation and xpulsion. The roots of error have gone o deep to be torn up without rending e churches asunder. Equally significant the fact that the men of the new hool know their strength, and have creased in boldness. It is no longer necessary to disguise their sentiments by attaching their own meaning to well-known words, and seeming to teach doctrines which they deny. It is no longer necessary even to confine themselves to hints. The churches are familiarised with statements respecting the Word of God to which a dozen years ago they would no more have listened than they would have thought of denying the Lord that bought them; and one church, but lately among the most scrupulously orthodox in any land or any time, circulates a manual for its Bible-clasess which contains teaching regarding the Book of Genesis as thoroughly rationalistic as was ever published in Germany.

All this shows beyond a doubt that the evil is growing and that the end is not yet. Of what nature then are the results we may expect from this movement? We take our question into the light of these words of God, and we learn first of all that those who vaunt themselves as truer prophets than they who cleave to God's Word and way come to deepen a desolation already begun. This is indicated in a simile which the Israelites could easily understand, "O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts," or, as the Revised Version translates, "the waste places," the ruins. The foxes follow in the wake of a nobler life. They make their abode in the ruins where the tread of man's foot is no longer heard, where silence has fallen on the busy hum of human life, and the empty dwellings have ceased to know the joys and the sanctities of home. And they come to complete the desolation which attracts them. They burrow beneath the crumbling walls, and hasten their overthrow. How apt is the parable!

The very fact that such prophets abounded was eloquent of the condition of Israel. Their numbers and influence told a tale of terrible declension. It revealed that the nobler life, whose presence would have scared them in their first approach, had passed away. Had it been with Israel as once it was; had they loved the Lord, and hearkened to his Word, and rejoiced in his service, these had never drawn near, or had shown themselves only to flee. There would then have been no place for rebellion or unbelief, or the faintest suggestion that God's Word was to be trifled with. But the spirit of loyalty had gone. The ordinances of worship were preserved, there were sacrifices and assemblies and times for prayer. The name of God was still invoked, the Law was read, the Prophets were listened to, so far as the mass of the people was concerned, with decorum. But all this seeming devotion was only the lingering shadow of a life which had departed. Israel's heart no longer sought unto God, and the magnificent Temple of Jewish faith and worship stood empty and desolate. All this was declared by the fact that the foxes were already there. And the results of their occupancy would soon be apparent. They entered to change the desolation into a hopeless ruin. The seeming fidelity to Jehovah and his truth would soon be undermined and overthrown, and the great law of God's kingdom, "From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath," would find another illustration. This law still holds, and the parable applies as fully to our own times as it did to those of the Prophet. We can read the condition of the churches in the character of their teachers. The foxes find a home and thrive and multiply only in the midst of desolation. It is not where the heart is filled with childlike trust in God, and glowing love to Jesus, that scepticism and false teaching find their natural home. In the midst of that Christlike life even doubt is dumb. It is when love has waxed cold, when faith has become a tradition, and worship a form, when God is honoured only with the lip, and the life has turned into the world's ways—it is then that the foxes find their abode prepared. It is amid hypocrisy and corruption that unbelief finds its home and its work. And it comes for judgment. The deserted holy place must no longer wear the semblance of a city of habitation. The God of truth will make appearance and reality correspond, and towers and battlements and homes will fall. There is a force of honest sincerity in unbelief with which hypocrisy cannot cope. It will not be hindered from attacking shams, no matter how venerable or sacred they are deemed to be. It cannot be awed into silence by the pompous rebukes of disturbed propriety, nor will it be terrified by the impotent wrath of men who desire merely to be let alone. But what of the work of those who complete the desolation? What horror must fall on the heart of the man who realises that he has spent his life, and taxed to the utmost the abilities which God gave him, to cast down the only resting-place for man's soul, his only meeting-place with God—that He has met the wanderers only to involve them in the mazes of a labyrinth from which there shall be no escape—that he has wiled away the children, erring though they were, so that they should never reach the Father's home!

But not only do they deepen the desolation, they refuse the work to which God calls them: "Ye have not gone up into the gaps, nor made up the hedge, for the house of Israel to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord" (ver. 5). There are things enough to smite with withering scorn, and to sweep ruthlessly away. And there are things to build and to restore. They could have slain the untruth and hypocrisy which keep the heart of professing Christianity far away from the touch of re-creating love, and its neck from the yoke of God's commandments. They could have removed the weakness and shame, and left instead glory and strength. But they have not taken the trouble even to view the people's need; they have not gone up into the gaps, nor striven to make a hedge between Israel and her swiftly-advancing judgment. But, on the contrary, they have helped men to withstand their Saviour. "When one buildeth up a wall, behold they daub it with untempered mortar" (ver. 10, R.V.). The antipathies which men have set up between themselves and the truth of God, and the unfounded hopes behind which they make their refuge, these have been covered with cement, and made to wear an appearance of consistency and strength. They justify their refusal to listen to God's words, to be moved by his threatenings, or to be won by the his assurances of his mercy. They have done nothing to stay the inroads of sin, and they have done everything to withstand the light and the truth which lead to God's holy hill and to his tabernacle.

We might have glanced at what the Scripture says of the false prophets' doom. The darkening of Israel's day is for them the setting-in of eternal night. "Mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity. . . They shall not be in the assembly (council) of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing (register) of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel" (ver. 9). The mercy that waits to pardon and to bless will not remain for ever. In the darkening of the day of the earthly life there is hope for many: there is none for these. In the joy of the ingathering of God's own they will have no share. Their voices will be no more heard in their council, for the leadership that has been abused will be taken away. And their citizenship will cease, their names will not be found in the Lamb's book of life; and no place, not even the meanest, will be theirs in the land of rest.

And not only will there be loss; they will bear the burden of their shame, and eat of the fruit of their doings. "Lo! when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said to you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it? Therefore, thus saith the Lord God, I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury . . . . and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst of it" (vv. 12—14). But on this picture of woe who can dwell? Let us rather see to it that we are free from the guilt of this great conspiracy against God, for the guilt rests not only on those who blot out the one atoning sacrifice for sin, and laugh at the idea of God revealing Himself by means of a book, it is found on those too, who hear, week after week, the testimony that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," but who calmly remain sin's servants, and refuse the grace purchased by the agony of the only-begotten Son of God.

Our very attitude may discredit the Divine testimony as much as spoken words can. The guilt is found, too, on those who profess to revere God's Word, but who never search it, and whose hearts are never solaced, or hallowed, or quickened by its ministry—who profess to believe, but who go from day to day with uncheered heart and unchanged life, and who have nothing but contempt for a more childlike trust and a more earnest life than their own. Let the Word of God search us, and separate us from the evil, and give us a place among those whose work and hope find their description in those other words of God: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

HOREDITCH.—The Hackney-road Mission, Union-street, celebrated its sixteenth anniversary on Monday, the 20th instant. George Williams, Esq., presided; and the Rev. Gordon Calthorp, M.A., and others addressed the meeting. The report for the past year was read by the Hon. Superintendent, Mr. John Girling, and the meeting, hallowed and hopeful, terminated with praise and prayer.

"THE LABOUR TRAFFIC IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC."

SIR,—In The Times of June 20, a letter appeared from the Agent-General of Queensland on this subject, in which he says:—"From information received, I can affirm that the colonists of Queensland have been as much startled and incensed by the acts of cruelty and treachery disclosed in the Report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the Labour Trade in New Guinea, as are the people of this country, and will be as ready as they are to bring the perpetrators of these acts to justice, and make the repetition of them impossible." He adds, "The Government of Mr. Griffith, in 1883, carefully prepared a series of regulations and instructions, which it was thought would secure the prevention of further abuses; but the employers of the black labour complained loudly of the stringency of these regulations and of their 'cast-iron' character, asserting that they were calculated to strangle the sugar industry."

He further says:—"The German Government, in considering the regulations for the Labour Traffic in the Southern Pacific, were of opinion that those provided by Queensland were sufficient, and Dr. Krauel, the German, and Mr. Thurston, the English, representatives, were of the same opinion, as lately appointed to inquire into such matters in the Southern Pacific."

As I have been an eye-witness of the working and atrocities of this "Labour Traffic" on the South Sea Islands from its commencement, I wrote a letter in reply to the Agent-General's to The Times on the 22nd, which I am informed has not been published. In the interests of humanity, and for the honour of our British name, I will feel obliged if you can lay the following statement before your readers.

From my many letters published regarding the character and doings of this "Labour Traffic," all through its history so steeped in the blood of its wronged sufferers, and marked by atrocities from its beginning up till the present, it must now be clear to all that laws and regulations have failed to prevent them; though, for a time, the employers and collectors have heralded every new law or regulation as having now placed the labour traffic in the Pacific under such restrictions as completely to prevent the recurrence of such evils in it. But, alas! the evils were only cloaked for a time, for they reappear again on all hands. This shows that they are inseparable from such a traffic in the persons of men and women. The Report of the Queensland Commission confirms the truth of all we have said and written regarding this traffic, with its cruelties and atrocities, all through its history, on the New Hebrides and adjoining islands, where it has swept away over a third of the entire population, and that the youth and most active working part of the people.

Great Britain built and maintained at great expense five gunboats for some years on the islands to prevent such kidnapping and cruelty in this traffic as were exposed in the shocking "Carl" case, where Dr. Murray and his ship's company, in fiendish delight, shot and murdered almost a whole ship's load of defenceless islanders and threw their bodies overboard, as others have done.

Britain, Queensland, and Fiji, have passed laws, and restrictions, and regulations, licensing all ships engaged in the traffic, laying their captains under heavy bonds not to break the laws, and sending Government agents with those ships to see that the laws were strictly observed; in all this I believe they have done all that is possible. All the ships now profess to carry interpreters to explain agreements, &c., to the natives, but they are trained decoys, savages, and cannibals, who are armed by the captain or agent with revolvers, and engaged by force and fraud to get the islanders into the white man's hands and power.

When, by reporting kidnapping frequently year after year with fearful atrocities on the islands, we have shown that all the laws, regulations, restrictions, bonds, Government agents, and gunboats, did not prevent the constant recurrence of such evils in this sad labour traffic, yet the planters, collectors, Government agents, and its many interested defenders, with one voice, in the press and in pamphlets, wrote much to show that, owing to such laws and restrictions in Queensland and Fiji, such evils had all been swept away from the traffic, and made it impossible for them again to be committed in it. But the printed Report of the Royal Commission now before me clearly proves that this "Traffic," as lately begun in New Guinea, under all the most improved laws and restrictions and regulations, is unchanged in its character for deception, kidnapping, and murder. Let the reader imagine what it was before Britain imposed the restrictions which are now by so many considered sufficient for its regulation. Alas for our remaining islanders if Germany also legalises this blood-stained traffic as now conducted alike by the ships of all nationalities engaged in it!

The Report of this Commission ought to fill the heart of every true Briton with indignation and shame. It is a hideous record of perfidy, cruelty, and murder practised by Englishmen against defenceless, unoffending islanders—in which six vessels are involved. The Report is a singularly able document, "chiefly due to the presence on the Commission of W. Kinnaird Risk, a new arrival in the Colony, a member of the Scottish Bar." Certainly such a Report ought now to give the death-blow to this labour traffic, and lead to its complete suppression by Britain and Germany. Is it right that they or any civilised nation should sanction by law and continue the traffic, when every possible method has been tried to prevent oppression, kidnapping, and murder, without effect?

Before I left the islands to come to Great Britain, the boats of the Seora, Queensland labour vessel, went on shore at Erromanga; the ship's interpreter, a savage cannibal from Tanna, by force dragged the chief's daughter into his boat, and with his revolver sent a ball into the side of one of her father's men, and sent another ball through the breast of her father, leaving him writhing in the agony of death before his daughter's eyes as they bound her in the boat to carry her off to the plantation in Queensland. Of course, she would be entered as a free labourer, leaving of her own accord to work for the planters.

On that island, on that day, the same interpreter shot dead on the spot one of our Christian native teachers, because he could not drag him into his boat by force. He then went north with the vessel to carry out the same deadly work at other islands, as reported to one of H.M. men-of-war at the time. This was done by a licensed vessel, under a heavy bond, with an agent on board, under the most recent "cast-iron" restrictions, &c. Yet we are informed that the German Government and Dr. Krauel and Mr. Thurston think them sufficient to justify English and German vessels carrying on this dreadful traffic, to supply labour for the sugar plantations in their colonies.

Alas for the fate of the poor islanders! It must be extermination at no distant day! Even in Queensland the islanders work from ten to fourteen hours a day. They are supposed, by law, to get 4d. per day. In Fiji the labour laws give them 2d. per day. At such wages planters employ from 200 to 00 of them on a single plantation, who would otherwise have to pay white men from 5s. to 8s. per day for doing the same work, which white men could not do so quickly or so well. The many interested parties who are so enriched by such labour will cloak and defend it to the last, and make light of its evils.

Lately, in Queensland, two men were condemned to be executed for atrocious murders n this traffic, but the employers of labour at once got up such an agitation in their favour hat the sentence was changed to imprisonment. It has been almost impossible to get any jury, in the colonies concerned, to convict, on the clearest evidence, murderers in his traffic. They were "only islanders" (kanakas) who suffered, and, in all slave or semi-slave communities, they are allowed no rights in common with employers, or white men, but are there as chattels for their use. The Report of Commodore Wilson to the British Government, in 1882, brings out all his, and proves that, in this traffic, all the evils were then practised that the Report of he last Commission brings out.

Surely the time has now come when Britain and Germany ought to unite and secure the immediate and complete suppression of this revolting traffic, as the only means of preventing its atrocities and many accompanying evils, which have swept away some 50,000 or 60,000 of our New Hebrides slanders already.

Of course the cry of "strangling the sugar ndustry," and of "vested interests" will be heard on all sides; but, thank God, Britain acknowledges no vested interests in the bodies of slaves, and neither should she do o in a traffic which is, I hold, worse than lavery in many aspects, though avowedly only for a three years' term of agreement. Self-interest would lead the slaveholder to ry and keep his slave in health and strength s long as possible; whereas, if our islanders are worked to death on the plantations within hree years, Commodore Wilson shows they are buried like dogs. "The registrar gets no account of their death; the curator of in-estate estates gets no account of the wages due to them at death; they go to profit and loss. The planter has the profit and the poor islander the loss." When the regulaions of the Labour Act are so violated in Queensland, how can they expect them to be arried on on the islands. The whole thing as been and is a sham, in the actual working f this traffic, so steeped in human blood. Certainly Britain, France, and Germany, the hree nations chiefly involved, ought, not only in the interests of humanity, but of their wn subjects, to wash their hands of it, by ompletely and for ever suppressing this abour traffic in the South Seas. It has left isgraceful and indelible stains on the honour f every civilised nation engaged in it. It etards and upsets the Christianising and ivilising of the islanders, by sweeping them rom the face of the earth. Oh for another Wilberforce to plead their cause, and enlist he sympathy of all who could help to bring bout the suppression of this traffic!

We hope next week to give a sketch of the fe of Rev. J. G. Paton, with Portrait.

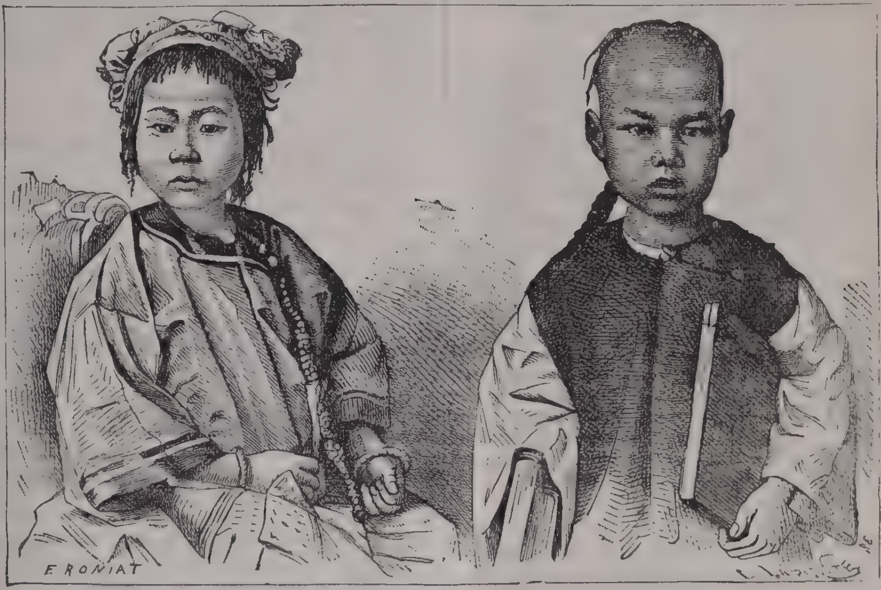
INFANCY is not the only period of danger to poor young girls in Canton. They are always looked upon as available property when money is required; and bright little maidens of four or five, and often of ten or twelve, are sold to pay their fathers' gambling debts, or opium bills, or to procure medicine in case of sickness. Burdened with the thought of their present misery and the black future before them, Mrs. Henry determined to do something for the relief of some at least. By the aid of friends, she was able to found the little orphanage, which, it is hoped, will grow into something of a magnitude more in proportion to the demand for help. Of eleven children received from time to time, four have died, and seven are under the care of the mission, which has now adopted the work. The personal history of these little waifs will give some insight into phases of life not often exposed to view.



May-Yan, whose name means, "Beautiful Grace," came to us in a remarkable way. Her father died three months before she was born, and her mother came to live in a small hovel near the mission chapel in the city of San-ui. Popular superstition regards it as unlucky to have a strange child born in the neighbourhood, so that the mother was driven from the shelter of her little hut to the hills outside the town; and there, with no protection against the weather, in the midst of a pouring rain, little A-May made her entrance into the world. The mother was wretchedly poor, with three other children to support; and this little waif was in the act of passing into the hands of the "devil grannies" when the native preacher slipped in, rescued the child, and brought her to us. She has grown to be a bright and beautiful lass, is doing well in school, and is in every sense a credit to the band who support her.

Oi-Keet, "Loving Purity," when six years old was pawned by her father to obtain money for medicine in a serious illness that befell him, with the full expectation that when he recovered she would be redeemed. His illness proved fatal; and Ah-Oi was demanded by the usurer, who was only an agent for baser people. Her mother in great distress told the Bible-woman her grief, and, bringing all the papers to us, asked us to interfere. We paid the debt and redeemed the child; and she is now well advanced in her studies, an attractive girl, standing high in the favour of her teacher.

Lock-Tuck, "Delighting in Virtue," was mortgaged before she was born to pay the debt incurred by her father at his marriage. He died before he had saved money enough to redeem her, and the heartless creditor demanded the child. The papers were brought to us, as before, and the debt paid. She is yet too small to attend school, but is a plump, play-loving lassie, just learning to sing.

Isoy-Shang, "Restored to Life," is the daughter of a Christian. Her mother died soon after her birth; and her father, a soulless opium sot, was sending the little thing to the native foundling house, when we claimed the right to interfere, and adopted the helpless orphan. For a long time her life was despaired of; but, under careful treatment, she survived, and is now the picture of health. Her name, suggested by the native elder, perpetuates the memory of her escape from death.

The story of the others is very similar, each one having been intercepted on her way to a most dismal fate. They are under careful training and instruction, and will all, we hope, become earnest Christian women.

Notes and Comments.

THE CHRISTIAN of next week will contain an article by Rev. John Bennett, with portrait, of Park Chapel, Chelsea; also a sketch and portrait of Rev. J. G. Paton, missionary to the South Seas.

At Peel, Isle of Man, a Conference will be held from August 24 to 28. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. H. T. Graves, Woodville, Peel.

Letters for Rev. E. Payson Hammond should be directed to our care. Arrangements are being made for a Children's Mission at Mildmay Conference Hall, from Sunday, September 20, to Sunday, October 4. A letter to Mr. Hammond has been signed by nine of the nearest ministers—Churchmen, Baptists, Congregationalists, Wesleyans, and Presbyterians—promising co-operation. Now is the time for friends in other quarters of London to appeal to Mr. Hammond for a share of his time in the coming winter.

In a recent conversation with Miss de Broen, of the Belleville Mission, Paris, she spoke with great emphasis on the deplorable lack of narrative books in the French language, corresponding to those written in English by Mrs. Charles, Miss Hesba Stretton, Mrs. Walton, and others, and which have met with such acceptance from young readers in this country. Miss de Broen suggests that such books, if printed and published in England in the French language, would be most useful as reading exercise for young Englishwomen who are acquiring French. Publishers in Paris who cannot see their way to initiate the publication of such works would be able to procure copies and thus meet a need greatly felt in France. We hope some of our religious publishers in England will adopt this suggestion.

The playing of a band, and sacred music on Clifton Downs on Sunday evenings has awakened considerable commotion in Bristol. The suppression of these Sunday concerts has been strongly censured by some Christian men, and as firmly demanded by others. Because this question is assuming a wider aspect, we would ask whether, if one family is raised out of ungodliness by such means, scores or even hundreds may not be seduced by such expedients into habits of Sabbath-breaking, which will offer no restraints to evil-doing, and give facilities to the tempters to vice. Since the foregoing was written, a three-fourths vote of the Town Council has stopped the concerts, but not the agitation.

The writer of an article in The Leisure Hour has been complained of for affirming that Dr. Johnson was "too great a man to be a great politician." He justifies the words. Certainly a great politician is generally understood to be a man absorbed in party politics; but it may be contended that the truly "great man" so sees all sides of a question, and the weaknesses and selfishness of every party, as to be unable to attach himself with that passionate and exclusive zeal to one which its supporters demand. We are coming to a crisis when the man who above all things pleads for social reforms must bear the reproach of not being a politician pur et simple,

We regret to know that the St. Giles Christian Mission stands in sore need of pecuniary support at the present time. Mr. George Hatton, the devoted superintendent, is compelled through feeble health to be absent from London, and this tends to increase the embarrassment in which the mission finds itself. It would be ten thousand pities if this splendid work of rescue and reform were to be crippled in any degree by the lack of public support, and we trust many will be led to come to its help. Mr. Hatton's town address is 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

An ecclesiastical quarrel between the Ultramontanes and the Pope is a new thing. The former have been the boldest advocates of the authority of the Pontiff. But it would now appear that the opinion they wish established is their own, not that of an infallible Pope. Leo XIII. has withstood and rebuked them in a letter to the Archbishop of Paris. Men will be called to witness how little the autocratic power of ecclesiastics suits the age. The new position will be refused, and the little rift between domineering assumptions will widen. Happily God rules, and we shall more and more see how the false roots tend to uproot one another.

It is startling to read that a large Roman Catholic Church is at once to be built in Cambridge at a cost of £50,000, and that a convenient site has been purchased. Affinity with Romanism was the dread of the greatest reformers, and had their warnings against compromise been heeded our age would not have witnessed this undisguised attempt at anti-Protestant propagandism in a University city. More is meant by this bold step than men are dreaming of.

On the other hand, never were truer words spoken than those by Mr. Caine, M.P., at a late meeting at the Borough-road Congregational Church. Nonconformists "wasted in the erection of costly chapels money which might be much better spent. It was not right for denominations to waste their strength by building such places for rich people. They ought, above all, to spend their money where the devil can be fought and the poor blest." Mr. Caine has put his finger on the real evil. This costliness has no adequate thought for the poor. Costly structures may be a part of Romanist superstitions, but places where the common people can conveniently listen to the ministry of reconciliation best maintain the traditions of evangelical Nonconformity.

One of the speakers at a recent meeting called to consider the Criminal Law Amendment Bill said that, in preaching the doctrines of Temperance, men often forgot the other sins mentioned in 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10; Eph. v. 3, 4, 5—18. While strongly advocating Temperance in the matter of drinking, we would also say that "filthiness and foolish talking" require to be as decisively met on the Temperance platform as the sin of drunkenness. Many unflinchingly combat the whole of the catalogue of sins of the flesh; but others again forget to teach that fornication and adultery, and covetousness, as effectually keep a man out of heaven as drunkenness. The Gospel of Temperance is a blessed one—let it not be limited only to our drinking—our pleasures, our meats, our desires, our words, our actions, would be of nobler use if regulated by Temperance.

We have received copy of the following circular:—

> "Canon Wilberforce returns his most sincere thanks to all who have kindly inquired for him during his recent illness. He desires also to express his heartfelt gratitude to those who have so incessantly and fervently remembered him at the Throne of Grace, and he earnestly requests all who have prayed for his recovery now to pray that he may show forth his thankfulness for God's great mercies vouchsafed to him not only with his lips but in his life."

We sorely want more homesteads in our country. Cannot Christian men whom the Lord has prospered sufficiently come out and live among us (asks a village pastor, Charles Snell, of Mayfield, Sussex), in a simple unpretentious way. Not as squire, but as son of man. Content with a few acres, that others may have the same. A colonising of our rural districts in such a manner would afford employment to our people and tend largely to unite all classes in Christian love.

I am continually begging for other good works, but seldom for those in which I am personally interested. Having, however, been made President of the Y.M.C.A. at Finsbury-park, which is doing a splendid work among young men and others, I am bold to ask my friends to help us acccording to their ability in paying off the £1000 incurred in purchase of lease, and conversion and furnishing of premises. The young men throng to this convenient suburb, and there is not a more active committee in London seeking their salvation. I am much obliged to those kind friends who have already responded to this appeal. R. C. MORGAN.

In a recent number a correspondent lamented that respectable booksellers should sell books and other publications that are not respectable but demoralising. The following letter, which appears in the current number of The Bookseller, throws a sombre side-light on this subject:—

> "SUICIDE AND PROFANITY TO BOOT
>
> "To the Editor of 'The Bookseller.'
>
> "DEAR SIR,—A bookseller in a Midland town announces in his shop window that he supplies the Revised Bible at a discount of fourpence in the shilling, and appends the following notice to his show-bill:—
>
> "'We will not be like Ananias, keep back part of the (cost) price. The public shall have the whole.'
>
> "What is the trade coming to, when we find booksellers not only willing to do business without profit to themselves, and ruining their neighbour's prospects, but adding thereto as shocking a piece of profanity as it has ever been my lot to see or hear of?—Yours truly, "OBSERVER.
> "June 20, 1885.
> "[Our correspondent seems to have overlooked the grim humour of the announcement.—ED. Bookseller.]"

The "grim humour" of the local bookseller arises from this cause: that the religious public insists on so large a discount that the sale of religious literature is to a serious extent passing out of the hands of the trade, and they are consequently driven more and more to make up their sales by questionable literature, which perhaps otherwise they would avoid.

Much of the benefit arising from the gratuitous distribution of pure literature is counteracted by the increased activity in the sale of questionable literature. The reading of a community depends not a little on the supply provided for by the booksellers; and to take the sale of literature out of their hands tends materially to lower the moral tone of a neighbourhood.

WORKERS IN PROVINCIAL FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—Lately we have had the opportunity of seeing the work of two Christians in circumstances and in fields so different that we had thought English Christians would be interested in hearing something of each. A few weeks ago we received a letter from a pastor's daughter at Ancelon, saying "The work here is difficult, and we have great need of encouragement. Can you come to us?" Some months ago we heard the appeal from St. Etienne: "The field here is wide, and the labourers few; can you help?" Now we have seen the two, and I want to tell you something of what we have seen.

To reach Ancelon is the first difficulty: no road but a mule track. The pastor's son, a lad of twelve, came to guide us—along the river bed, across a swift though shallow mountain stream, down one deep ravine, up a mountain side, with a range of precipices, and through a natural door in the rocky wall. More ravines, more torrent beds, and then from the mountain side you look down on Ancelon. Already we had been walking five hours, and he told us we had two more to reach the village. Between it and us there are yet two ravines, and from the depths of the last the climb is a zig-zag task up the face of the rocks. The fertile slopes of pasture are dangerous for the mowers. Once slip, and there is certain death in the abyss below.

This is not the place for descriptions of scenery, but it is impossible to understand the pastor's work unless one knows something of his field; and these ravines lie between the pastor and his "annexes." We saw him start on Sabbath morning for his service at Peine on foot in the heat, his daughter with him, and come back at sunset uncomplaining, but with a look of exhaustion that told how the work was telling on his strength. Right in front of his window, across the ravine again, rises a mountain considerably higher than Snowdon; across this is his way to another annexe. Will the city labourers who have train, tramway-car, or cab, within reach, think of this pastor's work, where the path is in summer a goat-track covered with loose stones, in winter the untrodden snow? Will they think, too, of the privilege of many fellow-labourers at hand, of being prayed for by thousands of Christian intercessors, of having stores of Christian literature at hand, of having the great Conferences within reach; will they pray for M. M—— and other lonely country workers?

At Ancelon for months the pastor and his wife are alone in their work. Rarely, indeed, does a visitor come to these lonely mountain retreats. It was a great joy for us to find M. Sainton there; he had climbed the hill to the north as we had come from the south. Just an hour or two of precious Christian intercourse and then he was away again among the vacant parishes and neglected hamlets of the Drôme. In winter the isolation must be extreme.

What a change, to come almost direct from Ancelon to St. Etienne! River, canal, railway, tramway, every facility for locomotion at least. We could almost think we were in Yorkshire with its wooded hills and long chimneys, coal-pits and iron-works; the silence of the hills and the sound of waterfalls exchanged for the rattle of machinery and the continual detonations from the gun barrel manufactory. As the fields differ, the work differs and the workers. Here we find the McAll Mission in full activity, also chapel, and others at work; mothers' meetings, under their French name ouvrier, held four times a week in different salles; réunions populaires every night in one or other of the quarters of the town, and the Medical Mission attracting the sick to come to the great Healer

It is so different from reading a report to see all this for oneself. Never had I so fully appreciated the work of the McAll Mission, as when I heard a young and zealous pastor, who is engaged here in the réunions populaires, say heartily, "I am the child of the McAll Mission, and my wife also. Both of us were brought up in the Roman Catholic Church." There is much to interest in the Medical Mission of St. Etienne. Those who come are nearly all Catholics, or have been such, till, at the Medical Mission, or réunion populaire, they have learned the truths of the Gospel.

Mrs. Robertson recently sent here a supply of Testaments for gratuitous distribution. Yesterday I had the privilege of giving one of these to an intelligent young ouvrier who had never even heard of such a book. He listened as I read the story of the prodigal with eager curiosity, evidently having no idea of how the story would end. Whilst I spoke with him, Miss Mudie found a young mother equally ignorant and equally delighted to have the Book. I do hope that when the present stock of Testaments is distributed another supply may be sent. In fact, one feels as if Dr. Burroughs should, at all events, be free from all pecuniary anxieties as to the Medical Mission. He is solely responsible for it, finds the funds, prescribes for the patients, prepares the medicines, gives the opening Gospel address, and all this in addition to his work as Director of the McAll Mission, which means providing for fourteen meetings weekly, with occasional Sunday work in the nearer Catholic villages.

And now I have spoken of these two overworked and often discouraged workers, will our English friends accept the apostolic exhortation: "Lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees"? Those who bear the burden and heat of the day have a claim to our sympathy, our prayers, our help. Miss Mudie and I go back to our own corner of the vineyard, in a day or two, humbled and stimulated by the zeal of others, and thankful that for us, too, there is something to do for the Master.

Yours, in the Master's service,

St. Etienne, France. S. R. GELDARD.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

THE thirty-second annual report gives the following remarkable incident, furnished by the workers in a London district: A young man, after hearing the open-air singing and speaking, came into the service. Here he was thoroughly broken down by what he heard, and gave himself to the Lord. He stated that on the previous Sunday night, having quarrelled with his sweetheart, and hearing that she was walking out with another young man, he determined to waylay and murder her. He accordingly stationed himself in a road along which he expected her to pass, but while thus waiting in ambush, he heard a female voice singing, "I will guide thee with mine eye." This seemed to come home to him, and he came away, intending to carry out his purpose on the following Sabbath. It was on this night that he came into the hall, to pass away an hour till the time should come to carry out his purpose, and there the Lord met with him.

The report is certainly not a whit behind any of its predecessors. The illustrations and notes are excellent; the statistics show an increase in almost every branch of the work; nearly six hundred towns and villages have been visited during the year, and it is estimated that not less than three million persons have in this way heard the Gospel. Many foreign parts have also been visited; various lectures have been delivered; the Conferences held by the Mission have been greatly blessed, and more than one million tracts have been circulated.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham, the valued secretary, appeals for increased funds, the present balance being insufficient to meet the growing needs of the work.

The report may be had for 4d. at the office of the Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.—Partly in having to provide an extra £700 for the new Home, and partly from my inability, through sickness, to undertake so much correspondence as usual, we are considerably behind-hand in money matters, but I feel sure this has but to be known to be set right. £1200 should be raised within the next month to meet all demands. THE ROYAL WEDDING.

THE MAIDENS' GIFT.

A PRESENTATION took place at Osborne on Saturday, July 18, which has a unique character. It was the gift of a Bible to the Princess Beatrice from maidens of the United Kingdom. It was all done privately, but the enthusiasm was so great that 45,000 maidens joined in it. This is nearly 20,000 more than on any former similar occasion. All ages and ranks united in the gift. The deputation consisted of nine of those who had taken the chief part in collecting, and they were most graciously received by Her Royal Highness, who repeatedly thanked in the warmest way; and several little things showed how interested the Queen herself was in the gift. Lunch was provided for them, and the leader was invited to write her name in Her Majesty's birthday book. The address was read by Miss Nugent. It expressed not only loyal congratulations, but the earnest prayer with which the givers offered the gift for the future earthly and heavenly happiness of their home-Princess.

A POEM BY LORD TENNYSON.

TO H.R.H. PRINCESS BEATRICE.

Two Suns of Love make day of human life,
Which else with all its pains and griefs and deaths
Were utter darkness—one, the Sun of dawn
That brightens thro' the Mother's tender eyes,
And warms the child's awakening world—and one
The later-rising Sun of spousal Love
Which from her household orbit draws the child
To move in other spheres. The Mother weeps
At that white funeral of the single life,
Her maiden daughter's marriage; and her tears
Are half of pleasure, half of pain—the child
Is happy—e'en in leaving her! but thou,
True daughter, whose all-faithful, filial eyes
Have seen the loneliness of earthly thrones,
Wilt neither quit the widowed Crown, nor let
This later light of Love have risen in vain,
But moving thro' the Mother's home, between
The two that love thee, lead a summer life,
Swayed by each Love, and swaying to each Love
Like some conjectured planet in mid heaven
Between two Suns, and drawing down from both
The light and genial warmth of double day.

July, 1885. TENNYSON.

FROM BASUTOLAND.

REMEMBER our little mission. We do, indeed, need the blessing from on High—for the enemy is still there. If defeated at one point, he rallies his forces to overthrow us at another. His great scheme, in this present time, is to pour in Boer brandy, which, in former times, was kept out by Moshesh, and which the Basutos dreaded; but now the taste is created, and Boers and English adventurers pour it in wholesale, in the hope of verifying the old prediction, that the only way of conquering Basutos will be by brandy, all other methods having failed.

May the Lord, who has hitherto averted the ruin of the natives, even now again give the word, and these plots shall fail. Otherwise the Gospel work is steadily advancing, and many are being brought to the feet of Jesus, and the work of native agency is gaining ground in a most encouraging manner, so that we are assured that the Lord our God is with us to bless us.—Yours faithfully, HAMILTON MOORE DYKE.

Morija, Basutoland, June, 1885.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The Princess of Wales has been graciously pleased to promise to visit and open the new Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel-road, London, E., and has appointed Saturday, October 31 next, for this interesting ceremony. The total cost, including freehold land, fittings, furniture, &c., is £12,000, of which £6000 has still to be raised. Contributions are earnestly requested, and may be paid to the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the hon. sec., Mr. Henry Hill, 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

ITINERATING IN KABYLIA.

THIS being the time for doing a little itinerating work, it has been my privilege to visit several villages within a day's journey from this station. On arriving at a village perched high up on a mountain summit, I was met by a leading man among the villagers, who welcomed me. On alighting from my mule, I was ushered into the mosque with my stock of medicines, and this, too, without being requested to take the shoes from off my feet. Soon I was encircled by a motley crowd of men, women, and children, who, by their behaviour, evidently seemed to have little respect for the building within whose sacred precincts we were assembled. After a good hour's work dispensing medicine, with here and there a word between, telling of God's love in the gift of his Son, I entered the house of my kind Kabyle friend and there partook of his generous hospitality.

The scene is changed. Now it is the village of Taârost, about eleven hours' from Djemaâ. Here I found a hearty welcome, doubtless owing to the presence in this village of Miss Gillard and her companion, who have commenced work among the women and children. Under a spreading olive-tree, I have the unspeakable pleasure and privilege of making known Jesus Christ to those who acknowledge not his Divine Sonship, my auditors consisting of the leading marabout of the place and a number of young men, his disciples. Questions are put by one and another, and answered to the best of my ability. On leaving this delightful spot where I passed several happy hours, one and another of these young men requested me to remain with them. Here several Arabic Gospels were left as seed. From such we hope fruit may spring.

Once again the scene changes. This time among another tribe, some of whose people had come a long distance to the mission station seeking medical aid. It is the month of Ramadan. The day has wearily dragged itself to a close. All is astir. New life seems to have infused itself into these people as, gathered outside of an Arab café, they sit smoking. Coffee is served round to my request. Then, in the light of the moon, assisted by a small lamp, I read slowly verse after verse of Scripture in Kabyle, which is listened to in most cases respectfully. Midnight has come round. But before lying down to rest in the house of the president I am invited to share in the last meal until sunset of next day. After a busy forenoon of visiting among the sick, and trying to speak for Jesus, I bid farewell to the village of Abizar.

Night overtakes us ere we get home, and we receive with pleasure the hospitality of a chief among the Kabyles, one whose brother played a very important part in the last insurrection here, and was banished to Caledonia. This chief made us very comfortable for the night. Here again Scriptures were offered to a leading marabout or professor of the Koran, who accepted it most graciously, kissing my hand in return. Poor old man, he could not get over the stumbling-block—Jesus being called the Son of God. Twice during that evening I could hear him repeat aloud, "He says Jesus is the Son of God." Then taking my hand in his as he raised himself from his mat where he was resting, he said, "God is One: not two, not three, not four; but One only." In vain did I hold up three fingers together, and say God is three in one—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Surely we do not ask in vain that those who know and love our Lord Jesus Christ would pray that the scales may fall from the eyes of many of these dear people, that God may from among themselves raise up evangelists to make known the glorious Gospel.

One great drawback to our going more among these people who are not within easy reach of this station is the want of a mule of our own, and a tent. The former the value of £20, or even less, would be a valuable gift to this mission, and who is there who would not like to put such at the Lord's disposal? The Lord had need of an ass in his day while here below. Still, as then, the dumb creatures are useful to Him. Who will meet this need?

Yours in Christ, ALFRED S. LAMB.

TRANSFORMATIONS IN FIJI.

IT is surprising how little is known of this fine colony, which is destined to take an important place in the affairs of the South Pacific. Though there are over 250 isles in the group, and a larger area than the West Indies, yet I see that the German Minister in England speaks of the colony as "a fertile island." Even your own Mr. W. E. Forster referred to Fiji as an "island," governed by Sir Arthur Gordon. Still, Fiji is not unknown as the arena upon which a great Christian battle has been fought. Over a hundred thousand Fijians, either erstwhile cannibals, or the children of fathers once the most dreaded of the people of the South Seas, now name the name of Christ, and many of them have departed from iniquity. Fifty years ago not a Christian Fijian! Now, not an avowed Pagan! They are all, too, gathered into the fold of a Church, nearly 100,000 being Wesleyans and about 8000, Romanists. An army of missionaries, native ministers, and Fijian Church officers watches over these.

There has just been completed a series of ceremonies at the Islet City of Bau, in connection with the public putting-off of mourning for the historic chief, King Thakombau. Three thousand people of many tribes were crowded together on Bau. In the heathen days it would have been impossible to have got all those people together. Even those that might have come would have been all armed, and watching one another like cats. On this occasion I heard of no disgraceful behaviour of any kind, and the many houses of the Bau Chiefs resounded in the early morning, and at eight o'clock at night, with the sounds of singing and prayer. The large stone church, which the people have built for themselves, was full to overflowing with a congregation that would have riveted the interest of many of your readers could they have witnessed it. In the old days a large stone stood in front of a great temple, near the present site of the Christian church, and to it the bodies of the clubbed victims were brought, and the heads dashed against it in offering to the deity. After years of purification by wind, rain, hurricane, fire, and the lightnings, that stone has recently been removed to the church interior, and transformed into a baptismal font.

In prominent places in the building stand out texts of Scripture in the Fijian tongue, admirably worked by an English lady in coloured letters on a white ground. Curious enough, no one has yet been able to learn who this tasteful donor is. But the texts preach on, and one preacher told me that he had chosen a passage of Scripture for a text one day, and was in the very midst of his sermon thereon, when, looking straight in front, he was startled to see his text staring at him from the opposite wall. He had not observed it before, and the coincidence made him marvel for the time.

I have lately held a Fijian service for Church members in the Levuka native church, and a Manchester family who have recently arrived in the colony kindly came and sang to the natives. Moody and Sankey's well-known music, "Ye must be born again," "Peace be still," and the grand "Hallelujah! what a Saviour!" were heard there for the first time, sung by people who knew how to sing them, Mr. Alfred Burness' fine tenor coming out with great effect. It was something to see how the Fijians listened. They did not know the words, but they had been told the theme, and they felt the music. To my own soul it was a "feast of fat things." From this far-off battle-field we greet you in your great struggle in England with sensuality and apathy, drunkenness, poverty, and injustice. Success to every regiment and to each form of attack!—Your constant reader,

Levuka, Fiji. ARTHUR J. WEBB.

MR. GRENFELL EXPLORING.

THE Times of the 20th inst. contains an appreciative notice, honoured with leaded type, and occupying a prominent position, of an exploring trip undertaken by the Rev. G. Grenfell, of the Congo Mission. The expedition seems to have been full of adventure, and the spoils, from a geographical point of view, are of much value. Mr. Grenfell has been exploring a river all unknown to Europeans till he ascended it in the Peace. He is the first European who has been up the Mobangi, one of the chief tributaries of the Congo. This river is of great length. Mr. Grenfell went up more than 400 miles, and found that the Mobangi is navigable beyond the point he reached, how far he cannot say. It is a river more than 600 yards wide, of a mean depth of 25 feet, and is supposed by Mr. Grenfell, to be the lower part of the River Welle, which has long been a puzzle to geographers.

A curious reader, by looking on the sketch map of the Congo Free State, in the May number of The Baptist Missionary Herald, will find the whereabouts of the Mobangi. It joins the Congo just opposite the Equator Station, apparently in the Free State. The explorer then passes through the north-east corner of "the lot" which has fallen to France.

A comparatively short distance takes him into unexplored and unassigned regions, which wil probably turn out to be a large watershed.

We have said that the expedition was not without adventures. The Times informs its readers that the tribes which inhabit the country through which this river runs are wild, that on his way up the Mobangi Mr. Grenfell encountered perils, and that he saved the lives of his party by "energetic action," though we are not told what particular shape the danger took. On his return, however, he found all the tribes friendly, and experienced no difficulty in obtaining food.

It must not be too hastily concluded that this exploring trip was for missionary purposes. As yet the Upper Congo is not occupied; mission work there has scarcely, indeed, commenced. But evidently there is room for indefinite expansion of the enterprise. Mr. Grenfell reports that the country of the Mobangi is more thickly populated than are the banks of the Congo, that the people are not inferior, and we conclude that, when Baptists have manned the Upper Congo, their resources will be taxed to the utmost in sending heralds of the Cross up the Mobangi and other tributaries of the Congo.

Full particulars of the trip are promised by The Times in the next number of The Herald, and a hope is expressed that a detailed narrative will be at hand for the meeting of the British Association at Aberdeen. We await with some eagerness further particulars as to the object of the expedition. Does it mean missionary prospecting? Is the next "onward movement" to be up the Mobangi? If not, what does it mean?

GOVERNESSES IN PARIS.—Miss Pryde, of the Institute and Home for Governesses, will be glad to receive and provide for governesses during the summer holidays, so that they may pursue their French education without any break. Applications should be made to the Institute, 22, Rue des Acacias, Avenue de la Grande Armée, Paris.

MRS. GINEVER'S ORPHAN HOMES.—Those who read the report of last year's work will be glad to know that the one for this year is now to be obtained. The work continues to prosper under the blessing of the Lord. Mrs. Ginever says:—"I am thankful that no straits have ever kept me awake at night, and, although the housekeeping purse is frequently quite empty, the orphans have never lacked a meal." On July 28 there was no money in the house, but a letter came with a cheque, saying, "I had just been asking God to whom I should send this money, when your little book was put into my hands, so you can indeed look to Him for thanks." Friends desiring a visit to the Homes will usually find Mrs. Ginever at 3, Manor-road, Holloway, on Wednesdays, and at 8, Tremlett-grove, Upper Holloway, on Thursdays. Visitors to Broadstairs are invited to attend a short prayer-meeting at Cuthbert House, Granville-road, on Tuesdays, at 12 o'clock. Orders for needlework, including servants' print dresses, will be thankfully received.

RELIGIOUS AND IRRELIGIOUS CANT.

I.—RELIGIOUS.

DEEPLY do we sympathise with personal and other friends who ask us if we cannot confine to a separate issue all reference to the painful subject of England's shame and sorrow. Gladly, thankfully, we would do so, f we dared; but the conviction grows upon us that our duty to God and our responsibility to man alike require us to cry aloud and spare not, until the peril is appreciated, and a wholesome Christian opinion has been formed. We will, as far as possible, confine t to one sheet, which can be removed if our readers think it right to do so; but we are assured that not only kindness but justice o their children and their servants demands hat these should no longer be kept in the fatal ignorance which constitutes their greatest danger. Is it right to keep them in gnorance of danger of which you are aware? If you are wilfully unaware, is it right to shut your eyes and ears to the knowledge of uttermost peril to those around you? "Even he sea monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness."

Parents who love their children, aye, all who desire the welfare of the young, must be compelled to open their eyes to facts, however painful. Every partridge that is hatched s not more certainly born to the peril of he sportsman's gun, than every girl is born o the peril of the libertine's evil eye. No child, even, walks along the street, enters an omnibus, or rides on the railway, without giving rise in some debauched man's mind o the thought expressed in an infernal phrase which has become common among the fallen lass to which he belongs, "A fine girl lost o the town." The more beautiful, the more modest, the more virtuous, the more in danger! "Forewarned, forearmed." Ignorant nnocence is trustful, but no wise man wishes his child to trust the wicked. And this can nly be prevented by enlightening them as to he dangers which surround them, and teaching them how to avoid them.

"The Son of Man came to seek and to save hat which was lost"—the more deeply lost, he more immediately the objects of his earch. When He returned to God, He left his disciples to continue the seeking and the saving of the lost, and to declare the glad idings to every creature. But with a horrible indifference, with an inhuman respectability, we have said we must draw the line somewhere, and we have drawn it at drunkenness.

For the last half century, and especially during the past decade, "the soldiers of the Cross, the followers of the Lamb," have become profoundly interested in the drunkard, and have wisely and diligently endeavoured o put an end to the vice by the only true remedy—total abstinence. And there are now total abstinence societies in connection with nearly all our churches.

But a stratum of yet darker and deadlier and more damning sin lies lower still, into which the Christian miner, with a rare exception which only proves the rule, has forborne to thrust his spade. The sin of sins, which the Holy Ghost distinguishes from all others, the Church of Christ has, with a cowardly, contemptible, canting prudery, refused to touch. And out of the Sunday-school, from the threshold of the Church itself, thousands every year fall into this mass of seething corruption, which festers beneath the line where the Church has falsely and blindly drawn her low-water mark.

So long as this remains the case, the celebrated dictum of the Puritan Charnock, "The Bible, and the Bible alone, is the religion of the Protestants," is turned into a lie. It is a scandalous libel on the Bible to say that the religion of Protestants runs parallel with it, so long as that goes hand in hand with Simon the Pharisee, professing to know Christ, and asking Him to be its guest, but by works denying Him, saying, "This man, if He were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth Him; for she is a sinner."

Verily, verily, this is the lukewarm Laodiceanism of the last days, which makes the Saviour sick. As Isaiah harshly handled the mincing daughters of Zion of his day; as Jesus, when on earth, rode roughshod over the Scribes and Pharisees—hypocrites, fools, and blind: so now that He is in heaven does He heave with nausea at the mincing Pharisaism of Protestant Laodicea —"I will spue thee out of my mouth." The dress and ornament, the beauty and the sweet smell, against which Isaiah fulminated, and the blind Pharisaic hypocrisy which the Lord Jesus so scathingly denounced, all met in Laodicea. She was clothed in self-righteousness and enriched with gifts, but she was a blind hypocrite. Let the Church of to-day, which will not let even the mention of the sin that honeycombs society come between the wind and her respectability, recognise the portrait of herself.

Is it not fitting that we should judge our own selves, whether and how far we answer to the description of the Holy Ghost: "A generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness: a generation, ah, how lofty are their eyes, and their eyelids are lifted up!" Of all the fantastic tricks which man, vain man, can play before high heaven, nothing can astonish the angels more than to see him profess to be more cultured than God, more refined than His holy Child Jesus, more respectable than the Holy Ghost. If the Spirit of Holiness were to call a committee to consider the composition of Holy Scripture, many portions of the Bible would certainly be condemned by the inane and vapid respectabilities of nineteenth century Christianity.

Jehovah demanded that the law of Moses should be always in their mouths, and should be taught their children diligently all day long; and by the Apostle to the Hebrews, fifteen centuries later, He declares that we "ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Moses and the Prophets, Christ and his Apostles, incessantly dwelt upon sins against the body, which is the temple of the Holy Ghost; our supercilious disregard of such portions of Scripture, and our disdainful relegation of them to silence and neglect, is being visited upon us by an epidemic of unholy literature and of detestable and cruel crime.

SUGGESTIONS TO PARENTS.

SIR,—Accept the thanks of a reader for the straightforward manner in which you have supported the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette in his fearless exposure of the devilish crimes perpetrated in our midst. The all but universal concurrence of opinion that your articles have evoked is a matter for gratitude and encouragement.

But while it is our duty as Christians to agitate throughout the country until we obtain more effective legislation, and to implore the God of Heaven to interpose his Almighty hand between the hideous monster of lust and his innocent, helpless victims, I think parents, and especially mothers, could do more than they do at present to prevent these evils. Allow me to make a few suggestions, briefly as possible, knowing your space is valuable.

(1) Let mothers educate their daughters as to their future position as mothers, and warn them of the temptations that surround them. Many mothers seem to think it highly indelicate to mention such subjects to their children; hence the avidity with which the poor ignorant girls devour the mixture of truth and falsehood poured into their ears by the vicious. The knowledge would come better from the parent than a stranger; plain speaking would be the saving of thousands.

(2) Parents and guardians must look more carefully after their children. In London you may see well-dressed children by hundreds playing in the streets until nine at night, with no human friend guarding them. Girls of the most dangerous age are out until ten and later, alone, in twos and threes, or "walking out" with boys and young men. Many are almost devoid of filial respect, and the home influence seems to be nil.

(3) Mothers, and all Christian women, must set a better example to the rising generation in such matters as dress. Many children seem to be taught that the wearing of fine clothes is the be-all and end-all of their existence. In addition to this, the conversation of mothers before their juvenile daughters leaves much to be desired.

(4) I would also suggest that the public parks and railway-stations be well supplied with female Christian detectives. They must be Christians to preclude all possibility of bribery, and to insure that personal presence of the Saviour which alone will make their efforts successful.

Yours very sincerely, W. H. Vernon.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

By Miss ELLICE HOPKINS.

MAY I warn the readers of The Christian, who in themselves form a powerful moral constituency, that two vital points in the Criminal Law Amendment Bill are in danger, unless the country makes its voice heard sharp and clear? The first is that the present Home Secretary does not propose to restore the original age of sixteen, so that if the present mutilated Bill passes, we shall only get protection, from even the trade of vice, for girls of fifteen. It is proposed to inscribe on the English statute-book that a child of fifteen can legally give herself to a life of infamy against the consent of her own father.

The second point is, that in order, it would seem, to make this less glaring, the Home Secretary proposes to withdraw the right of search altogether. The sharp strictures on the right of search accorded to the legal guardian ceasing at fifteen, a year earlier than parental control ceases in any other connection but that of vice, are to be met by denying parental right to interfere at any age. By the law of England, till a girl is sixteen, she is not allowed to emigrate without the consent of her parents; she cannot join a friendly or industrial society; she cannot legally buy even a glass of spirits at the bar of a public-house. The anomaly of allowing her to dispose of what once parted with can never be regained, and stopping the parents power of interfering at fifteen, instead of sixteen, being too gross for even that "poor inattentive and immoral creature," man, to swallow—to quote Mr. Matthew Arnold's unflattering description of our poor humanity—it is proposed to run a legal sponge over parental rights altogether, and trust that the parental idea may not suggest itself to the unimaginative British mind. We do not, to be sure, quite see how this wretched child of fourteen, whom we agree to protect, is to be found after she is once trapped, as we decree that the door is to be shut in the face of even her own father; but, after all, the keeper of a den of infamy is in possession of her, body and soul, and possession is, in this case, not nine-tenths, but a good stout solid integer of the law, which it is no use splitting up with so small a denominator as a father's rights. Perhaps the crowning drop of bitterness, the salt that is liberally rubbed into the moral wound, is that these admirable amendments of the original Bill are made in professed deference to public opinion in the nation at large, that will not support that enthusiastically moral body, the House of Commons, in any stronger measure!

I want the readers of The Christian to grasp this point thoroughly. We upper-class folk have three ways that we can protect our girls, even if they were threatened, which they are not appreciably, when compared with the helpless and defenceless girls of the poor. If our girl has real property, if she is an heiress, it is felony to touch her up to the full age of one and twenty, punishable by fourteen years' imprisonment. If she is not an heiress, a widowed mother can still protect her from any vicious designs on her by making her a ward of Chancery. Or a father can at once claim her up to the age of sixteen, by putting the Habeas Corpus Act in force. But, unfortunately, to make a girl a ward of Chancery costs at least £50, and to put the Habeas Corpus Act in force costs from £30 to £40. How is a working man to afford this sum? "If," said a working man at a large public meeting—and I can hear the pathetic, pleading tones of his voice as he said it—"If my dog strays into a strange house and is detained against my will, the law gives me the power to claim that which is my own. But if my young daughter strays into a house of infamy, the law gives me no power to claim my own child." And it is this gross violation of the rights of the father which it is actually proposed to perpetuate in the name of the English people!

I make no allusion to the clause against abduction, which is to apply up to eighteen, because, as I have explained ad nauseam, it can only be worked if the girl is directly under the custody of her father, and most of our young working-class girls are in business or in service; nor can it be worked except against some specific individual, and it does not apply to any girl who has abducted herself from her parent's roof in a fit of temper. A case was tried only a few weeks ago, of a young girl who had been to fetch some clothes from her own home, and was returning to her place, when a man enticed her into a house, and turned her adrift the next day into the streets. The case was dismissed, as it was decided that, being between her father's house and her situation, she was not under the care of her lawful guardian!

What, therefore, is to be done? Not a moment is to be lost, as the Bill, at present in Committee, may be returned for its third reading in a few days' time.

First, let every male householder, and every woman of any position, write at once to all their members, and ask them to vote for the amendment that will be moved to restore the age to that of sixteen. State that this is the least that can be accepted. Ask them to vote for the retention of the right of search, which a parent can avail himself of up to the age of sixteen, You can point out that the only result of passing so inadequate a measure as that proposed by the present Government will be that the agitation will go on—the continuance of which we all deplore—and an angry class feeling be fomented; as, if these two points are not conceded, the matter will be brought before the people at the approaching elections. Do this at once, without the loss of a post.

You can also state that, so far from the nation being indifferent, the petitions which are pouring in from all parts of the country, and most of them urging a much higher age of protection than sixteen, show a larger total of signatures than almost any other subject. This was before the recent revelations had so powerfully stirred the moral feeling of the nation.

Secondly, imitate the example of Liverpool, and get up a memorial, signed by influential ratepayers, requesting the Mayor to call a meeting "to consider the better protection of the young, in connection with recent revelations in The Pall Mall Gazette and to urge the immediate enactment of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, with such alterations as are proved to be required."

Also set on foot smaller meetings, that can be more speedily called, as each can send up its petition to the Home Secretary, and to the House of Commons. For speakers, apply to the C.E P.S., 3, Palace-chambers, Westminster, or to J. B. Wookey, 31, Paternoster-square, E.C. Rev. J. Macdonald, Wesleyan College, Handsworth, Birmingham, is one of the most powerful speakers on the subject I ever heard; if, at a great crisis like this, he could be induced to address some large audiences, his influence would be great.

In conclusion, my heart is too full to say much. England—God's England, as Milton used to delight to call her—has been disgraced in the eyes of the world. But let the world at least see an England stirred to her depths with shame and repentance, and determined that these things shall be no longer, and that it shall be no more written of her little ones that "they are all snared in holes, and hid in prison-houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for a spoil, and none saith. Restore."

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND SPEAKS.

OUR OBLIGATIONS AND OUR ENEMIES.

Dear Sir,—The trumpet has at last been sounded, the challenge has been sent to the patrons of sin; and, as we see the magnitude of the evil, when we consider how all classes and all society are permeated by uncleanness, fornication, and an organised system of shameless prostitution, we know that we are face to face with a very grave crisis. Now, though the Lord can save "by many or by few," and though I am sure we shall rise in the energy of a bright faith to quit us like men, still, humanly speaking, if the enemy is to be effectually grappled with, the Church, united for once in the face of a common danger, must rise en masse, and not leave to a few faithful individuals the herculean task of cleansing our Augean stables.

The Archbishop of Canterbury lately, in words the full significance of which we do not understand, has spoken of the Church of England as a possible powerful political engine. Let us test its strength in the noblest cause—religious and political, for it is both—for which a Church can strive, the protection of our daughters and sisters, the cause of purity and honour, the maintenance of the morality of our country. We are bound to this—

(1) As men. We are the natural and responsible protectors of our sisters. Naturally they turn to us in all times of difficulty and danger, and they never appeal in vain. And "other men's sisters" have a like claim upon us—noblesse, puissance, rèligion, obligent. And ought it, can it, shall it be said, to our everlasting contempt and dishonour, that we cared more for their bodies than their soul and honour? That while we were ready to save them at the risk of our own lives from the dangers of field or river, we were careless and indifferent to their moral welfare? Will not a mouse rebuke us when a far nobler than a lion is struggling in the meshes which the lust and cupidity of man are drawing around those dear ones whom we are bound to defend by every feeling of honour, faith, and manliness?

(2) As patriots. A nation's welfare depends upon national morality. Depreciation of character is a far more serious thing than depreciation of coinage. "A man is what a woman makes him." The histories of Rome and Sparta tell us that the manliness of the men and the reputation of the country depend upon the purity of and the respect accorded to its women. What a difference between Sparta and Corinth, Rome and Capua. How does the "vengeance of eternal fire" upon Sodom and Gomorrha speak to us in solemn warning!

(3) As Christians. Ah! the less we say about our Christianity the better, while the voices of our sisters cry to us, perhaps unheard, certainly unheeded, from the houses of the rich, from the streets of the city.

Now, sir, there are two enemies we have to fight: (1) A regular organised system, a huge conspiracy against the purity of our women. A system which has its headquarters in London (as it appears) but the ramifications of which spread over the whole country—and this alongside with the usual vice and immorality always existing in large cities. This awful enemy can only be met by careful organisation. Mere declamation will not be enough. (2) The delicacy, refinement, and culture, of the nineteenth century. Many of us have been blinding our eyes to this. There has been a silent compromise between our expression of the Gospel and the delicacy and refinement of our congregations. Some of us have seen with dismay and want of faith that the time is fast approaching when the Gospel, with its witness against sin, must come into collision with the refinement of the century, when we must speak out. As Christian gentlemen, we treat ladies with the greatest respect and attention; but if one were drowning before our eyes, we would not hesitate to rescue her, if necessary, by the hair of her head. The danger would excuse the liberty. In like manner we all try to cultivate delicacy and refinement. But, if delicacy is seen to cover sin, and to paralyse our efforts in the cause of Christ and purity, we must not hesitate in our choice between delicacy and faithfulness.

One word in conclusion. As clergymen of the Established Church, our duty is plain, we are bound by the most sacred vows to warn those committed to our care of any and all dangers which threaten them, bodily or spiritual. And I feel sure that all—Nonconformist as well as Espiscopal ministers—will acknowledge the force, in the present crisis, of the following extract from our ordination service, as bringing before them responsibilities they have perhaps forgotten. "Have always, therefore, printed in your remembrance how great a treasure is committed to your charge. For they are the sheep of Christ, which He bought with his death, and for whom He shed his blood . . . . and if it shall happen the same church, or any member thereof, to take any hurt or hindrance by reason of your negligence, ye know the greatness of the fault, and also the horrible punishment that will ensue . . . Wherefore see that you never cease your labour, your care and diligence, until you have done all that lieth in you, according to your bounden duty to bring all such as are or shall be committed to your charge . . . . that there be no place left among you, either for error in religion, or for viciousness in life."—Yours faithfully in Christ,

Alfred Daintree, Curate.

THE DANGERS OF VILLAGE LIFE.

The sensation produced by the recent revelations has almost died away; and many who were prompted by holy horror to join a crusade against the devilry unmasked have settled down again on their lees. A few may have been awakened from sinful apathy to strengthen the hands of the men and women who, in the name of the God of heaven, still wage relentless war against vice; but these warring workers, or working warriors, are so very few in number, and, from the nature of the work required, will probably have to remain so few, that, while some of the perishing shall yet be rescued, the greater part of them will be hopelessly retained to the ruin in which they have become involved.

It was a worthy saying of the ancients, "Prevention is better than cure," and, with regard to the matter in question, it would be well for moderns to give to it the attention it certainly deserves. The brands that are plucked from the burning must evermore bear the marks of the fire. Let us keep others, God helping us, from the fire. And, in the first place, be it remembered that the innate depravity of the human heart begins to bestir itself while a child is a child. Native innocence is often trusted as a safeguard against temptation, long after it has vanished. Then, again, "evil communications corrupt good manners." Let the conduct and conversation of the young visitor, whether he comes as a playmate to one's children, for the spare hour of the evening, the weekly half-holiday, or for a lengthened sojourn in the home, be closely scanned and marked by the elders of the family.

And what mischief has been wrought by the present system of village education, through which boys and girls not only work together in school, but are also brought together for the play connected with school life. Ministers and others are often mourning over the immorality of village folk. It is here, sir, that the secret may be found. The minds of both sexes are polluted now, for sin to develop itself more hideously afterwards. I have in my mind a shame-stricken girl, who has brought dishonour on her family, and well-nigh broken the hearts of her parents. It has often been asked, since her fall, how such a respectable young woman could ever have spoken to her betrayer. I find they were playmates years ago, when they went together to the same village school; nor need I say any more.

Since so many fallen young folk in town are drafted from the country, I must also touch upon other phases of village life which well-disposed gentry, clergy, and others, may find worth their while to ponder. Let all who care for the welfare of the young be very watchful, and very firm on the night of the "Temperance fête," and the "Sabbath-school treat." Though this may come only once a year, this fact is one of which Satan is not ignorant. Numbers of respectable young girls, who would never think of asking an extra hour out, at "the wake," "the feast," or "the fair," will get it, almost without asking, at such times as these. Alas for many who have it, whether with or without permission! At these holidays, too, are often introduced practices which, if harmless in themselves, indirectly lead to awful evil. A young schoolmistress was recently gabbling in a train about the jolly Sunday-school treat that had come off in a parish where the young had been left to her training. She had danced with the curate, and I know not whom; and the girls, many of whom had never danced before, had been drawn by her example to do the like. She made me think of the dancing booth on the green, and the crowded public-house parlour, as I had seen them in my younger days, at the village "feast" or "wake;" and, remembering their attendant evils, I told her that she and the curate had prepared those girls for ruin. The school-treat dance prepares the way for the dance at the fair, and too often, after this, it is but a down-hill path to the reckless debauchery of the town.

Then, I would have mothers and mistresses ponder well the propriety of allowing their children and servants to sing in mixed choirs where the strictest supervision is not exercised by some trustworthy choirmaster. Some dissolute young men, I once knew, had been thwarted in their evil purposes by the watchfulness of loving parents, who were determined to keep their children from harm's way. One of these happened to be a friend of the organist, to whom he suggested "a special practice night." The idea was utilised at once, and these young women, heretofore so carefully guarded, got the ready consent of their parents to be out at night for "choir practice." I need not say more on the matter.

The "lodger" system, however, is the most deadly to virtue of all its enemies in village life. Indeed, it is the same in towns. Do your duty here, dear friends, you who have influence over the poor. Let no Christian landlord or landlady ever consent for a tenant with daughters to take in a male lodger. If such should talk about the advantage, show the possible disadvantage on the other side of the question; but be firm.

As many young women must necessarily leave home for service, such as would be their friends may, with a little advice, be friends indeed to them in such a matter. Don't let them answer advertisements, nor go to situations without obtaining particulars of places and persons. I was travelling, a few weeks since, with a broken-hearted father, who was going up to London with a magistrate's letter to a Superintendent of Police, hoping thus to rescue his daughter. He, poor ignorant man, had answered an advertisement for a nursemaid. A telegram then came, bidding him send her at once. She went, to find herself in a house of ill fame; and, not daring to write to him, she had written to a neighbour of his. I believe she was a poor motherless girl, and, as I read her letter, I grieved to think that circumstances prevented me from going to London with him. Yet the case never came to daylight.

Lastly, friends of the young, whether parents, relatives, or others, always oppose the idea of a visit from a young woman to the friends of her betrothed, unless her mother go with her. I once heard a villain boast how he had drawn a poor girl from a village near Peterborough. She had been a virtuous girl, and I suppose her friends had carefully watched over her. He, however, got a letter written, as if from his own mother, asking the bride elect to spend a few weeks with her before marriage with her son. Both she and her friends fell into the snare, and she left home, but never, I believe, to return to it again. And in this way, from what I have known and heard, hundreds of young girls are being dragged down to ruin.

I hope I have said nothing calculated to offend the taste of any readers. These things demand our attention, and, as we expect to be judged hereafter according to our responsibilities, let us give them both our prayerful and careful attention. All honour to those engaged in rescuing the fallen, and the honour due shall not be withheld from those who shall labour to keep others from falling. JOHN E. LINNELL.

LONDON'S SHAME.

WE understand that a copy of the following letter has been addressed to the most influential of the clergy of the Established Church:—

REV. AND DEAR SIR,—You are no doubt aware of the terrible revelations of brutality and villainy which have convulsed London during the past fortnight. Let me, as a fellow Churchman and fellow Christian, urge upon you immediate action in order to obtain such an alteration of the law as shall make it criminal to compass the ruin of children and young women.

As the law now stands, any girl of thirteen years of age may be ruined with the law's connivance, provided that by force or fraud a colourable consent is obtained from her. According to the facts brought to light by The Pall Mall Gazette—which, on most undoubted authority, I can vouch for as being in the main unquestionable—thousands of these little ones are bought and sold, and, having been ruined by rich villains, gravitate to and fill the brothels of large towns. As the law now stands, conspiracy to destroy the virtue of innocent young women is no crime. Consequently procuresses are employed who, even in the garb of Sisters of Mercy and Deaconesses, decoy young women into bad houses, where, by the aid of drugs and other means, they are ruined, and then by force or terror driven into the ranks of the lost. As the law now stands, a father, knowing his daughter to be confined in a brothel, and even knowing that she is being sold to foreign slavery, cannot procure authority to search for her, except by a writ of habeas corpus, to obtain which necessitates considerable delay and great expense.

Great efforts have been made for years to get these laws altered, but the influence of the vicious in high places has hitherto rendered all efforts of no avail. The daring action of The Pall Mall Gazette has aroused public attention, and, if the children and young women of England are hereafter left unprotected, it can only be by the silent acquiescence of the Churches. Petitions similiar to the annexed are in course of signature at many churches. I would earnestly ask you to have one placed in your church for signature next Sunday, and to send it to your Parliamentary representative for presentation, with an urgent request for his assistance.

I need hardly endeavour to enforce the obligation upon all Christians in a crisis like the present, to use every means in their power to remove the disgrace which now rests upon our nation, and also to use their influence to promote a higher tone of morality generally.—Yours faithfully, FRANCIS PEEK.

Sydenham Hill, S.E., July 20.

PETITION.

To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Members of the Congregation meeting in .... Church .... showeth:—

That your Petitioners, in view of the terrible revelations lately published in respect of the moral wickedness perpetrated in our great cities, humbly pray that your honourable house will be pleased to raise the age of protection of young girls from 13 to 18 years, and otherwise to strengthen the law, so that women of all ages may be protected from conspiracy. And your Petitioners will ever pray.

MODERN BABYLON.

A WORD TO THE CHRISTIAN PRESS.

BY REV. W. M. STATHAM.

STRIP off the roofs, lay bare the walls,
Fierce light must penetrate the halls
Of sin and shame.
Frail girlhood, struggling in the hold
Of cruel lust, with wrongs untold,
Resists in vain.

Spare neither rank, nor wealth, nor age,
The hour has struck. The awful page
Of London's vice
Lies all before us—stained with shame;
And we must share the damning blame,
And pay the price

Of coward's doom, conniver's guilt,
Unless we rise, and to the hilt
Plunge in the sword
Of public scorn and piercing hate,
Through this foul traffic. For the State
Speaks not a word.

God help us. Louder blow the blast.
Waken, O Christians!—call a fast,
Such as God asks.
"From thine own flesh thou shalt not hide,"
"Loose bonds of wickedness," and "chide,"
These be thy tasks.

For judgment once was turned away,
And "Justice stood far off," the day
That Israel quailed,
And wonder'd much that no man waved
Truth's flag—nor intercessor saved;
For Justice failed.

"Truth in the street has fallen"—said
God's prophet; we may also read
That ancient word,
For still "their feet do run to ill,"
Innocent blood men haste to spill—
Lust for their sword.

"None call for justice," none but Thee;
"Their webs" no more "shall garments be,"
For Thou shalt rend
The robes of this most hideous ghoul,
Revealing Lust's fierce features foul;
Nor wilt Thou lend

An ear to optimistic ease,
But still smite hard, nor deign to please
Proud Fashion's world,
And stay at once this monster Lust,
Lest England's crown into the dust
By God be hurl'd.

EX-INSPECTOR MINAHAN.

THE testimonial which has been subscribed for by a number of the friends of social purity in order to make some public recognition of the devotion to duty shown by ex-Inspector Minahan, especially for his conduct in connection with the Jeffries prosecution, was presented to him last week in the Memorial Hall Farringdon-street. Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, observed that they might have had a large meeting, but it was deemed advisable to have a restricted gathering for various reasons. Light had now been let in on the subject that was awakening the public mind, a strong public opinion had been aroused and was being formed, and this was the most hopeful feature of the movement. For this light they were considerably indebted to Inspector Minahan. It was through his courage, conscientiousness, and want of self-seeking that they had met that day. They greatly appreciated his honesty of purpose, and they sympathised with him in what he had suffered.

Mr. James B. Wookey, in the absence of Mr. Dyer, through illness, made the presentation to Mr. Minahan. The amount of money handed to him was £120 3s. 3d., contributed by the readers of The Sentinel, The Christian, and The Christian Commonwealth.

Mr. Minahan, having acknowledged gratefully the kindness shown him, said the revelations of The Pall Mall Gazette, although new to some people, were not new to him, and they were not new to the police of London. While he sincerely hoped that Parliament would pass a law giving better protection to young girls, he knew it would be of little avail if the police authorities neglected or refused to put the law in motion. . . . . What was most wanted was a full and exhaustive inquiry into the state of the police force—an inquiry which should be instituted immediately—and steps taken to remedy the existing state of things.

Mr. Benjamin Scott proposed a resolution demanding of the Government an independent inquiry into Mr. Minahan's case, including his allegations of collusion between superior police officials and notorious lawbreakers, particularly with reference to the Jeffries prosecution; and, further as to the mode in which superannuation is regulated in the Metropolitan police force. The City Chamberlain delivered a powerful indictment of the police, or rather a portion of the force, and expressed himself in strong terms of disapproval of the course which Sir William Harcourt had taken in regard to Mr. Minahan's case. He was very sorry, as a Liberal, to speak in condemnation of Sir William Harcourt, but all throughout this business and in similar matters the late Home Secretary seemed not to have done his duty as a gentleman and a Liberal statesman. The allegations which Inspector Minahan made had never been impartially investigated, and, as a consequence, he and they were very much dissatisfied; they would continue to be dissatisfied until a proper inquiry was set on foot. The fact was that the Metropolitan police force was in a most unsatisfactory condition, and he could establish that assertion apart altogether from Mr. Minahan's case. Mr. Scott proceeded to specify instances which had come under his own knowledge of the gross mismanagement of the force, and asserted that the police were corrupted by bribes given to them by publicans and prostitutes. It was time to speak out about these things. Mr. Minahan was the first man to lift the corner of the veil which covered the abominations of London, and now the veil had, happily, been rent asunder and taken right away by another man.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone seconded the resolution, remarking that they were glad to keep in memory the noble and manly conduct of men like Mr. Minahan. In the course of his speech he particularly emphasised the advisability of making a resolute attack at the next election upon the constituencies of men who were the enemies of social purity.

Earnest speeches followed from Miss Bewicke, Rev. W. T. Moore, of The Christian Commonwealth, Mr. S. J. Capper, Mr. Mark Knowles, Miss Helen Taylor, Mr. Rowland, Mr. R. Scott, Mr. Thomasson, M.P., Mr. W. Hind-Smith, Mr. J. P. Sherrard, and Mr. F. N. Charrington. The facts stated as to police collusion with evildoers were indeed startling, and we hope the demand for an investigation will be pressed. A resolution was moved asking that in the Bill before Parliament, the age of legal protection for young women should be raised to eighteen. An amendment moved by Miss Taylor that the age-limit be placed at twenty-one was, however, carried with only three dissentients. The heartiest thanks of the meeting were accorded to The Pall Mall Gazette for its recent unveiling of the dark deeds of the great city. Several of the speakers laid strong emphasis on the need of better home training, as well as better and more drastic legislation. The strong current of feeling displayed throughout the proceedings was very marked, and furnished one of the many indications that the agitation on this unhappy subject will not be allowed to subside until they have thrown its ægis as far as it can do over those in peril.

With regard to the recent revelations of vice, we are glad to read these words in The Nonconformist and Independent:—

> "To redress the crying wrong is pre-eminently the work of the religious world. The Christian Church will accomplish it when thoroughly aroused to a sense of its responsibilities."

We are the more gratified as we well remember the discouragement which the opponents of the Contagious Diseases Acts experienced by the refusal of the Independents to allow the introduction of the subject into the Congregational Union meetings. Nothing ever so deplorably lowered the moral tone of English women of the lower class as these Acts; or so much familiarised mothers with the degrading idea that vicious courses were a recognised and lawful means of gain.

About this painful subject another lesson should be learnt. There have been faithful ministers, and not a few, who have been bitterly denounced by their own seat-holders if they uttered even the most carefully worded warning against temptations that were ruining young men and women on all sides of them. When a nation is aroused by finding itself brought to the edge of a pit in which great empires have been swallowed up, it charges its preachers with being "dumb dogs that cannot bark." There are those, however, who have preferred the wolves, ravening in secret to the alarm of the faithful watchers.

Public opinion (which is certainly far more accurately gauged and expressed by the provincial than the metropolitan press) is rising rapidly. Meetings of men, and of women, and of both, have been, and are being held in London and all over the country to demand the passing of the Criminal Amendment Bill, so amended as to meet the necessities of the case. Among these we mention a great gathering at the Assembly Hall, Mile-end (Mr. Charrington's), and a subsequent meeting on Mile-end Waste of thousands who could not get into the hall; a meeting of 4000 men at the Edinboro' Castle (Dr. Barnardo's); meetings of men at the Memorial Hall, addressed by Mr. Wookey, on Personal and Public Morality; a Conference of parents and guardians at Wood-green; a crowded meeting of young men at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, on Monday, and another in the evening at Exeter Hall, both addressed by Miss Ellice Hopkins; one at Finsbury Park Hall last night (Wednesday), to be followed, doubtless, by many others. And a drawing-room meeting at Bournemouth, addressed by Mrs. Reaney.

In the provinces mass meetings have been held at Manchester, Liverpool, Sunderland, and other towns and cities.

One of the most remarkable features of most of these meetings has been, that when the age for the protection of girls has been stated in the resolution at sixteen or eighteen, the meetings have passed amendments nem. con., refusing to name an earlier age than twenty-one.

The longer legislation is delayed the more thorough must it be at last, and we confess that we think it vastly more important to agitate, agitate, agitate the question throughout the land, and to wake up every family to its danger, than to force an insufficient Bill through Parliament before grouse-shooting begins.

It is important to preserve a well-balanced judgment in dealing with the alarm which has been sounded against vice. We must not be unjust to the police. Twelve per cent. of them are believed to be reliable Christian men, to whom many a girl owes her safety and deliverance. We hope some qualified person will take up this subject in our columns.

There is a tendency in all new and impulsive movements to ignore older workers, and for these to look jealously on the zealous but less experienced new comers. There ought to be conference and intercommunication between these, so as to secure unity of feeling, sentiment, and action.

Mr. Spurgeon opens The Sword and Trowel for August with "Another Note of Warning," which he closes with the following paragraph:—

> "We are glad to see our contemporary, The Christian, with its black border and its cry of lamentation and woe. It has done well to put on the sackcloth openly, for signs are good when they truly indicate the inward grace which they symbolize, and we are sure that our friend is unutterably troubled with the mournful tidings he has heard. We have need all of us to mourn, every family apart, and our wives apart, as Zechariah prophesied concerning Israel. The man clothed in linen with the writer's inkhorn by his side is among us, marking the men that sigh and cry for the abominations which are done in our midst: these shall escape the avenging sword; but what will become of those who come not up to the help of the Lord against the mighty? Will any one of us dare to think himself exempt from the general mourning? At such a time as this neutrality is treason to the cause of righteousness. To your knees, O Israel! To your God and to his Christ, with cries and entreaties, lest the nation so highly favoured be given over to her doom."

An esteemed country correspondent writes as follows:—

> "Dear Sir,—Will a sheet be published, to be followed by others, which we can widely circulate among our rural people, that may sound an alarm as to the peril in which they place their daughters when they send them to the great city? There are many who are elated, instead of alarmed, when they meet their daughters returned from service clad in city fashion."

We have issued "England's Shame," The Christian "Extra," for this very purpose, to be followed, if necessary, by others. Price 6d. per dozen; or, for gratuitous distribution, direct from the office, 3s. per 100, and 25s. per 1000.

A correspondent who has read the remarks in our columns upon the subject of pernicious reading suggests that Sunday-school teachers should interest themselves in their scholars' reading, and lend or give to the scholars such books as will create a taste for what is pure and helpful.

REV. SAMUEL HEBDITCH.

THE Rev. Samuel Hebditch, whose portrait we present, was born in the village of Lopen, in Somersetshire, a place so insignificant that it is mentioned on few of our maps, and the very name of which is probably unknown to nine-tenths of our readers. His conversion is understood to have taken place in early life. He was soon stirred with the desire to tell to others the blessedness of salvation: so he commenced preaching at Merriott, near Crewkerne. Feeling himself called to more distinct ministerial work, he went to study under Rev. Wm. Legge, of Fakenham, Norfolk, who was in the habit of assisting young men in their preparation for the ministry. Here Mr. Hebditch remained for two years pursuing his studies, and preaching in the Norfolk villages. From Fakenham he passed to Highbury College, where he remained four and a half years.

In the spring of 1848, Mr. Hebditch entered upon his first charge at Ashburton, in Devon, on the confines of Dartmoor; and in the quiet round of duties implied by a country pastorate he spent the next five years. During this period he married Miss Partridge, a young lady from Stroud. The next removal was in 1853, when, by the advice of Rev. Thomas James (brother of the well-known John Angell James) he was induced to accept of a pastoral charge at Woolwich, where the next two and a half years were passed.

Arley Chapel, Bristol, had just been built, and the congregation were looking out for a suitable minister. Professor Godwin suggested Mr. Hebditch. Having preached at Arley for a few Sundays, at the request of the congregation, a church was formed, and Mr. Hebditch became the first pastor. Here, honoured and beloved, he remained for seventeen years —from August, 1855, to August, 1872.

About the time of the enforced retirement from the pastorate of the well-known Dr. Spence, long the minister of Poultry Chapel, and for whom a new church had been erected at Clapton-park, Mr. Hebditch had been asked to give an address on "The Spiritual Condition of the Congregational Churches." That thoughtful and suggestive paper was one of the most spiritually effective ever read before the Congregational Union, listened to by a deeply-interested auditory, and at the time reported in THE CHRISTIAN, and published as a pamphlet, entitled "Genuine Revival." Among the hearers were some of the Christians identified with this new Clapton Chapel. They were so impressed by the discourse that Mr. Hebditch was invited to occupy the pulpit, and by the advice of the late Rev. David Thomas he consented. In September, 1872, Mr. Hebditch entered upon this pastorate, which he is now resigning. Seventeen years at Arley; thirteen years at Clapton: these are terms of years that tell well both for pastor and people, when "patient continuance" ranks less as a virtue than it did of yore.

The Clapton ministry has had one interruption. The serious illness of his son led Mr. Hebditch to undertake a voyage to Australia in July, 1880. He went out in the Sorata, which, unfortunately, ran upon a reef, when approaching the Australian mainland. In Melbourne Mr. Hebditch's ministry met with large acceptance; and for twelve months he was ad interim pastor of the important church in Collins-street, in that city—the church over which Rev. Thomas Jones, the "poet preacher" of Wales, had previously presided. The son's health having improved, Mr. Hebditch resolved upon returning to England, which he did in November, 1881, after an absence of sixteen months. Before returning he visited Sydney, Adelaide, and Tasmania, spending a fortnight at each place, and of course preaching.

The hope that the health of the younger Mr. Hebditch would be completely reinstated by these two voyages has not been fully realised; and this has led his father to recognise it as a duty for him to sever himself from England and English ties, and to look upon Australia as his future home. He will leave London with the deep regrets of the hundreds who have heard the "law of truth" from his lips, and who have been fed and nourished by his ministry. They will no longer see his snow-white hair, or look on his placid face, or hear his gentle words; but the remembrance of the first pastor of Clapton-park Church, gracious, consecrated, humble-minded, patient, wise, and good, will remain with them long as life shall last. REV. SAMUEL HEBDITCH'S FAREWELL.

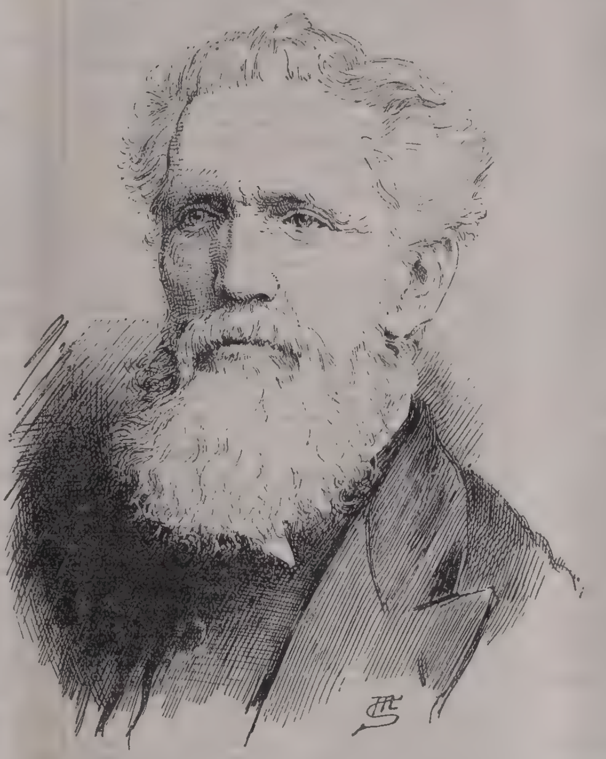
THE Rev. Samuel Hebditch preached his farewell sermon at Clapton Park Congregational Chapel on Sunday evening last, to an overflowing congregation.



The service was commenced with the hymn "Praise, my soul, the God of heaven," the lessons being Isaiah lv. and Luke xv. He took for his text Acts xx. 24—27, "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received from the Lord Jesus, to testify to the Gospel of the grace of God. And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more. Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men." Mr. Hebditch said: These words are Paul's, not mine. The occasion was very similar, though not the men. He was a great missionary, going from field to field, accustomed to greetings and farewells. True, he had been three years in and about Ephesus; he had closer apostolic relations to that Church than to any other, and for that reason was more deeply moved in bidding farewell to them than on any other occasion. Thus the New Testament came to contain this clear valedictory passage, which is inevitably turned to when ministers are called to take leave of their flocks. Not that I can presume to appropriate all the words here, but the great thoughts they contain are suggestive and suitable to the present moment.

It is scarcely possible to avoid a reference to the office or the man, but the great spiritual facts here presented are those to which I wish particularly to draw attention. If Paul had been thirteen years, instead of three, in that ministry, I am not sure that he would have spoken quite with the confidence he does here. I hardly know who is able to use this 26th verse, and to say he is pure from the blood of all men. The whole passage speaks of the Christian ministry, and there are five principal points on which I will briefly dwell.

(1) The Apostle speaks of the ministry "which I have received of the Lord Jesus." If, on September 8, 1872, when I put my foot on the first stair of this pulpit, some one had arrested me, and said, "By what warrant are you going up there? How can you presume to stand there as a spiritual teacher?" that would not have been an unfair question. But I could have said, "I am beginning here to-day the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus Christ."

If it had been asked again, "How do you know that? Have you had apostolic ordination, or have you been licensed? Have you received a call from any Presbytery, or been appointed by any Conference?" I should have said "No;" but I could have said, "I enter upon this ministry, because I have received it from the Lord Jesus."

The Lord has ways of making his will known to-day just as well as in the time of the Apostles. You of this church and congregation believe that He guided you in seeking me; and when, after consideration, I accepted your call, it was from the conviction that I was guided hither. This is a very important point, for it is not in the power of anybody whatsoever to make a minister, and enormous mischief has been done by the assumption of this power.

The Chief Shepherd alone has the appointing of the under-shepherds, and the nearest approach to an authoritative voice from man was yours to me. If I had not believed this, I should have declined as I had done others. I take it as a great fact that thirty-seven years ago, concerning a little flock on the borders of Dartmoor, Christ said to me, "Feed my lambs." That five years later, concerning a little flock in Kent, He said, "Feed them." That three years after, in reference to one near Bristol, He said, "Feed them." And that in 1872, concerning you, He said, "Feed them." Oh, young men! ask the Master, "What wouldst Thou have me to do?" It is a blessed thing to be his servants, to take service from Him. He knows all our weakness, and gives according to his knowledge.

(2) "To testify the Gospel of the grace of God." This is the one object of the true minister. Wrongly does anyone enter upon the ministry for a living or as any other profession. In the Gospel God reveals his infinite love towards man; He tells us "God so loved the world" — who can measure that so? — "that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Gospel is God's message to man, and the work of the minister is to witness of the grace of God—of his justice and truth, his lovingkindness and tender mercy. The message sent to the prodigal son is, "Come home!" But man is deaf, disinclined, hostile. Some one is needed to go after him to whisper or shout this message, "God so loved the world." The Gospel is to be clearly, simply told—it is the "old, old story," and that is the great purpose of the ministry, to testify clearly, simply, of God. Therefore, I wish again to witness to you to-night that God loves you, Christ died for you, that heaven is open to you—to the prodigal son, if he will but believe and accept.

(3) "None of these things move me." You have here the supreme importance of this ministry. Paul looked forward to the end of his course, he sees himself accepted by the great Master, crowned with honour, having had a successful and happy career as a preacher of the Gospel. Nothing, he said, should hinder him —no troubles, no persecution from Jew or Gentile—neither devil nor man should keep him back—nothing should move him from making known this Gospel of the grace of God.

(4) "I take you to record this day that I am pure from the blood of all men." You have here the immense responsibility of the ministry. But have you ever thought how much this ministry is in your hands? Think of the influence each one has over children, servants, and all with whom they are connected. It is an awful fact that the interest of our fellow men is in our keeping. And how many willing agents of the devil there are in the destruction of human souls! God said to Ezekiel, if the sword should slay the man whom he had not warned, of his hands would He require that man's blood; but if the watchman's warning had not been heeded, then his blood should be on his own head. The warning should take effect, but the watchman should deliver his own soul. Fix your thoughts, then, on the conditions of this responsibility. The defects of the ministry will not free you. If you have heard the Gospel of the grace of God presented to you but once, responsibility is yours, whether you have rejected or accepted the Saviour. It is a very solemn thing, that responsibility, but I trust I have so delivered my message as that I may be pure, in the sight of God, from the blood of all.

(5) "I know that ye all shall see my face no more." Paul made a mistake here. He was not inspired to foresee everything, never pretended to be. He had not gone to prison yet. I believe he was at Ephesus again. He did not think he should see them again, and, though to some of us there may yet be the pleasure of grasping each other's hands, yet of how many is it true that we shall never meet again. At any rate the relation between us as minister and people ceases now. Oh, then, if there are any who have not yet come to a decision, let them hesitate no longer. Oh that those still in their sins may now hear the voice of the Son of God and live! All difficulty lies with yourselves. God's invitation is to all. He bids you come just as you are. He promises to receive you graciously, to cleanse you from your sins, to love you freely. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." So I close in the words of Paul, which it is not presumption to use, "Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God; for He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

The service was concluded with the hymn "Abide with me."

THE DENABY MINERS.—Rev. T. J. Leslie, of Mexborough, writes on July 23: The lock-out is said to be at an end; the men will be allowed to resume work at 5s. per day for colliers, and 4s. for fillers, as soon as the pit can be got ready, and when the manager thinks well to send for them; but the distress continues, and it is likely to continue for another week or two. During the thirty weeks of this lock-out many of the families have parted with all they could dispose of long ago for bread. I shall be truly thankful when they are all allowed to resume work. They come to me day after day, and the tales of suffering I have to listen to are painful in the extreme.

UNITED STATES.—A case of religious fanaticism, the consequences of which have been deplorable, has lately caused much scandal in the United States At Denver (Colorado) three children have died since Christmas in an asylum where they had been taken, when suffering from maladies which are generally not serious. The director of this establishment, when questioned by the judge, replied that no doctor was admitted to visit the pensioners of the asylum, and that he allowed no remedy to be given to them, because he believed in faith-healing by the means of prayer alone. As a result of the post-mortem examination, it was stated that the children had died from the effect of maladies, which are easy to cure with the aid of proper medical treatment. The verdict pronounced the director "a religious fanatic," "criminally negligent," and ordered the closing of the asylum. —L'Evangéliste.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN AFRICA.

A LARGE and influential meeting, convened by the Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, was held on Wednesday at the Mansion House, to hear an address from Mr. H. M. Stanley, the distinguished traveller, on the condition of the slave trade in Africa, and especially on the practicability of carrying out General Gordon's scheme of approaching the Bahr Gazelle and Upper Nile by way of the Congo. At the conclusion of Mr. Stanley's eloquent address, which was followed by enthusiastic applause, Cardinal MANNING moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting has listened with deep interest to the luminous exposition which Mr. Stanley has now given of the scheme originally propounded by the late General Gordon, and of its vast possibilities in the future for the extinction of the slave trade and the extension of Christian civilisation and of legitimate commerce in the regions of Central Africa; that the meeting views with the deepest solicitude the continued increase of the slave trade, coupled as it is with the disordered and disastrous condition of the tribes inhabiting the valley of the Nile, and hereby expresses its conviction that England has incurred responsibilities towards the people of those countries which she cannot repudiate without injustice and dishonour."

The resolution was seconded by Mr. JAMES F. HUTTON, and was carried unanimously. A vote of thanks to Mr. Stanley for his address concluded the proceedings.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

NORTH EUROPE AND PEACE.—The Peace Society, through its honorary secretary, Mr. Henry Richard, M P., has recently been engaged in correspondence with the friends of peace and international arbitration in North Europe. From these it has received the gratifying intelligence of a growing interest in the cause in that part of the Continent, especially in Copenhagen and Stockholm. A peace and arbitration conference for the North has been convened for August 17 to 19, at Gothenburg, in Sweden, where the leaders of the movement will further expound their views. Meanwhile Peace journals are circulating in Denmark and Sweden.

MADAGASCAR.—The Ambatonakanga Church, says Rev. T. Matthews, of the London Missionary Society, has not only held its own, but, in spite of the French invasion, has made real progress. The congregations have been well sustained, the communion services largely attended, the funds have increased, and the Sabbath-school continues to flourish most satisfactorily. To the yearly report is added a brief and interesting sketch of Razaka, late pastor of the church at Fihaona, and known as the apostle of Vonizongo. As one effect of the war, the different tribes inhabiting the island have become more than ever united in their attachment to each other, and in their allegiance to the Queen.

REV. E. VANORDEN writes from Rio Grande, Brazil, June 12:—"Our Church is enjoying a blessing from the Lord. Since Ascension Day extra meetings have been held; the members have made a confession of sin to the Lord, and earnestly pray to be led into a higher Christian life; as a result the attendance has increased, and eight persons signified their faith in Jesus, three of whom are negroes. All this was brought about, under the Lord's blessing, by an account which I gave of the work of the Lord in the churches in London, published in THE CHRISTIAN. Help is earnestly needed to extend the work, which Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, will thankfully receive.

MRS. MUMFORD IN BULGARIA.—In a letter recently received from Mrs. Mumford, dated June 20, she says: "This is my forty-seventh birthday. School closed on the 18th, which was the anniversary of the battle of Petersburg, where my beloved husband was killed. For more reasons than that it was a trying day, it being the day on which my first class graduated. Our commencement was the best we have ever had, so I am told by outsiders—quite a success." Again she writes: "How much we need your prayers and sympathy during these days of financial stress, when I am tested on every side." Mrs Mahan, 27, Ceylon-place, Eastbourne, writes that there is a pressing deficit, which she hopes our readers will help to defray.

THE SPIRIT OF SIN.

FROM the author of evil, the father of lies,
She ascended to reign, from the depths to the skies.

She came in her might, the wild Spirit of Sin,
Crying, "I am a Queen, and the world I'll win."

Her large dark wings over space were spread,
A radiant diadem decked her head,

A lurid light on her pathway shone;
She came to triumph alone! alone!

And men and women beheld her reign,
And loved her beauty, nor marked its stain;

But innocent childhood shrank away
From her voice and touch to its guileless play.

The young man, entranced by her syren song,
Drank deep of her wine, till the thought of wrong

Was sweet to his soul, and his blood ran fire.
Nigher she drew to him, ever nigher,

Till his cup of life was poisoned all;
And she shouted with glee at his fearful fall.

Then she joyed o'er the havoc her spell had wrought
With the maiden's heart, and again she sought

To soil and to harden a fair bright soul,
Till the young life bent to her fierce control;

And away to the agèd and wan she sped,
Bringing shame and contempt on the hoary head.

And on to the loving, the fond, and true
Of heart, on her errand of hate she flew.

She promised more joy, but she stirred up strife,
Sund'ring spirit from spirit, and life from life.

O'er scenes of wild carnage, and lawless might,
She sang of high honour, of fame, of delight;

And she revelled in slaughter, the Spirit of Sin,
Crying, "I am a Queen, and the world I'll win."

Then the prophets arose, and they shouted aloud
To the maddened, excited, worshipping crowd,

"Look not on her beauty! she's foul within!
Hark not to her speech. Ere your pain begin,

Dash her cup from your lips, it is poisoned wine,
To your dazzled eyes she is fair and fine;

But she comes to the earth, the ranks to swell,
Of multitudes lost in the gloom of hell;

Her beauty's a mask, her vice to hide!"
Then they caught her, and tore her veil aside,

Revealing a horrible form, and mien,
While she shriekingly strove her shame to screen.

But multitudes turned on the prophets then,
Stoned them, and deemed them accurst among men,

And they decked her with flowers, with gems, and gold,
To hide her deformity. Lives they sold,

Ay, bodies and souls, for one single smile
From the cruel eyes, and the features vile.

Yet some who were wounded nigh unto death,
Turned loathing away from her poisonous breath,

And cried for a spirit to guide them aright,
To save them from Sin, and her terrible might.

Then the pure white Angel of Mercy came,
Silent and swift, and she breathed a name

That could heal the wounded, and raise the dead,
And the Spirit of Sin before her fled.

The Angel of Mercy outstretched to the crowd
The arms of her love, and proclaimed thus aloud:

"The reign of the terrible Sorceress, Sin,
Is ending; the reign of the Christ doth begin.

He hath triumphed by agony, tears and blood;
He hath conquered, the holy, the just, and good.

Strip the Sorceress, Sin, of her vain disguise.
Behold her now vanquished. The light of her eyes

Is the torch of death; but the light hath shone
That shall triumph for ever, alone! alone!

Christ Jesus, by dying, hath conquered sin,
He is Monarch, and Lord, and the world He'll win."

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Temperance hotel has just been opened on Ben Nevis, near the Observatory. The walls are threefold, to resist cold and damp.

The Committee of the Irish Temperance League have decided to publish and distribute at an early date 300,000 copies of an electoral manifesto.

A drinking fountain has been erected in Liverpool in memory of the late Mr. William Simpson, and it was opened on July 11 by Sir John Picton.

A Temperance Society, under the auspices of the National Temperance League, was recently formed in the 77th Battalion King's Royal Rifles at Barnet.

The Irish Temperance League has arranged to hold open-air Temperance meetings at all the watering-places in the North of Ireland during the summer.

American Temperance organs promise Archdeacon Farrar an enthusiastic welcome on the occasion of his promised visit to America in September next.

The International Temperance Congress is to be held at Antwerp, on the 11th and 12th of next September. It is stated that "Belgium is ravaged with the plague of alcoholism."

The Mississippi State Convention on Prohibition recently resolved to support only prohibition candidates, and declared it unwise, unpatriotic and immoral to raise revenue from the sale of whisky.

According to the statement of the new Minister for Education, Mr. Stanhope, elementary education in England and Wales costs £6,500,000 a year, or about one-twentieth of the amount spent during the same period in drink.

A lady writes to a contemporary, that a number of blind men meet at her house every Saturday night to hear The Alliance News read. They take a great interest in the Local Option Agitation, and are willing to work heartily to promote Temperance reform.

Speaking at Truro, recently, Bishop Cheetham, late of Sierra Leone, said that "he spoke with a feeling of shame, as an Englishman, of the curse drink was on the West Coast of Africa. We taught the heathen there to drink. At Lagos, 1,040,000 gallons of spirits were imported in one year."

In the United States wine-producing is being developed so enormously as to excite the fears of friends of Temperance. The immense gains of the business, the "power of abnormal appetite," and the increased facilities for drinking which must ensue, will all be against the Temperance cause.

It is well known that Lord Wolseley did not allow intoxicants in the late Egyptian campaigns. It is a remarkable fact that the defaulter-sheet of the Royal Horse Guards division of the Camel Corps, from the day they left England till the day of their return to rejoin their regiment, did not show a single entry.

Three Temperance meetings have been held in connection with the Methodist Free Church Annual Assembly at Nottingham—viz., at New Basford, Ilkeston, and Nottingham, and all were large and enthusiastic. It was stated that nine-tenths of the Free Church ministers are abstainers, and a very large proportion of the office bearers.

For four years past Sunday services, Temperance meetings, lectures, dramatic and other entertainments have been held at the Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road. A marked change is visible in the habits of the people around, for on Monday mornings formerly there was an average of seventeen charged with drunkenness, and now it is three.

The Merchants' Café Co., Limited, Manchester, have just opened, in Deansgate, a new Temperance Café, specially intended for ladies. The Dean of Manchester presided at the opening, and Canon Kelly, with others, took part. Mr. Fairchild, president of the Manchester Coffee Co., mentioned that his Company was now taking in very small sums over £400 a week.

The Berlin correspondent of The Standard writes that Germans at the Cameroons are complaining bitterly of the vile spirits sent out by German traders, and of the terrible effects on the natives. Baptist missionaries, when they complained, were denounced as liars, but even the Germans themselves are proving that what they said was true.

Ocean-grove, New Jersey, is a fashionable summer resort, where the sale of intoxicants is prohibited, the estate having been bought by a company for the purpose. A Temperance camp meeting has been arranged to be held there, at which prominent ministers and others will speak on various phases of the Temperance question. A Temperance watering-place in England might pay.

Dr. F. R. Lees has published a vigorous pamphlet entitled, "Lord Bramwell as a Drinker and Thinker."

The Church of England Temperance Sick and Burial Society is rapidly extending the sphere of its operations. The benefit fund now exceeds £2000.

In Prussia alone close upon 2000 men are said to be treated every year for delirium tremens, and seven out of ten are between twenty and fifty years of age.

A branch of the Church of England Temperance Society has been established in connection with the corps of Royal Engineers, and is receiving influential support.

A striking proof of the force of the Temperance movement is seen in the fact that a recent number of The Lancet had no less than five articles on the drink question.

At Stratford, on July 20, the trustees of the Prince Regent's Workmen's Club, were fined £75 for retailing beer, spirits, wine, and tobacco without being licensed.

A deputation of ladies of New Zealand lately waited on Sir Julius Vogel asking that steps be taken to give women the right to vote on all questions relating to the Licensing Act.

Mr. A. M. Powell has written to Mr. Barker, consulting secretary to the United Kingdom Alliance, describing the rapid progress of the Prohibition movement in the United States.

At a recent meeting of the Académie de Medicine, Paris, M. Mottell read a paper, in which he asserted that in France, crimes, murders, &c., committed under the influence of drink, were on the increase.

During the past year the Liverpool Temperance and Band of Hope Union held 2,300 meetings, estimated attendances, 195,000, and 3000 pledges were taken. There are 110 affiliated societies, with 16,000 members.

The Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars held its fifteenth session last week at Londonderry. There were representatives from nearly all parts, and reported sixty-six lodges, with a total of 2477 members.

The annual united Temperance demonstration of Sunday-schools and Temperance Societies at Newton Heath, Manchester, took place on July 18. A large number of scholars marched in procession, watched by admiring crowds of spectators.

The Rev. R. Swallow, missionary to China, told the Free Church Assembly at Nottingham, a few days since, that in China he had often been urged to take spirits and beer, but had refused, and been able to do his work on Temperance principles.

The League of the Cross, which has done such immense service in London and the provinces, is making great progress in the South of Ireland. At Mitchelstown, co. Cork, more than 1500 have signed the pledge, and drunkenness is almost extinct.

General Booth states that the Maories, New Zealand, have decided to embrace Christianity, but will join no Church which allows the sale or manufacture of strong drink by its members, and he thinks they will therefore ally themselves with the Salvation Army,

The Manchester and Salford District Temperance Union has had the most prosperous year the Union has known. 5000 ordinary meetings were held, 8000 pledges taken, 325,000 tracts distributed, and £4000 spent in Temperance effort. There is a balance in hand of £295.

In a recent report to his Government, Mr. Frank Mosen, United States Consul at Marseilles, says, "when cholera attacks those weakened or debilitated by alcholic excesses they come badly off, and when it attacks an asylum for inebriates it generally makes a clean sweep."

Sister Powney, a good templar, died very suddenly a few days since. She had been addressing a meeting of the Wheatsheaf Total Abstinence Society, South Lambeth, and had just concluded, when she fell from her seat, and on being carried out it was found she was dead.

Mr. E. J. Mather, of the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, has interviewed a captain of one of the notorious North Sea grog-ships. It appears that the mission ships have made so many of the sailors teetotallers that the grog trade alone does not pay now, and, to make a profit, fishing has to be added.

A few days since an inquest was held on the infant daughter of a cooper named Wright, who, but for drink, could earn 45s. a week. The child was found dead in the bed in which lay her father, mother, and three other children. There was no furniture in the house, and the jury regretted they could not bring the man in guilty of manslaughter.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

SOUTHGATE.—Mr. George King has just concluded some evangelistic services in the Chase Side Baptist Chapel, Southgate, and was instrumental in drawing a class of men, hitherto unreached, to hear the word.

MR. G. T. GILLINGHAM, evangelist, has accepted the unanimous call to the pastorate of the Baptist Church, Barking. Will Christian friends remember him, and pray that God will greatly bless his labours in this new sphere.

TENT WORK IN DEVON.—Mr. W. Brown, Fern-villa, Culmstock, Cullompton, Devon, writes to us of successful tent work in this district. A recent storm has damaged the tent, and the repairs have cost £12. Mr. Brown is anxious to open up fresh ground, and will be glad of help to enable him to do so.

MILE END.—Mr. E. P. Telford has just concluded six weeks' very successful evangelistic services at Mr. Charrington's Assembly Hall, Mile End. Many have been the confessions made of new life in Christ, and much spiritual blessing has attended Mr. Telford's preaching. During his visit he addressed the large crowd of men upon the Mile End waste, upon the great question of the day. He has now left for mission work at Dudley, Staffordshire, and the prayers of many new-born babes in Christ follow him.

SAHAM TOWEY. — The services in Miss Hamond's mission tent, on Mr. Brasnett's lawn, have been brought to a close. Mr. F. Hyatt, of the Evangelisation Society, awoke such a feeling in this parish as will never be forgotten. Church and chapel goers alike crowded into the tent each night to hear the Gospel, urgently and lovingly put before them. Such a tidal wave of spiritual awakening was never seen in this place. Miss Hamond and Lady Sebright have each addressed large numbers in the tent.

GRAYS, ESSEX.—As I requested prayer some months ago when laid aside from work, I now send a note of praise for all the Lord's goodness to me during my long illness. The men have kept up the services, but in consequence of the people not being visited for several months they have fallen off in attendance. The population of Grays is mainly composed of working people, and there are few to visit or look after them. A Bible woman here would be a great boon if I could only afford to pay one. I dare not at present attempt much work, for fear of being laid up again. God is blessing our Bible-class and increasing our numbers.

Grays, Essex. (Miss) M Bubb.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Bordesley Evangelical Mission continues to be attended with a large measure of success and blessing in the poor neighbourhood, and surrounding neglected districts, in which it is situated, and has accomplished, by the help and goodness of God, mighty results since the Mission was founded six and a half years ago. The work has been witnessed by thousands this summer who have attended the open-air, field, and waste-ground camp meetings. I often wish our friends could see one or two of these meetings. I believe they would be moved with compassion, as our blessed Lord was when he saw the multitude, and furnished us with a grand example, and exhorted us to do likewise. It may be interesting to them to know that the number of the various meetings held amount to 5000; the estimated attendance, 300,000; conversions, 2000; Temperance signatures, 10,000; the hungry fed with loaves of bread and free teas during hard times in the winter, 4200; the sick who have received hospital and dispensary notes and medicine, 400. "What shall the harvest be?" The Great Day will declare.

J. Stead.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY WIGGAN, with Mr. Wood, of Oldham, have closed a series of tent services in Ashton-road, Oldham. Many have professed to experience a change of heart, and nearly 500 have signed the pledge.

GEORGE-YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.—Mr. Geo. Holland is full of gratitude for the success vouchsafed to the efforts of himself and his helpers, as narrated in his report. Friends are invited to visit the institution upon any day but Saturday. A condensed view of its varied operations may be gained by a perusal of this record, which shows an average of more than a hundred meetings, classes, services, &c., held regularly every week. The development of the mission is, however, much hindered, says Mr. Holland, "for want of more space, and the number of attendants could be easily doubled if the room for preaching services were larger."

VACATION AT MOUNT HERMON.

TO send boys home to Europe, Asia, the Indian Territory, Mexico, for a vacation, would be to demoralising to purse and time, so Mr. Moody wisely says, "we will spend our vacation on this grand old farm of 400 acres." Hence the eighty lads are here, finding rest in the hay-field, at the dairy, and in sundry outings here and there. Study has a place in the daily programme, and work is made play, and glad elastic life, with plenty of time for fun and frolic is seen on this lovely hillside. The boys are blessed with Mr. Moody's presence, who is never so absorbed as not to have a "good morning" from each, and an occasional play-spell with the boys. He holds them all in his big heart, and any pain or sorrow which touches them touches him. Every morning he meets a Bible-class, which is the most interesting hour of the day. The Gospel of John—portions of it—have been studied with such care, that, when the class meets, the Bible is closed and they are catechised upon the letter and spirit of the chapter. The subject, the line of thought, the lesson taught, the practical use to be derived, is brought out with great vividness.

Just now they are discussing the various methods of dealing with inquirers, and how to meet the objections sinners make. In this class is seen the marvellous knowledge of their leader of the Scriptures. A boy asks a question. Instantly he is referred to a passage in the Bible which will answer it.

The Bible is the spiritual armoury, full of keenest weapons, and how to use wisely and deftly these weapons, is the object of this class. A fire of questions, sharp and bright, is kept up between leader and pupils, and the Bible is made a most interesting live book. Here boys are to be equipped for evangelistic service, and religion is made to be a most desirable thing. Reverently, yet familiarly, the lads talk with you on these mighty themes, and a stranger's heart is made to glow under the sweet sunshine of this school. The missionary organisation has its constitution and bye-laws, its frequent meetings, and so they are kept in deep sympathy with the majestic movements of this intense age.

The superintendent, Prof. H. E. Sawyer, whose wife is in deep sympathy with his work, is greatly beloved by the boys, and his influence is most potent for good. There is a manliness and self respect, a courtesy and obedience, which is a marked contrast with so many of our boys' colleges. The villages round about are feeling the influence of the young men in their meetings, who go out to aid in carrying on religious work.

Mr. Moody is expecting at the Convocation, to be held at the Northfield Seminary, August 5—15, some of the best Bible students in the land, and with Messrs. Sankey, McGranahan, and Towner, to lead the singing, the occasion must be one of greatest good.

Northampton, Mass., July 8. S. E. B.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

AFTER a winter of joyous service for Christ in music halls and various buildings in London, and many other cities, towns, and villages, we are once more pitching our tents and marquees in several places where the outlying masses are destitute of the blessings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The tents of the Mission are now erected at Hammersmith, West Kensington, Fulham, Dalston, Reading, Corfe Castle, Tunbridge, Lancaster, and we hope to add to the number in other places as funds are supplied. Never have we witnessed more interest, larger audiences, or more manifested fruit from the preaching than of late, thus still proving the Gospel to have for multitudes a deathless charm, and to be the "power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth."

Though we have suffered much pecuniary loss, through the removal by death and changed circumstances of many of our most liberal helpers of former years, we are full of hope that the Lord, whose work it is, will raise up new friends, and perhaps lead old friends of the work to give increased contributions, which will enable us to hold well our present "forts," and open fresh ones in many needy towns and villages, for the preaching of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

THE HOP-PICKERS.

MANY thousands of the poorest from our towns and cities (London especially) flock into Kent for work in the hop-gardens during September; and a few earnest hearts embrace this opportunity of reaching them with the Gospel and leading them to Christ. We seek every opportunity of personal conversation with the "hoppers" at the "bin," on the "highway," or at their "camps" and "hopper-houses," hold services among them on Sunday, and each evening in the villages, whither they resort to the shop or the ale-house; distribute books and tracts to such as can read; gather the "strangers" to free teas on Sunday, that we may in song and speech point them to Jesus; tend with medicine the sick; "rig out" at the mission store-room those who (shoeless and thinly clad) are otherwise exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Our head-quarters are at Goudhurst, and our day-work and camp-visitors within walking distance of this centre; our open-air services are held in the neighbouring villages from three to seven miles distant. The past two years we were able to open another centre at Yalding, and place two or three missionaries there. Our labours in past years have been blest to these poor lost ones; and we heartily wish we were able to extend our operations over a wider area.

We need help towards this work. Parcels of clothing, or tracts, should be sent, carriage prepaid, to Rev. J. J. Kendon, Marden Station, S.E.R.; contributions to the writer, LONDON IN THE YEAR OF GRACE 1885.

O SOVEREIGN city, glorious in thy state,
  Imperial in thy daring, boundless, free,
  The central wheel of time, yet like the sea
Forlorn, unfathomable, desolate—
Gathering all nations through thy open gate,
  And pouring forth thy miser wealth with glee,
  Yet hungry with thy dens of poverty,
And gathering blackness daily, guilt, and fate!
Who shall deliver thee, who dost thyself
  Deliver all men reckless of the cost,
  Scenting all haunts of slavery thy boast—
Yet harbouring at thy heart for damning pelf,
Hell's demon workshops that grind under breath,
  With one lone exit at the rear called Death!

MISSION WORK IN FRANCE.

HAVING recently returned from mission work amongst the French people, I am anxious shortly to return there. The "locale" especially laid on my heart is "Chantilly," so well known to most English residents in Paris, both from its proximity and from the fact that it is the French Newmarket, and on the magnificent "course" in front of the Chateau of the Duc d' Aumale is lost and won the French "Derby." I was there with other workers for nearly two months in the spring of the year, and the work was most encouraging. The pretty little Wesleyan Chapel was kindly placed at our disposal for services, and was soon filled to overflowing. I also held a Bible-reading for jockeys' wives, and had I remained longer should have had services for children. The French portion of the inhabitants are kindly and well disposed, and the opportunities for work amongst them very encouraging.

When we left, several exclaimed with tears, "Make haste and come back to us, for there has has been nothing like this in Chantilly since we remember." Workers in the vineyard are elbowing each other in England, while the cry comes forth from sunny France, "Come over and help us."

I am only waiting for the "Lord of the harvest" to send along someone likeminded with whom I can labour in the Gospel. I shall be glad to hear from anyone willing to join in the grand work, and shall be delighted to give further particulars. I may add that a knowledge of the French language is not essential, though it would be an advantage.

INTERNATIONAL AID TO YOUNG WOMEN.

IN reference to an article, on the 16th inst., from Madame Coste (the head of our work in Lyons), may I draw your attention to the fact (evidently unknown to her) that the International Union is now affiliated to the Young Women's Christian Association, and that, D.V., after August 12, an office will be opened at 1, Harewood-square, N.W., in connection with the "Y.W.C.A. Provincial, Colonial, and Continental Office," just removing to that address. Mrs. Bath, a lady in every way suited for the post, has just come to us as Secretary of the English Branch of the International Union, and will reside at the office. I am now translating into English (1) the list of members; (2) the Young Women's Guide-book, containing lists of safe homes, registries, English Consuls, &c., in various parts of the world; (3) rules; (4) cards of membership.

May I not beg all who love the Lord and care for the souls and bodies of our unprotected sisters, to join us by giving in their names, and so to become fellow-helpers in this important work? The fee is one shilling a year, and this pays for the list of members, &c., the Young Women's Guide-book only being charged for (2d., or post free, 2½d.). None but members have a right to the use of the "List of Members," or to give away the "Guide-book." For the last three years we have been actively caring for some hundreds of foreign young women, and we rejoice to know that not a few have returned to their own country, having found the best Friend as their guide for life, and their joy for ever.

Foreign girls in possession of the "Livret" (Guide-book), seeing our names in it, write or come to us in any difficulty, and these we have succoured when in the sorest need. I have about eighty lady secretaries specially helping in work among foreigners in our land, and we are working in direct connection with various safe foreign homes and registries; so that in this way, and through the great network of protection afforded by the Y.W.C.A. throughout Great Britain, we have the means of helping those who stand so greatly in want of help and sympathy. What we mostly need now is funds for agents to meet boats, trains, &c., and to establish Travellers' Friendlies near all the large stations. May the Lord supply our great need in this matter.

I shall be happy to send to anyone applying for it, the report of the work the Lord has accomplished by us among foreigners, in England and on the Continent, during the last three years. The International Union books have helped us greatly in caring for them; and now many will hail with joy the translation of these books into English, which will afford protection to our own young women when travelling in other lands. We feel sure the hearts of many will be stirred up to help us by their prayers and their means. My address is (Mrs.) H. Gardner James.

The Cottage, Larkfield, Richmond, Surrey.

OBITUARY.

MRS. T. D. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.

ON the 21st inst., the widow of the Rev. T. D. Harford-Battersby, late vicar of St. John's, Keswick, passed away at No. 1, Gloucester Mansion, South Kensington, aged sixty-two. It is a remarkable fact that, on two occasions so near to each other, the Convention at Keswick should be thrown into mourning by the deaths, two years ago of the beloved vicar, and this year of his wife.

REV. F. S. COURTENAY CHALMERS.

On the 15th day of this month, from Nonington Vicarage, Kent, there departed into the heavenly country one whose name has long been honoured and beloved in the Church of Christ, the Rev. Frederick Skene Courtenay Chalmers, vicar of Nonington, but more widely known as Rector of Beckenham. He had reached the age of eighty-one years. In the year 1843 he was ordained to the curacy of St. Mary's, Leamington, where for six years he "served as a son with a father" in the Gospel, with the late revered Rev. W. Marsh, D.D., whose second daughter he afterwards married.

Letters to the Editor.

MR. RADCLIFFE AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—I read in The Chrisian the fervent address delivered by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe at the recent Mildmay Conference, on the duty of Christians in general to help in the evangelisation of the heathen world. This closing appeal of the Conference no doubt produced a deep impression on many who heard it, and all who have the great first work of the Church at heart must desire that it may be effectual in calling devoted and competent men and women into the mission field.

At the same time it seems to me that this appeal is as likely to embarrass and dishearten those fit for such service, as it is to stimulate them. The conditions of modern life are so different from those of the Apostles' time, that it is no longer reasonable to expect men and women without means or organisation to "go everywhere preaching the Word." Paul, whose missionary journeys are best known to us, having, like all his countrymen, learned a trade, could support himself by it in every part of the world. Again, Jews were everywhere, and he found his first congregation among them, while as an educated man, he knew Latin and Greek, which put him in correspondence with the whole civilised heathen world. A general response of the Christians of England to Mr. Radcliffe's appeal, in the sense in which he seemed to desire it, would be a repetition of the first crusade, in which a million of poor creatures, roused to fanaticism by the preaching of Peter the Hermit, rushed Eastward to lay their bones in unknown countries, without so much as seeing the land they desired to wrest from the hands of the Saracens.

There is no doubt much occasion for shame and for reproof, furnished by lack of a worthy interest in the evangelisation of the world, but I cannot see that either the cause or the cure of this evil is satisfactorily indicated in Mr. Radcliffe's address. I believe there are in our churches thousands of men and women, in every way fit for missionary enterprise, who would gladly go forth into this work if those who have the means at home would support them in it. But to the large majority of these it is impossible to take the initiative. Much of the responsibility rests with our missionary societies. Their ways are too scholastic and too stereotyped to correspond with the various dealings of the Spirit of God in calling men and women to work among the heathen.

The following case will illustrate this fact. A young man of superior position and talent, and experienced as a traveller in Africa, gave his heart to God, and desired to serve Him as a missionary on the Dark Continent. I went on his behalf to the secretary of one of our great missionary societies, and earnestly recommended the applicant. The first reply was that no abatement of the scholastic curriculum could be made, although the young man had been well taught by earnest Christian parents, and had already appeared as a public lecturer. The venerable official then asked the age of the candidate, and being told he was twenty-seven, he closed the question summarily by saying he was too old for the rules of their society. That young man went out, however, to Central Africa, and planted several mission stations before he died, beloved and regretted by all who knew him.

Missionary societies are necessary, but the churches must take missionary work more directly into their own hands, if it is to be done on a worthy scale. Why should not many hundreds of our churches have each their own missionary in the heathen world, in direct and regular correspondence with the church which sustains him? and why should not the few wealthy churches of each denomination enjoy the privilege of doing their own work thus in China, India, and Africa at once?

But, finally, Mr. Radcliffe's appeal to the Church at large constrains me to reply by an appeal to the rich Christians who remind us of the duty of consecrating our property to God, especially for the evangelisation of the heathen, to lead the way, by undertaking to support one, two, or more of their English brethren and sisters who are prepared to go and do the work? I believe there are many such, and that for every rich man or woman who promises, through The Christian, or other fit agency, to find the means, there will be at least one ready to do the service. I could name one who for sixteen years has been in this attitude with respect to France, ready to go out on a much smaller provision than he now receives as a pastor in England. Who can say that every mission field in the world is not laid on the hearts of some who are ready to give their lives, but who need more than words to open their way?

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,
A Congregational Minister.

A PRINTER'S ERROR IN R.V.

Dear Sir,—In examining carefully the changes made from the A.V. in the R.V. with a view to ascertain the beauties and blemishes of the R.V., I have come across an uncorrected error of the printer's, which may as well be pointed out at once to Bible readers. I have written to the publishers, and received a grateful acknowledgment, with a promise of correction in a subsequent edition.

The mistake is to be found in Ezekiel xxxviii. 16, "I will bring thee against my land, that the nations may know thee." Now, the Hebrew is "that they may know Me (ōthī). Though a small mistake in itself apparently, in its altered meaning it is serious. It is not that they may know Gog, but God.

Faithfully yours, John Wilkinson.

A CHAINED ENGLISH NUN.

Dear Sir,—You take up the cry of the oppressed, and open your mouth for the dumb. Is there no help against cruelty done in the name of religion? As our servant returned from Newcastle on June 29, a priest put two nuns into the third-class carriage, where she was, himself going first class. The elder one was stout and rosy, the younger very pale and thin, and looked so unhappy that it drew our maid's attention. She had some cake with her, and wished to offer it to the pale, sad-looking girl; but she found she was chained to the elder woman, and could not have put out her hand to take it. Tears were constantly rising in her eyes, which she tried to keep back.

In our country, could a young girl be thus taken from place to place chained, and at the mercy of that priest and nun—except in the name of that false religion? Could no one interfere and inquire into her case, because she was in the custody of a priest and nun? Are we to see such sights on our railways, and no redress? The thought of such hopeless misery has haunted me, until I could not help writing to you to ask, is there no help for such prisoners in England—can none inquire into their case?

Yours sincerely,
M. J. K.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Shrines of Lourdes, Zaragossa, The Holy Stairs at Rome, The Holy House of Loretto and Nazareth, and St. Ann at Jerusalem. By Robert Needham Cust. Trübner & Co. 2s. How such absurd impositions exist as anything but the relics of a long-perished barbarism, passes the comprehension of all but those who know the power of "Mother Church" to awaken superstition and terror, and to deaden the powers of thought by compelling obedience to her senseless and slavish ritual. This is a clever, comprehensive work, and four excellent photographs taken on the spot help to elucidate the text. Its distribution will be an able means of establishing the truth by the exposure of error.

Sunrise in the Wilderness. By C. Oliphant. Contains twelve papers on the Jewish Tabernacle. The writer does not attempt any exposition of the types of the Tabernacle, but selects twelve central ideas suggested by the Tabernacle, and gives on them refreshing and simple meditations. These will be found helpful to travellers across the wilderness of this world, keeping them in mind of the glorious rest and fulness of blessing that awaits them at the end of the journey. Every chapter brings out special truth in connection with the person and work of the Lord Jesus, comforting for the heart, and stimulating for service. A large number of quotations are made from various parts of the Bible, and the grouping of the texts round the central thoughts may prove helpful in Bible study, and to those who give Bible readings.

Notes on Rescue Work. By Arthur Brinckman. Palmer, Little Queen-street, W.C. While there are many very helpful suggestions in this little work (the price—2s. 6d.—seems high for the style of book), there are many unwise opinions expressed, and an uncharitable intolerance of well-known Christian workers, such as should not be found in a publication of the kind. Among the "Inducements to Quit Sin," the following occur:—"Not been baptized! Glad, indeed, I am to hear it, for then, after due preparation, your life will be all anew, and the past as if it had never been. Not confirmed! Then you have been without a special gift of strength all this time." Perhaps the foregoing will be understood when it is stated that the writer is assistant-curate at All Saints, Margaret-street. The chapter on "Marriage" is nobly and beautifully written.

Great Thoughts from Master Minds. Vol. iii. Woodford, Fawcett & Co. The title aptly characterises the book. Selections of the greatest written and spoken thoughts of divines, poets, historians and philosophers are here gathered in rich profusion. Healthy mental recreation is provided; as a holiday companion we recommend it as both pleasant and profitable.

An excellent series of story-books for youthful readers is issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, comprising A Sunday Library for Young People. They are well worthy of the attention of Sunday-school committees and others, who cater for the literary needs of the rising generation. They will find, we think, on the whole, that while "the story is the thing," the weightier matters of moral and spiritual teaching are neither forgotten or overlaid by the narrators. All are well printed, illustrated, and got up. We have received the following:—Newlyn House, by A. E. W.; Labourers in the Vineyard, by M. H.; Little Harry's Troubles, by the author of "Gottfried;" The Harleys af Chelsea-place, by Sophia Tandy; Orphan Lottie, by Kathleen; The Children of the Great King, by M. H. All 2s. 6d. each. Aunt Margery's Maxims, by Sophia Tandy; Mary Brunton and her one Talent, by E. A. D. R.; Tales from the Holly Tree Farm, by Mrs. C. Brent. 1s. 6d. each. Lily Hope and her Friends, by Hetty Bowman; Aunt Margaret's Visit, by Jane M. Kippen. 3s. 6d. each. Other volumes are in preparation.

MAGAZINES.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will commence with August a re-issue of their popular and interesting serial entitled Greater London. Part I. will include a large coloured map, embracing the metropolis and its suburbs for many miles round.

Familiar Trees is the title of a new serial published by the same firm. Those who are familiar with the works on Natural History they have already issued will duly appreciate this able treatise and its well-executed plates. Those who are not should get them.

Marche Joyeuse.—A brilliant and effective piece of music, dedicated to H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice in commemoration of Her Royal Highness's marriage.

The Message of the Bells.—The words of this sacred song are striking, and the music very sweet and telling. Both by the Countess of Munster. 4s. Wilcocks & Co., Berners-street.

The Expositor for August will contain a full account, from special information, of the fragment of the Gospel discovered in the Fayum MSS., by Prof. G. T. Stokes, of Dublin.

The Rambler's Jottings. By O. T. Snow. 3d. This little pamphlet contains four or five brief but thrilling narratives of incidents met with by Mr. Tilley in connection with his mission at Leicester.

The Religious Tract Society has issued two sixpenny packets of excellent tracts and leaflets. Packet 94 of "The Most Recent Tracts" contains some splendid messengers. "Save the Banner Series" are touching, telling, and true. Suitable for letters.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. issue a marvellous sixpennyworth in Packet A, "Heavenward." Something to suit everybody—here are powerful appeal, tender exhortation, and simple facts to win, to warn, and to whisper to the heart.

A penny pamphlet on "Bible Temperance and the Revised Version of the Old Testament," by Rev. Dawson Burns, 337, Strand, proves "that the Revised Version will serve the Temperance cause by its more faithful rendering of the texts that bear on the character and influence of intoxicating drinks." What friend of Temperance will fail to be learned on the subject with such a store of argument as this!

The sister of the American President, Miss Cleveland, who is acting as Mistress of the White House, has written a volume on "George Eliot's Poetry and other Studies," which is exciting great interest in the United States. An English edition will be published in a few days by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, in conjunction with Messrs. Funk and Magnalls, of New York, the American publishers.

Recreation—The Four Realities—The Christian Soldier—Conversion from Infidelity—are specimens of the envelope series published by Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, and Messrs Partridge & Co., London. They are telling little booklets, and well adapted for enclosing in letters.

We have also received the following Magazines for August:—From Messrs. Isbister & Co.: Good Words, Sunday Magazine; Religious Tract Society: Sunday at Home, Friendly Greetings, Girls' Own Paper (part), Boys' Own Paper (part), Child's Companion, Tract Magazine, Cottager and Artisan.

Mission and other Appeals.

Morley's Corner Evangelical Mission.—A very good work is carried on in the East-end among a very poor and neglected population, who are wholly unable to meet the needful expenses. The Superintendent, Mr. H. J. Baker, has been much blessed in his work, but the mission cannot be carried on unless outside help is obtained. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. Baker, The Laurels, Barking-road, E.

Bristol Nursery for Infants.—Miss Marriott, Oldbury House, St. Michael's-hill, writes:—"Our Nursery for Homeless Infants is in urgent need of £200 to settle its accounts. The work has been greatly blessed by God in the rescue and great improvement of many infants and mothers, but for want of necessary funds to sustain the work, all new applications are refused, and the number in the Home, which amounted to fifty, gradually lessened. This process must continue until the expenditure is reduced to the amount of the income. I shall thankfully reply to any inquiries concerning particulars."

Notes on Daily Readings.

JULY 30.—I THESSALONIANS I.

v. 1.—“ The Church of the Thessalonians in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ ” (R.V.).—This describes the position of Christians for safety. The privilege which it involves is given in 1 John i. 3: “ Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.”

v. 3.—“ Your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ.”—This last clause has no preposition “in,” but is simply the genitive, “of our Lord Jesus Christ,” and probably depends (as Olshausen urges) upon the three words “faith,” “love,” and “hope,” and not on the last only as most critics assert. The sentence begins with a genitive “your” (literally “of you”) common to all three, and it is only natural that the closing genitive should be common to all three also. “Our Lord Jesus Christ” was the object of their “faith,” “love,” and “hope.”

vv. 4, 5 —R.V. rightly connects these two verses thus: “ Knowing, brethren beloved of God, your election, how that (because, margin) our Gospel came not unto you in word only,” &c.

v. 5.—“ What manner of men we were ” (R.V., “showed ourselves”).—“Were found to be”(Eadie), but most literal and best of all is Alford’s rendering, “were made to be,” God being the agent. “It is not the behaviour of himself and Silvanus and Timotheus on which he is dwelling—a point irrelevant here, but the proof which God gave, by the manner of their preaching, that the Thessalonians were the elect of God.”—Alford.

vv. 9, 10.—“ How ye turned to God from idols ”—here is again the “work of faith”—“ to serve the living and true God ”—here is the “labour of love” —“ and to wait for his Son from Heaven ”—here is the “patience of hope.”

v. 10.—“ Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.” —The verb is the present, not past, participle, and ought to be rendered “our deliverer from the coming wrath.”

JULY 31.—I THESSALONIANS II.

v. 3.—“ Our exhortation (see ver. 11) was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile.”—Three motives are repudiated as sources of his teaching. The first is better rendered in R.V. “error.” The second would have been better translated “impurity,” as it is impurity of motive arising from lust for gain to which he evidently refers. The third refers to manner of action rather than to source or motive, and is well rendered “in guile.” No desire to lead them astray, no desire to make gain of them, no crafty mode of working could be laid to his charge.

v. 10.—“How holily and unjustly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe.” —The words “ we behaved ourselves ” convey a stronger notion of self-laudation than does the Greek, which is literally “we became,” or, giving full force to the passive voice, “we were made to be.” Meyer says, “the passive form cannot denote pure self-activity,” and Alford, on the same word as it occurs in ver. 7, remarks, “With a reference to God enabling us.”

v. 12.—“ That ye should walk worthily of God who calleth you into his own kingdom and glory ” (R.V.).—“His own” is an important word, which A.V. unhappily overlooked. It is the intimate fellowship into which they are called with what is God’s own that should be a motive to Christians to walk worthily of Him.

v. 16.—“ Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they may be saved.”—Mark the climax of Jewish rebellion; not in the death of the Lord Jesus or the Prophets, or the persecution of his Apostles, but in hindering the salvation of the Gentiles.

v. 16.—“ Wrath has come upon them to the uttermost.”—The Greek is, literally, “but there came upon them by anticipation the wrath (which is) for the end.” The Apostle sees in their crowning sin of hindering the Gospel being preached to Gentiles an anticipation of coming judgment—that wrath predicted by Daniel ix. 26, 27, and spoken of by our Lord (Luke xxi. 23) as “wrath upon this people.’

AUGUST 1.—I THESSALONIANS III.

v. 6.- “ Brought us glad tidings of your faith and love ” (R.V.).—He sent (ver. 5) to know their “faith” and the report brought back spoke of “faith and love.” so he knew the faith to be genuine, for “faith worketh by love” (Gal. v. 6).

v. 8.—“ Now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord.” —Compare his description of the overwhelming shock he received on hearing the bad news from Corinth (2 Cor. i. 8), “We despaired even of life.”

v. 11.—“ Now may our God and Father Himself and our Lord Jesus direct our way to you ” (R.V.).—The verb “direct” is in the singular, although there are two nominatives. This can only be explained as being a marked testimony to the oneness in Deity of the two persons spoken of. Bishop Ellicott says: “The Eternal Son is here distinguished from the Father in respect of his personality, but mystically united with Him (observe the singular verb) in respect of his Godhead, and as God rightly and duly addressed in the language of direct prayer.”

v. 12.—“ And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love,” &c.—“Basil, in his treatise ‘On the Holy Spirit,’ affirms that Lord means in this place the Holy Spirit.”—Eadie. There is some ground for this, if we look at Rom. v. 5; and, if so, this verse, with the preceding, would contain one of those informal allusions to the doctrine of the Trinity so often to be met with.

v. 13. –“ Unblameable in holiness.”—This word, “unblameable,” is to be distinguished from the words “without blame,” used (Eph. i. 4) of one’s standing in Christ. This latter is “without spot,” and implies absolute perfection, such as acceptance in Christ insures. The word here is “not to be blamed,” and that, as further explained, “in the sphere of holiness.”

AUGUST 2.—I THESSALONIANS IV.

v. 1.—The R.V. adds a clause, attested by the oldest MSS. and Versions, and now universally received in critical texts, “ As ye received of us how ye ought to walk and please God, even as ye do walk —that ye abound more and more ” (R.V.). The recognition of what has been already attained gives point to the exhortation to still higher attainments.

“ Walk and please God.”—The Hebrew expression “walk with God,” used of Enoch (Gen. v. 24), is rendered in Greek by the LXX., “pleased God” (see Heb. xi. 5). Here both are combined. It is interesting to note that this chapter, which thus begins by a tacit reference to Enoch, ends with the “rapture of the saints,” the privilege enjoyed in anticipation by Enoch.

v. 8.—For “hath given” R.V. reads “giveth,” which presents the thought of the Holy Spirit being a constant gift, one provided for our need and given as needed, or as sought in prayer. (See Luke xi. 13.)

v. 11.—“ And that ye study to be quiet.”—The literal meaning of the Greek word for “study” is “be ambitious.” Bishop Ellicott says “to be quiet” marks the sedate and tranquil spirit which stands in contrast to the excited and unquiet bustle that often marks ill-defined or mistaken religious expectations.

v. 14.—“ Them also that sleep in Jesus.”—The Greek is not “in” but “through,” and in consequence R.V. reads in its margin, “will God through Jesus bring with Him.” But without disturbing the connection of the preposition with what goes before, which seems most natural, it may be rendered as it is by Bishop Ellicott “‘ those laid to sleep through Jesus,’ those who through his mediation are now rightly accounted as sleeping.”

AUGUST 3.—I THESSALONIANS V.

v. 10.—“ Whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him.”—Here “wake” and “sleep” seem, without doubt, to refer to being alive, or not in the body, at the Lord’s coming, but a little before (ver. 6) the same words had been used of watchfulness and the reverse, and this change of meaning in so short a space is undoubtedly a difficulty. Perhaps it is best explained by remembering that what went before defined this waking or watchfulness as the proper attitude of Christian life. When, then, he wants to express being alive in the body, he uses “wake,” not as meaning merely “life,” but that watchfulness which is characteristic of Christian life. The way is thus prepared to describe the disembodied state as “sleep,” not meaning thereby only “death,” but the sphere in which watchfulness is not required: as one has rendered it, “Whether we are alive and watching, or not alive and unable to watch.”

v. 14.—“ Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly.”—From Chrysostom onwards the Greek Commentators have taken these words as addressed to those spoken of in ver. 12, those that “are over you in the Lord.” This seems most natural.

v. 22.—Generally admitted now to mean not “abstain from all appearance,” but “from every form of evil.” So R.V.

v. 23.—“ And the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly.”—Mark the source of sanctification, God Himself. Then mark the character in which He is regarded. “ The God of peace,” i.e., to those who, being justified by faith, have peace with God through Jesus Christ, He is the God of peace. Such may claim his power to work in them: see Heb. xiii. 20, 21, where we have the same title, “the God of peace,’ and the same inworking power thereby secured, “working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight.”

“ May your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ ” (R.V.).—As the former was a prayer for sanctification, so is this for final preservation until the redemption of the body “at the coming of the Lord Jesus,” when their entirety—spirit, soul, and body (the reference is to the glorified body)—will be found blamelessly preserved.

AUGUST 4.—2 THESSALONIANS I.

v. 5.—“ Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God,” &c.—The “token” referred to is “the endurance of all their persecutions, and their afflictions in patience and faith” (Ellicott), which is a token or proof that the righteous judgment of God, when exercised, as it will be, at the Second Advent, will be in the direction of counting them worthy of his kingdom, for which they suffer, in accordance with the principle recorded in 2 Tim. ii. 12: “If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him.” Compare also Rev. i. 9: “Your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom,” &c. The righteous judgment of God thus looked forward to is further described in its bearing on the persecutors of his people, and on his enemies generally.

v. 8.—“ In flaming fire, taking vengeance.”—These words are taken from Isaiah lxvi. 15, where they occur, as here, in the Greek of the LXX.

“ Them that know not God and, obey not the Gospel.”—These are not one class, but two, as the Greek marks it, as rightly rendered in R.V.: “ vengeance . . . to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the Gospel.” The first seems to describe more particularly the Gentiles (see 1 Thess. iv. 5): “The Gentiles which know not God.” The second, the Jews, to whom the Gospel was first sent. It was from these two classes that the persecutions came, which the Thessalonians were suffering. The Jews “stirred up the people” (Acts xvii. 13).

v. 10.—“ All them that believe.”—R.V. reads, with overwhelming MS. authority, “believed,” which is confirmed by what follows, “in that day.” The point of view is looking back from that day when all that then “have believed” will be glorified, and the Apostle, to include those to whom he is writing, adds, “ because our testimony among you was believed.”

v. 11.—“ Count you worthy.”—Olshausen, following Luther, renders this “make you worthy,” and the following context is in its favour. See, too, Eph. iv. 1, and 1 Thess. ii. 12.

AUGUST 5.—2 THESSALONIANS II.

v. 1.—“ By the coming.”—For “by,” R V. reads, “touching the coming.” The Greek is, literally, “on behalf of the coming,” &c., as if it were on behalf of a doctrine of such value that he entreats them not to misunderstand and abuse, and so discredit it.

v. 2.—“ The day of the Lord is now present ” R.V., instead of “is at hand” of A.V. The verb used generally in the New Testament implies actual presence; but, it rendered “has set in,” which is as literal a translation as the words will bear, we get the idea of immediate imminence, which it often has in classical writings, and which seems more natural here than actual presence.

v. 3.—“ A falling away.”—Better in R.V., “the falling away.” The word is, literally, “the apostasy,” and points to that apostasy predicted by the Spirit, and described 1 Tim. iv. 1, where the same word occurs as a verb, “depart from,” or “apostatise from” the faith. The characteristics of this apostasy, as there described—“forbidding to marry, commanding to abstain from meats”—must be borne in mind, if we would understand what “the apostasy” means.

v. 4.—“ Who opposeth and exalteth himself above.” —Instead of “above,” R.V. reads, “against,” which removes one principal objection urged against the application of this prophecy to the Papacy, but there is not space to attempt any prophetic explanation of the subject.

v. 7.—“ He who now letteth ”—“ one that restraineth,” R.V.—The uniform tradition of the early Church was that this restrainer was the Imperial power of Rome, which, when removed, would make way for Antichrist.

v. 11.—“ God shall send them strong delusion.”—The best-attested reading has the verb in the present tense, “ is sending.” So R.V., “sendeth.”

v. 16.—Another instance of the Lord Jesus and the Father being mentioned together; which shows their equality; and followed by a singular verb, which shows unity.

EXTRACTS.

"Simple and child-like hearts, that have newly ntered into the joy of salvation, ignorant of ientific theology, but hungering and thirsting or God, turn to the writings of John with ever-failing desire, and find in them green astures and living waters. To a large extent is the same with those who have reached the ost advanced stages of Christian experience, hose spiritual nature has become deepened and xpanded by the manifold teachings of God. Iere the simplicity of youth and the ripest and oliest wisdom of age agree. I have taken ains to inquire of many belonging to both lasses how they have been guided in their readng, and what they have found most fruitful of piritual blessing and delight; and almost every nswer has included—at least—the Gospel of ohn, often named in a tone of personal affecion, as men name a dear friend."

From "John, whom Jesus loved."

"In our homes we are ourselves responsible or the lighting of our lamps at the proper time, or the supply of oil to them, for the brightness f the reflectors, and for everything else conected with their shining; the lamp has neither vill, nor choice, nor faculty of consent or resistnce. So, too, it was with the lights of the Tabernacle and Temple. But it is otherwise vith Christian churches; the material of which hey are composed is not dead, but living; and he grace of the Lord must be met on our part y faith and prayer and hearty consent. He loes, indeed, work in us to will, as well as to do f His good pleasure; but it is a working in human hearts. He is not far away from us; He is in our very midst; and He only waits our asking to give us all we need in order that we nay shine as lights in the world."

From "Thy First Love."

"Two men may do the same thing so far as he outward appearance goes; for example, nay give to the same charity, or kneel in the ame place of worship, or say Amen to the same prayer. You may not be able to discern a shade of difference, and yet the 'works' may be as opposite and as wide asunder as heaven and hell. The Lord claims to 'know' the works of the Laodiceans, in the profoundest and most penerative sense, inwardly and hiddenly as well as outwardly. 'Thy works,' in all that they are and all that they mean and involve, lie open under Mine eye, in the broad, bright sunshine, as they do not lie open even to thyself."

From "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock."

"Some of God's hired servants are called upon not to work, but to wait. A poor old sister in the workhouse waited for orders from Christ, and could only hear Him saying, 'Lie still and cough.' Many are called upon to glorify God in lives of meek submission spent upon sick beds on the edge of the grave. Let them not murmur. 'They also serve who only stand and wait.' It is not theirs to run with the thousands who speed over sea and land to do the Lord's bidding; but by their saintly patience, their constant trust, their joyful unworldliness, they may be made an abiding blessing. And, doubtless, great reward will come to them in the day when the meek shall inherit the earth, and the merciful shall obtain mercy."

From "Calls to Christ."

"It was never God's plan that the children of Israel should spend those dreadful forty years in the wilderness. He led them up to Kadesh-Barnea within a very few months after they came out of Egypt; and had they been obedient they would have gone into the land at once, and that without passing over Jordan at all. But on the border of that land they murmured and doubted, and sent up spies to see if the Lord's promise was true, to judge for themselves whether they could possess the land. They fell into unbelief there. And when the spies came back, in spite of the earnest remonstrance of faithful Joshua and Caleb, the Israelites rebelled against the Lord, and would not go up to possess the land. Then it was that the Lord turned them back; and for forty years they lived only to provoke and tempt Him."

From "Out of Egypt."

"The simplicity and naturalness of the Bible are most striking. Where else can be found such graphic pictures of parental and domestic life? The straightforward delineation of its most conspicuous characters; its record of the sins of God's people with the same impartial pen as is used for the setting forth of their virtues; its lofty moral tone; its sublimity of thought; as well as its superhuman authority—all bespeak its unique character. For like the Master, of whom it is the constant and consistent witness, its words are with authority. It never speculates or halts in its teaching, but drives straight to the mark in its ever recurring 'Thus saith the Lord,' in the Old Testament, and in the 'Verily, verily, I say unto you,' of the Master."

From "In the Volume of the Book."

"'My son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him.' Take his yoke upon you: it is not galling, it is easy; take his burden upon you: it is not heavy, it is light. Yes; his service is a reasonable service, it is perfect freedom. This choice you will never repent. Believe me, the ways of wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Believe me, or, rather, believe Him who cannot lie—'Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.' Have you made this choice in your heart? Then, in the next place, make an open avowal, a public profession of it. Yes; come out from the world, take your stand openly upon the Lord's side. Let your conduct speak this language:

'I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Nor to defend his cause.'"

From "Addresses to Young Men."

"Just as Annan was going to enter the enquiry-meeting the hall door was closed in his face, and he reeled down the steps, exclaiming 'Great God, am I shut out of salvation for ever?' Away he went to the house of a friend, who assured him he might find an entrance into the hall by another door. In breathless haste he returned to seek the door, but in vain. These are small matters; but to an awakened soul such things seem to speak with the voice of God. At the midnight hour he entered my room and stood before me, his eyes wild and red with excitement, and his countenance black and terrible. His whole body, a frame of iron, shook and quivered. Knowing something of the man I feared he was about to lay hands on me, and take vengeance for some words of reproof. Very different was the case. Robert had now no blows but for himself; and with words of keen and cutting self-condemnation he asked the question of questions, 'What must I do to be saved?'"

From "The Christian Hero."

"You notice that the Book of Ruth contains the history of a Jew who went into a far country; in fact, I might say that the first chapter of this book is the fifteenth of Luke over again. We get a Jew backsliding, and through the means of that Jew's backsliding you will find that a poor Gentile girl is brought out of the Gentile country into the land of blessing. Then this girl marries a rich Jew, Boaz; and there we get a picture of the Lord Jesus Christ marrying the Church. Then after the rich Jew and the poor Gentile are united, you see the blessing turns back to the Jew. And I think that is just what the New Testament teaches of the way in which God is going to deal with the Jew by and by. He has backslidden, and the Gentiles are blessed; the Church of God will be united to Christ, and then the Jews will be blessed again."

From "Ruth, the Moabitess."

"It is resurrection power that saves us; and resurrection power can only be shown where there is real death. So in the case of Lazarus, wherein the Son of God was to be glorified. Jesus tarried four days until Lazarus was dead: not sick merely, but dead. Then He came to Bethany; and resurrection power had the opportunity of manifestation. The dead one was made alive; the Son of God was glorified; and joy and gladness filled the home. Reader, is the blessing delayed in coming to you because the Lord is waiting for you to see yourself dead: not sick merely with sin, but dead—condemned already under the curse of the broken law, and without a spark of the life of God in your soul? There is one of two conditions for all: DEAD or ALIVE. There is no middle ground."

From "Life, Warfare, and Victory."

"One day a discussion on the evidences of the truth of Christianity arose among the stone-cutters. Duncan Matheson was the champion of the Bible. The leading sceptic, beaten in argument, assailed religion through the inconsistencies of its friends, declaring that Matheson was the only consistent Christian he had ever met. This compliment to his external morality, instead of pleasing his vanity, aroused his conscience, and he secretly charged himself with sheer hypocrisy in defending the truth, to whose divine power he felt in his heart he was an utter stranger. Another day, seeing a fellow-workman look sad, he expressed his sympathy, and found the man was distressed about his sins. Matheson took him aside, and although himself ignorant of the righteousness of God, and justification by faith in the Lord Jesus, directed him as best he could to the path of life. But this act recoiled on himself; and his conscience, now constantly awake, began to upbraid him. 'You're a hypocrite,' said he to himself; 'you point others to Christ, and all the while you are treading the way to hell yourself.' Then followed a fierce struggle between light and darkness; his soul was tortured almost to madness—a crisis was at hand."

From "Duncan Matheson."

"I tell you, when the Spirit of God is on us, the world looks very empty; the world has a very small hold upon us; and we begin to let go our hold of it. When the Spirit of God is upon us we shall just let go the things of time, and lay hold of things eternal. This is the Church's need to-day. We want the Spirit to come in mighty power, and consume all the vile dross there is in us. Oh that the Spirit of fire may come down and burn everything in us that is contrary to God's blessed Word and will."

A SPANISH WORKER.

DEAR SIR,—The visitation of earthquake on the town of Malaga and of all Andalusia has been the means of a great awakening of conscience throughout all the afflicted district. Monsieur Théodore Monod takes a lively interest in the present revival of religion in Spain, and says:—

"The person and work of Signor Don Enrique Blanco Garcia is warmly recommended by our esteemed brother, Mr. William Greene, who is conversant with Christian work in Spain. The chapel at Malaga has suffered much from the recent earthquake, and the congregation, whose resources are most limited, are endeavouring to raise funds for a new house of worship. M. Enrique Blanco Garcia is (through his mother), a brother of Manuel Matamoros. His church is evangelical, and worthy of all sympathy and co-operation."

About £400 would suffice for the proposed erection. And as many friends take a deep interest in this work, Messrs. Morgan and Scott have kindly consented to receive contributions for the same, which are to be sent under the heading "Mission Evangelica del Pasillo Malaga."—I remain, dear sir, yours truly,

Claydon, Ipswich. WILLIAM GREENE

Requests for Prayer.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. D. MORGAN, LLANELLY.

This patient applied to me in March. There had been chest disease on his mother's side, and a brother and sister of his had died of consumption.

He had complained of his chest more or less for five or six months—violent cough had come on, with streaked expectoration, and a little fluid blood spat up: pains in the chest, attacks of short breathing, shiverings, night perspirations, violent beating of the heart at certain times, with pains in the back and shoulders.

Full advice was sent, the effect of which was immediately apparent. "When I wrote to you (the patient says) I could not work and could hardly speak, but before I had finished the large bottle of medicine sent to me I could work, and last week I sang at a concert. So you see the change has been wonderful. I have recommended many of my fellow-townsmen, who are finding benefit like myself. May God spare you for many years to save thousands that are dying of consumption.

TENT WORK IN EAST LONDON.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,

We are anxious to pitch, for the months of August and September, a large Tent, in a densely-peopled part of East London.

We have been able to secure an advantageous site close to a crowded open-air market, where till long past midnight on Saturday, and again on Sunday morning, tens of thousands of the common people congregate, to buy and sell, and drink and fight, and otherwise amuse themselves.

We have the Tent, and the staff to work it; but we lack the seats for the 600 or 800 it will hold, and funds for the incidental expenses—gas, watchman, bills, &c.—which will be inevitable.

Will you help us to make an earnest effort to "rescue the perishing," who may be found by hundreds in this quarter? Remember, these poor people never "leave town" for rest and recreation or change of air! They toil and sin and suffer on all the year round, in the same close and crowded condition, amid dreary sights, and horrid sounds, and extremely evil odours; for the so-called "Stink House Bridge" s close by, and the neighbourhood abounds in gas works, and chemical and manure works. In the heat of August, just as in the cold of Christmas, these pitiful, densely-packed streets, are the only promenade of the people, while the only pleasurable excitement they have is such as is afforded by penny gaffs, and public-houses.

The crowds will not go to Church or Chapel, even if such were open every evening; but they turn in gladly to a cheerful Tent, where good news is announced, where songs and solos are sung, where kindly words are spoken and ready sympathy extended, where there is neither formality nor restraint, but liberty and a welcome for all who enter. Hundreds were born of God in the very Tent we want to pitch, when it stood a few miles distant from this spot, and we hope hundreds more will yet have reason to love its canvas roof and walls, and associate it with heaven in the heart.

Help us to reap some human sheaves in the coming harvest season! As you enjoy the mountain amble, or inhale the sea breezes, as you hearken to the voice of God in nature, and rejoice in the beauty of His works, give a thought of prayerful and practical sympathy to the confined and crowded, wearied, worn, nd too often, alas! wicked, men and women of this poor East London. You will have their gratitude, as well as God's greater blessing for remembering the poor, and you will have the hearty thanks of their and our well-wisher and friend, Prospectus on application to Mrs. Hale, A.C.P., 1, Carlton Mansions, Clapham-rise, London, S.W.

"Balham, May 29, 1880.

"I am very reluctant to recommend schools, because I am not always able to judge of the interior arrangements; but in this case I have the utmost pleasure in standing as reference. I can highly commend Mrs. Hale, and have the greatest confidence in her capacity, management, and character, having known her for several years.
"C. H. Spurgeon."

GERMANY.—Coblence on the Rhine.—Fraulein Von Griesheim receives a select number of pupils, to whom she offers every attention and home comfort. Highest musical advantages. Eminent professors. English church regularly attended. Terms, inclusive, 80 guineas per annum. Highest references from the German nobility and clergy. This Institution is transferred from Diez to Coblence, the summer residence of the German Empress, by the express wish of Her Majesty, who takes a special interest in the British community there.

HEART DISEASE.

Weakness of the heart in various forms is met with in a great number of people, and many, if not most, hold the belief that it is beyond remedy. Heart affections are only incurable when actual organic disease exists, but in the greater number of instances this is absent; the affection supposed to be incurable being little more than a weakness resulting from general constitutional debility.

When constitutional debility is spoken of, it is implied that the various organs are in some way hindered from performing their functions in the quiet, methodical manner so characteristic of health. When this is the case, the heart, the most important functionary of all, is one of the organs most readily affected, although, perhaps, the appreciable evil effects are not so quickly manifested or realised as those in other organs; nevertheless, the weakness induced remains unremedied, although other organs are apparently restored to full vigour.

Palpitation, or throbbing, especially after meals and upon the least exertion, also imperfect circulation resulting in cold hands and feet, with heated head and face, or vice versâ, are prevalent forms of heart weakness, and as the result of debility, and not actual disease, there is a substantial prospect of restoration, or at least, very great alleviation following the application of a remedy which has the power to brace up the constitution as a whole.

That for this purpose Magnetism is superior to medicinal remedies, is a fact confirmed by a widely extended experience; and any who may have need of help in this direction, or who wish to know the success that has attended our efforts in treating this phase of suffering, should read our Seventh Biennial Report, which may be had post-free on application.

The following is an interesting case:—

"December 20, 1883.

"I have now been under your Treatment seven months for functional derangement and palpitation of the heart, especially after meals, and violent throbbing by night. I am very thankful to say that it has had the desired effect in regulating the heart's action. The good work has been going on slowly but surely, so that now, while I am writing, I hardly know I have a heart, the action is so normal. The nocturnal throbbing is vanishing almost like darkness before the day-dawn.

"Supposed incurable heart disease is so prevalent that I think sufferers should know that there is a 'balm in Gilead,' and I am glad to give my name with this statement of experience, and the more so because it has been in no way solicited."

"May 26, 1885.

"Your wonderful Treatment did me a world of good, I can assure you. I only get that heart-throbbing under very exciting circumstances. I discontinued the use of the Appliances long ago, perhaps sooner than I ought to have done, but I wanted to present them to a suffering friend."

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

HOMES OF HOPE.

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

This Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of Penitent Fallen Young Women.

Special efforts are made on behalf of young mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications for admission every day are very distressing, and the Committee are very urgently in need of funds to carry on the work.

ROOTS AND FRUITS.

ARE you evangelists and young workers not in great danger, in these days, of undervaluing underground roots, and overestimating the pursuit of external fruits? At the beginning of this century, doctrine and close doctrinal preaching were proclaimed by almost all godly preachers, but active fruit-bearing was not practised, and "good works"—to use a term well understood—were not actively pursued. Fruit-bearing, in fact, was greatly neglected, but the roots of truth were arranged, urged, and laid out in manifold ways—even minute points being carefully attended to.

EXTREMES.

Crowds always rush to extremes, and the crowd in our day appear to press forward only in the direction of Fruit. "Let us have conversions in any case, let us push charitable and benevolent schemes," is the cry, and if no good results appear let us change our tactics and plans. Young evangelists are testing their work, not by its Scriptural character, but by its results. Herein lies a very great danger indeed, and I wish to observe that the foundation of the error lies in placing Fruits before Roots. Let us be infinitely grateful when we are allowed to see fruit, but fruit externally must on no account be

THE GREAT OBJECT.

I remember many years ago working with a devoted, true, and bold evangelist. I urged that we should spend our time together in close Bible study. "Certainly not," he said; "we can easily run over the Bible and select passages that apply to sinners." "But," I replied, "we ourselves will not be fed, and we will have no depth, no growth, no likeness to Christ in our own souls; we will remain babes." He was naturally abrupt in his style, and he said, "Well, if we win sinners and get converts, what more do we require? Besides," he added, "I hate study."

His work went on well for a few years, but he met men who told him that preaching the strong points he urged was not Scriptural, and not agreeable to some Bible scholars, and he was greatly discouraged, and ceased to preach altogether for two or three years. His love of fruits had induced him to avoid roots—he was not "rooted and grounded" himself, and when a storm came he was quite unprepared to meet it; he could have met it if it had blown from the direction of the world, but when it came from Christian people he found no roots to hold him up, and he fell for the time being before the storm.

I have heard a young evangelist sometimes say, "Oh, as to doctrines of the Bible, I care nothing about them." Such a sentence is equivalent to a man saying, "Oh, as to good principles, I care nothing about good principles." Principles and doctrines are to fruits and practice what the root of a tree is to the fruit. If the root is in a bad state fruit must degenerate, not only in quantity, but still more in quality, and the finest fig tree may then only produce poor wild figs—possibly a large number, still only wild figs. If a former generation of saints studied the roots of truth almost exclusively, we, in this generation, are busy only in the question of fruit.

But of the two extremes ours is unquestionably the worse of the two. One who holds good principles but whose practice is bad, is in a better position than the man who holds bad principles but whose practices now are good. The latter is certain to carry out his bad principles: the former gives to you a strong lever power by which you can change him. His sympathies are in favour of good; the sympathies of the other are in favour of evil.

EFFECTS.

God forbid we should under-estimate the work done now by Christians who are not rooted and grounded, and who are not longing to be rooted and grounded, but it is dangerous work; it is a ship without ballast, a bank without coin to meet her notes in circulation; and I greatly fear results. A strong Roman Catholic current, a floodgate of error, a few false but plausible theories, will sweep numbers of young Christians, who are not rooted and grounded, into a sea of bad doctrine.

Are God's teachers alive to this danger? Can they not by prayer, by love, and by persuasion, induce young workers to become Bible students? Pamphlets, magazines, and believers' tracts, will not answer the purpose. They read a sound pamphlet to-day and an erroneous pamphlet to-morrow. Their eyes must be turned to God's plummet-line—to God's compass alone: truth is there in equal proportions; it falls like fine drops of rain upon them, and growth is inevitable. Papers are like watering-cans, they never give in the same proportion: raindrops come with a proper state of the atmosphere for growth at the time; growth is almost inevitable. He who waters plants often does as much harm as good; he waters in sunshine and destroys them, or he waters excessively and injures them. The Word of God never is out of season, never out of place, always influential and operative upon young believers; it is both word and spirit.

But the teacher must go to them, not wait till they come to him; must commend what he sees good—admit all the good, all the fruit, all the power God has given. God does so in speaking to the seven Churches; He commends every point He can, yea, appreciates the work so greatly that we wonder He finds room for correction. Oftentimes have I sat for two hours listening to a young "Salvation" captain. Souls moved, some evidently won to Christ, so far as we could for the time judge, faith and prayer honoured of God. Yet the preacher was but a babe—a babe, however, in Christ's hand; and strong men weep and kneel and pray to God.

As a rule, I have found young, ignorant preachers, when true men, most willing to be helped and taught. Sometimes they have said, "Wait, and I shall call all the soldiers, and you will urge them all, every one, to study and love the Bible." As their friend, in work and word, they welcome me; but if I came as a critic, a dry reprover, a schoolmaster with a rod, a despiser of the work God has given them, they see at once I am not God-sent. God never sends a heartless reprover to a struggling labourer; but I only give this as an illustration. Works and fruits of all kinds are budding in these days, and deep roots, deep truths, deep doctrines are being neglected, and I see great and terrible storms coming. God help us in those days!

THE RISEN LIFE.

THERE is a deep connection between the believer's spiritual resurrection from the death of sin and the resurrection of the Divine Surety. We were dead in "trespasses and sins." The life that comes to us in the new birth is the life of Christ as now risen. It is a life altogether unique and peculiar, for it springs out of death annulled. It is, therefore, a life over which death can have no dominion; as Jesus Himself said: "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth on Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth, and believeth on Me, shall never die" (John xi. 25). These are considerations on which modern theology does not lay enough emphasis; yet they bear very powerfully on the believer's present state, as well as on his future destiny Let every child of God strive to realise these three things.

(1) The life that he has abiding in him is the life of the risen Son of God. The Christ that is formed in his heart the hope of glory is a risen Christ. This is what distinguishes the Christian from other men. The centre of the natural man's hopes and affections is self; but it is far otherwise with the believer. The mainspring of his energies, the root and strength of all the forces of his being is not self, but Christ, as the Resurrection and the Life, interwoven with the warp and woof of his spiritual experience by the power of the indwelling Holy Ghost. And it is just in proportion as he lives in the power of this resurrection-life, knitting him as it does in the unity of life with the Risen One, that his whole spiritual existence becomes ennobled, expanded, and transfigured as with the radiance of celestial glory.

(2) It is a new life. We have done with the old carnal life. The cross has come into contact with it, and has inflicted its death blow. All its selfish hopes and aspirations are for ever buried. The motives that rule us now spring from a new source—and that source is a new life. As Paul writes:—"We are buried with Him by baptism unto death: that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. vi. 4).

(3) It is eternal life, because it is a life on the other side of death. We need have no fear, therefore, for the future. In Him that is raised from the dead we are eternally secure. Death and hell and the grave lie behind us, and now life and blessedness and incorruption form our portion. If these things be true, does not the Apostolic exhortation come to us with befitting emphasis—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1)? Are we thus manifesting our risen life—making an end of self with its vanities and follies, and setting up the Risen One as the centre of all our thoughts and affections? Or have we still one hand upon the old life, with its meanness, its narrowness, its inherent selfishness, forgetting that it has no longer any claim upon us, but that it is an entirely new condition of life into which we have been introduced? If we have, then let us in the strength of the Spirit, ignore self, look on the old life not as a present experience, but as a dark remembrance of a past history, and, as those who have been brought from the dead, from henceforth "walk in newness of life."

GAINS AND LOSSES.

By Rev. E. BALLEY.

WE use these terms in reference to the Church of Christ, as showing the great responsibility devolving upon all her members. Through their individual effort or neglect the Church may gain much or lose a great deal.

Some years ago, a young man who had been trained under religious influences came to London. On the Sabbath he went to the house of God. At the close of the service, a gentleman in the congregation, who had noticed the stranger, came to him with a cheerful smile, gave him a hearty shake by the hand, and with a few kind words bade him welcome to the church. That young man afterwards became a minister of the Gospel, and during more than forty years of Christian labour was often cheered in his heart by the remembrance of that gentleman's act of kindness to him, a stranger and alone in London.

A young man, a member of a Christian family, came to live in a town where resided a friend well-known to the family. He sought the young man and conversed with him on the subject of religion and the need of personal salvation. The youth replied, "I thought that to follow Christ's example, and to seek to be like Him, was all that was required of us." "My dear young friend, that is beginning at the wrong end: you must come to Jesus first as a sinner, and believe in Him as having died to save you, and then seek to follow his example. To seek to follow Him before this is to seek to work out salvation for yourself." This conversation brought light to the young man's mind: he was led to the Saviour and found peace through believing in Him. The following is an extract from a letter he afterwards sent to his friend:—

"By your earnest conversation I was led to think seriously about the salvation of my soul, and by the grace of God and your direction I can say that Jesus Christ came into the world to die for me, and that through his death I am saved. But though I am thus, it is a hard fight against the many temptations I keep meeting, and I often fall before them, but I long to live a pure life. You will, I know, pray for me that I may have strength to stand against the evil one. I assure you again that I shall never forget the deep obligation I am under to you for your efforts to lead me to the light, which I thank God have not been in vain."

How often is this work neglected, and precious souls are left to drift away into ungodliness and sin. A poor widow who sat in a lonely corner of the gallery, had a son home from sea. He was a dear youth, free from the bondage of intemperance; his heart was true and his conscience tender. After a while his mother persuaded him out of his shyness, to go with her and call on the minister. The minister received them kindly, and talked about everything but that for which the mother had come, and the young man expected, the interest of the soul. He went to church but nobody spoke to him, he attended chapel but no one took him by the hand. "If some of the good people would but speak to James," sighed the poor mother. They did not, and James was left to drift away for a time into other currents.

A man and his wife with two children took seats in a church; they were strangers, with a stranger's heart yearning for companionship. The man had come to a new place to mend broken fortunes, and, what was more difficult to repair, a damaged character. He had broken away from boon companions to surround himself with new and better associations and associates. Did anybody take him by the hand and bid him welcome? No. For months he and his family came and went, and were strangers still. Neither minister, nor deacon, nor the good men and women of the church found them out, made no friendly call, nor extended to them the kind courtesies of Christian acquaintance. With no one to help him in his new experiment of living; with nobody to hedge him round; with no one to warm the seeds of new resolutions in his bosom, and mature them for a better life, the old temptations stole in, regained their lost hold, and the family drifted away. Who knows where?

The burden of complaint in many of our churches is, "We are at a standstill; we have no ingathering." The struggling, the tempted, the friendless, buffeted by life's stormy sea, gradually fall off from the Church of God, which should be their beacon light, and are carried away by the strong undercurrent of our mighty world. Why is this? The Church, the people of God, are not reaching out after the drifting and lost. We are not finding, since we are not seeking. We cannot gather where we have not sown. We have comfortable pews, attractive singing, a good preacher, a pleasant circle of friends, and are punctual in all the Christian duties required of us; and so we go on year after year, perhaps holding our own, but certainly making no aggressions on the bulk of ungodliness around.

Is this as it should be? We verily believe not. The Church, as a company of disciples of Him who went about doing good, must make it more than a duty or business—a privilege—to seek and to save. On every side we are ever coming in contact with sin-laden and tempest-tossed souls, who are waiting, yearning, and putting out the hand for Christian sympathy and help, mutely asking after the Redeemer, Healer, and Saviour. "Where is the Christ?" Do we know Him? Do we love Him? Have we experienced heaven in the soul? If we have, let us be anxious to make Christ known to others. This is the best way to enlarge and build up the Church, not by fine buildings, popular preaching, and pompous show, but by making our piety loving, sympathetic, attractive, by its unconscious influence, and by reaching out on all sides the hand and heart of Christian love. Thus shall we gather in the sheep of Christ's fold.

THE PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.—This quarterly statement (July) publishes the progressive work of the above society, announcing further light relative to the ancient customs of Palestine, through Dr. Lansdell's discoveries among an Iranian population. The "firman" necessary for the prosecution of the survey of Eastern Palestine, is still withheld by the Turkish authorities. Mr. Laurence Oliphant contributes "Notes on the Janlan, and Notes on Carmel;" and Guy Le Strange writes "Account of a short journey East of the Jordan," occupying more than twenty pages. At the present moment the chief interest of the society centres "in a most important packet just received from Herr Schumacher, who has surveyed, planned, and sketched the ruins of a part of the Janlan, a district containing two hundred square miles, and lying east of the Lake of Galilee. This, the committee have decided to publish separately, and purpose sending a copy post free to every subscriber, who may apply for it. Other matters of varied interest follow; including the report of annual meeting of the society held last month. The society's lectures, publications, maps, &c., are also noted, and a portrait of Sir Charles Wilson forms an excellent frontispiece. The income for the year was £480, and the expenditure £380. The offices are at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

OPEN THOU MY LIPS.

SAVIOUR, I would tell the story
  Of Thy mercies manifold,
Of thy grace, and love, and glory,
  I would not one word withhold.
Lord, thou knowest my desire,
Wilt Thou give what I require?

Sadly I have failed in telling
  All that Thou hast been to me,
Now the wish my heart is swelling
  Never silent more to be;
But Thou knowest I am weak,
Of myself I cannot speak.

Still Thou usest small and lowly Instruments to do thy will;
Dost Thou ask that only, wholly,
  They be yielded to thy skill?
Master, take, I give Thee all,
Thine to be without recall.

Give me, Lord, the word in season,
  For the weary ones I meet;
Thou who knowest every reason
  For the tired, wandering feet,
Hast Thou not for these a word?
Wilt Thou send it by me, Lord?

Master, I would speak whenever
  Thou would'st have me speak for Thee,
When thy Spirit prompts, oh, never,
  Never let me silent be;
Lord, on Thee, I cast this care,
Answer fully all my prayer.

Knowing well my lack of power,
  In thy might I place my trust,
Oh, be with me every hour,
  All I ask is this, that just
Thou wilt use me day by day,
Teaching me what I must say.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND

DEAR SIR,—I have read with great interest the references in the last two numbers of The Christian to the terrible effects of the circulation of impure literature. God is blessing the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland in our great united effort to meet and grapple with the evil in this country.

Many of your readers will be glad to know that we have at present most satisfactory reports of the progress of this society. Several additional agents have been recently appointed, the sales are increasing, and the people generally are taking a greater interest in spiritual things. The monthly returns of the colporteurs are very encouraging, and show what a mighty antidote to the circulation of evil literature is provided by this means.

One of the most alarming dangers of the day is the ever-increasing circulation of a literature, which is "More deadly to the soul than strychnine is to the body." We cannot stop its circulation, but we can easily render far more efficient this admirable means of circulating by thousands Bibles, good books, and beautiful cheap illustrated magazines, and papers, the reading of which is greatly blessed of God in many districts. Will the friends of Ireland help in this great work? I will forward full information on this subject to any friend who may be anxious to know more about the society's operations.—I am, faithfully yours, Armagh, Ireland. John Elliott.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.—It is most important to write to all M.P.'s, urging them to insist on the clause in this Bill, which gives power of search, not only to parents and guardians, but to any person having a bonâ fide interest in the child abducted or detained in any house whatever.

A CHRISTIAN DOCTOR, E. Hornemann, of Copenhagen, has written a small book on "The Condition of Man just before Death," in which he strongly urges medical men to inform their patients of dangerous symptoms. This, he does himself, without in the least weakening the hope of recovery; he has never found any ill effect to result, and often peace and joy in believing, and reconciliation with God, have followed.

A NEW PHASE OF AN OLD SUBJECT.

WE will first call attention to some passages in Isaiah (appointed to be read in Advent by the Church of England's later lectionary, itself a very significant fact). In ch. v. special woes are denounced against wine-bibbers; in Ch. xxviii. the priests and prophets are spoken of as drunkards. Their want of vision and judgment are particularised. In ver. 16 allusion is made to "the tried stone, the precious stone," which our Lord appropriated to Himself, and which is also the "stone cut out without hands" of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. In Isaiah lvi. and Ezekiel xxxiv., we have other passages about drunkenness of a similar character. In Hosea vi. 6—11 we have the sinfulness of the Lord's people detailed. Priest and people are alike guilty, and ver. 11 makes drunkenness and impurity the root of their alienation of heart from God. There is a passage in Joel iii. 3, of awful significance, as indicative of the present state of things in Christendom. City missionaries know only too well this is no exaggeration. Strong drink and lust are the ruling passions among the masses,* before which everything else goes down, love, honour, and even life itself. The connection of this passage with the second coming of the Lord is incontrovertible.

There is another passage in Joel ii. 28, 29, which, compared with Ephesians v. 18, is worth notice. Joel speaks of the outpouring of the Spirit of God before the Lord's coming. St. Paul warns against an excess of wine-drinking. Coupling this, as he does, with being filled with the Spirit as the only real source of true joy and gladness of heart, suggests the comparison between the spurious mirth of the wine-bibber, and the blessed lightness of heart which God gives his people through the operation of the Holy Spirit. Does not the Godless man seek to find in wine the carnal counterfeit of this holy joy? Were not even the Apostles accused of being drunken on the day of Pentecost? When, therefore, the fulfilment of God's prophecy may be looked for, it is not unreasonable to expect its carnal counterfeit to be much in the ascendant.

But what does our Lord Himself say on this point. Only twice is drunkenness mentioned by Him, and in both passages He is distinctly speaking of his second coming. How is it that no one has noticed this strangely significant fact? No single word of our Lord's but has its importance. Notice then the enormous weight thus given to this definite mention of one particular sin, and that, one not then common among the Jews, or even alluded to by Him at any other time. Notice also that it is the Lord's servants who are being spoken of. Who can these be but the professing Church of God—modern Christendom? There are also two classes of these servants. The evil one gives himself up to the pleasures of the world. He persecutes those more enlightened than himself. He "eats and drinks with the drunken," is himself "drunken," according to St. Luke's account.

Now, if ever drunkenness was the prevailing sin of the Lord's household it is now. The Temperance reformation proves this; for the remedy would not have been sought, if the evil had not been universally felt. Or, if we take the Lord's servants in a more restricted sense, and apply the term to his especial ministering servants, coupling it with the passages in Isaiah describing their lack of "vision" and "judgment," it has a terrible significance. For those who ought to lead us are often the last to follow, and by their negative influence are beguiling, in many cases, the flocks committed to their charge. The prevailing vices of the age, drunkenness, gluttony, and luxurious expenditure of all kinds, still hold sway over too many in prominent places. Well may we take up the prophet's words and say, "His watchmen are blind, they are all without knowledge; they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; dreaming, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, the dogs are greedy, they can never have enough; and these are shepherds that cannot understand: they have all turned to their own way, each one to his gain from every quarter. Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and tomorrow shall be as this day, a day great beyond measure" (Isa. lvi. 10—12, R.V.)

There is no need to remind Bible readers of the passages in the Epistles referring to drunkenness, and its opposite, sobriety. In most cases the second coming of the Lord is also referred to. Doubtless the Apostles had not overlooked our Lord's mention of the sin in the same connection

But we have said nothing of the "wise" and waiting servant. Thank God for the great Temperance reformation. There are numbers of "wise" and waiting servants, looking for their Lord's coming; and who, "casting off the works of darkness," breaking through all the traditions of social caste, unscientific medical data, and religious misrepresentations, have had the courage to renounce all habitual use of intoxicating liquors. They, at least, are making their daily protest against the self-indulgent luxuriousness which is rocking into dangerous drowsiness so many of the Lord's household. May God awake many such to a sense of their danger. May they see this question rightly in this new light. May they recognise in this Temperance reformation an evident token that the coming of the Lord "draweth nigh." Who that loves their Lord would care to be found of Him eating and drinking "with the drunken," if not himself "drunken." Will not such throw in their lot with those who are making their stand against this drink infatuation of the age? Will they not, in their daily lives as well as in their principles, openly avow themselves to be "of the day"; as "sober," as those who seek to be filled "with the Spirit," rather than with "wine," who will not "eat and drink with the drunken," "lest they fall into the same condemnation," or encourage others in wrongdoing; but who "walk honestly," as "in the day," not in "surfeiting and drunkenness"? "For we are not of the night nor of darkness . . . for they that sleep sleep in the night. But let us, since we are of the day, be sober" (1 Thess. v. 6—8). "Abstain from every form of evil, and the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v. 22, 29, R.V.).

THE POOLE PERJURY CASE.—On Saturday evening, July 25, an open-air demonstration was held at Victoria-park to protest against the sentence of seven years' penal servitude passed upon Henry Williams, who was found guilty of perjury at the Winchester Assizes, in November, 1884, by Baron Huddleston. Mr. C. W. Garrard alluded to the efforts made by Professor Stuart, Mr. William Fowler, and other Members of Parliament, on behalf of Williams, whom they believed to be innocent of the crime for which he was suffering penal servitude. A resolution was unanimously approved of, and a letter addressed by the chairman to the Home Secretary, drawing his attention to the circumstances of the case.

OUR TRAM-CAR MEN.

By Mrs. REANEY.

THE attention of the public has often been called to the grievances of our tram men; but, up to the present time, without any apparent benefit to those on whose behalf sympathy has been enlisted. It seems, however, as though at length popular indignation had become a power, which it is as impossible for those in authority to ignore as it would be for them to attempt to disregard.

We do not propose here to discuss the worn-out theme of State interference, after the fashion of some of our contemporaries in dealing with this question, or even to enter into lengthy arguments as to the application of given remedies. We are anxious, however, to impress facts upon such of our readers as may not yet have grasped the bearings of this all-important question.

We are apt to flatter ourselves that we live in a free State, forgetting the words of Kingsley:—

> "Ye sit in a cloud and sing like pictured angels,
> And say your State is free; while right below
> Welters the black fermenting heap of griefs
> Whereon your State is built."

Let our readers acquaint themselves with the facts about our tram men, and then ask whether the brag as to the freedom of the State has any meaning for them. Listen:—"We are well cared for," observed a driver to a Sunday rider, "as our directors and proprietors are in church praying for the home heathen—us among them. And then we have the best wishes, no doubt, of the good Christians we carry to the popular churches."

"I have been five years at the tail of a tram," remarked a conductor, "with the rare chance of a Sunday off. It's the busy day with us, and matters are getting worse. People who have time to read the newspapers say that there are societies of gentlemen formed to open museums, to increase gardens in the suburbs, and bands in the parks, regardless that we, the slaves of the public, have the irons of Sabbath labour riveted upon us. Are there no old-fashioned Christians to take our part, such as there were when I was a Sunday-school boy."

"For the last five or six weeks running," said another conductor, "I have applied for a Sunday off duty, I've been refused every time, although I've only had about two in all during the last eighteen months."

Said another, "How can a man, sir, be expected to be at the stable by half-past six in the morning, fresh for a hard day's work, when he hasn't finished till twelve o'clock the night before, and this goes on day after day, week after week, and month after month, with perhaps the chance of one week-day off duty in six weeks, but never a Sunday?"

We do most fervently pray that the day may soon come when the Church universal shall be able to wash its hands when the charge is brought, as it is to-day truthfully brought, against professing Christians, that they do more than any other class of passengers to sustain Sunday traffic.

But if Christians countenance Sunday traffic, the very least that can be expected of them is to do their utmost to mitigate the evil consequences of the traffic they support. What our tram men ask, what we ask in their name, is that regular Sunday labour with them shall be not compulsory as at present, but optional. We shall doubtless be told that at present it is not compulsory. That statement we deny in toto. If not compulsory, how is it that in not more than one case out of ten do you find either a conductor or a driver who has been successful in obtaining more than one Sunday off in six months, while some go for years and never know, perhaps never will, what it is to have a day of rest.

We earnestly trust that our tram men may rely upon the support of all our readers; we trust that that support will be as practical as possible, and not merely a "dumb show." It rests with us to prove to them and to the world that our God is one whose ears are ever open to the cry of those who are oppressed.

REV. JOHN BENNETT.

THE Rev. John Bennett (whose portrait we this week present to our readers) is an M.A. of Cambridge, and D.D. of Bishop Huron's University in Canada. He was incumbent of St. Jude's, Glasgow, previous to his taking the pastorate of Park Chapel, Chelsea, where, for the last seven years, he has preached to a congregation which is now almost too large for the building.

Last February Dr. Bennett held a series of evangelical meetings for the poor, which were largely attended, and at which good was done.

Dr. Bennett, though a Churchman, is of opinion that the Church Service, in its entirety, is unsuited to the poor, by reason of their ignorance of the Prayer-book, consequent upon their non-churchgoing habits. He has, therefore, held at intervals on Sunday evenings informal mission services, which have been most successful. Speaking of these services, he says :—" On February 8, in spite of wind and rain, not only was the church packed, but an overflow meeting was held. The poor will come to church if a simple service be provided, and they are made welcome. The success of such an effort is mainly dependent on the hearty co-operation of the congregation. I feel convinced that if the Church in the past had only had more elasticity, we should not be now confronted with the mournful fact that masses of the working class attend no place of worship. Changed circumstances require fresh machinery. In Church as in State, judicious reform is the wisest conservatism."

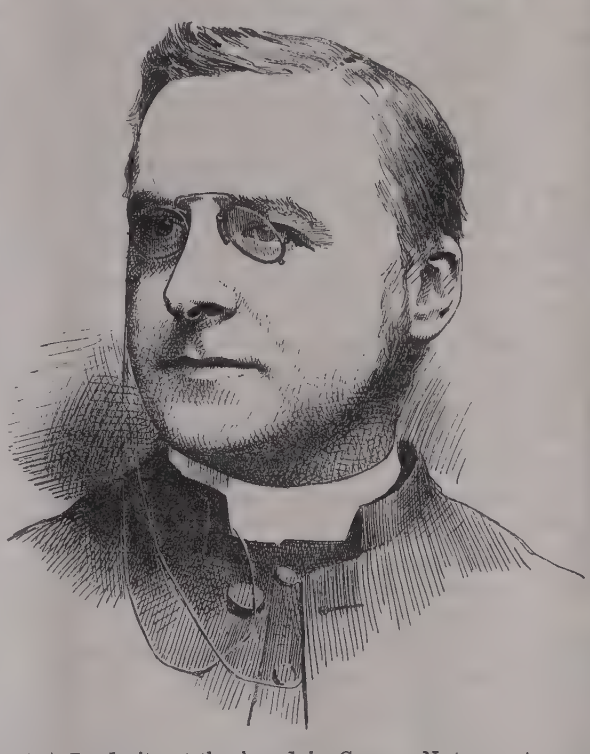
The following are the notes of one of his characteristic expository discourses which was founded on Leviticus xi. 36 :—

There are two ways in which Scripture may be studied. Either we may seek to understand the drift of whole chapters and books, or else we may analyse particular verses. The combination of both methods constitutes the ideal student. I wish now briefly to illustrate my meaning as to both points.

(1) Take the first sixteen chapters of Leviticus. They give us orderly illustration of the mighty truth of sin and redemption. In chapters i. to vii. we find the Cross; five offerings present its manifold aspects. Let us not forget that the New Testament pre-supposes the Old. How many students of prophecy have made shipwreck on the Apocalypse, because they have not first mastered the testimony of Isaiah, Daniel and Zechariah. Had the Revelation been regarded as supplementary to, and not subversive of, the Prophets, how many mistakes the Church would have been spared! So with the Cross. The Gospels and Epistles dwell indeed upon its glories, but they assume our acquaintance with the teaching of Leviticus. At the outset then we see the Cross, the scene at once of sin-bearing and of the presentation of infinite meritoriousness, the value of both being imparted to the believer.

Then follow (chapters viii. to x.) the consecration of the priesthood—Christ and his people—with a solemn warning lest the practical exercise of priestly power should be forfeited. This priesthood is appointed to be the witness to the Cross.

In chapter xi. we are reminded that things unclean are around us, and that the priesthood must be undefiled by contact with surrounding evil.



Chapter xii., speaking of childbirth, points out that sin is hereditary, that it is transmitted by natural generation.

Chapters xiii., xiv. dwell upon the deep-seated nature of the disease. It is leprosy in the blood, polluting the very springs of life.

Chapter xv. completes the awful picture. The utter loathsomeness of sin is graphically pourtrayed, and thus the way is prepared for the cleansing of the Day of Atonement. The blood cleanseth. Blessed is that chapter at all times, but how is its blessedness enhanced by the lurid light thrown in previous chapters upon the awfulness of sin! In proportion to the awfulness of the sin is the glory of the Redemption!

(2) Turning to the verse before us, we are shown how, amidst abounding pollution, we may be kept from being tainted. "If there is plenty of water"—the well-known emblem of the Holy Ghost—the carcase does not contaminate. This principle is illustrated at every turn in the Gospel narrative. Our Lord sits at the board in Cana. No easy place is that wherein to glorify the Father, and retain unbroken fellowship with Him. Yet Jesus, through all, manifests his glory in the divinely appointed way, because of the living water. In the power of the Spirit He is kept from taint. So at the house of Simon the Pharisee. Not one word escapes his lips, even amid the greatest provocation, which should have been unsaid. Nor, again, is He silent when faithfulness requires speech. He infringes no law of hospitality, and yet to host, to guests, and to sinners, He can act as the Divine Prophet. He is kept by the power of the Spirit. The "water" is there.

And does not this apply to us? We are called to daily contact with evil. We may be, some of us, in ungodly households, forced to look upon sin continually. Can I be kept? Yes, on one condition. I must not choose the post of temptation, but be placed in it by God's providence. Had the three young men walked into the furnace of their own accord, we know what would have been their end.

I have no right to read unsound books, or dabble in unscriptural theories. If duty calls me to deal with such, then, indeed, the living water will keep me from pollution. Not otherwise.

May the Lord Himself teach us this and all things, that we may be separated unto Himself, and wise to win souls.

MR. DENHAM SMITH'S TEACHINGS.

THERE is more meaning than we commonly think in St. Paul's words, when at the end of his career he says, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (2 Tim. iv. 7.) Does not this imply that it was no easy matter to do either of these in a manner worthy of the Gospel in which he served? There were continual temptations to swerve from the race set before him, owing to the persecutions and sufferings that beset him. And as to "the faith," the false teachings and heresies were abundant—so abundant and numerous as to make us wonder how they could arise in the Church at such an early period. To these the Apostle constantly refers in his Epistles. And one often thinks that there has scarcely been an error or heresy in the history of Christianity, the germ of which will not be found in the New Testament, and when any veteran follows after the Apostle, in any measure, however little in comparison, it is to be noted with thankfulness. And we are glad to see that, in the face of all the evil doctrines so rife in the present day, Mr. Denham Smith in his addresses is dwelling on the great fundamentals of the faith. In proof of this the following headings of those addresses will be sufficient evidence: "(1) The Eternity of the Saved; (2) The Eternity of the Lost; (3) Satan: his personality, &c.; (4) The love of God in relation to the Lost; (5) Immortality, Incorruptibility, and Eternal Life."

Now these are foundation subjects, and "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" (Ps. x. 3). In these days, when the enemy is trying by whatever means to neutralise the eternity of judgment, and minimise the nature of sin, it may well be asked, "Who is on the Lord's side?" The leaven of the Pharisees is resuscitated in Ritualism, and the leaven of the Sadducees in Ritualism—for the removal of the guilt of sin by means of an outward ceremonial or ordinance; and the removal of the guilt of sin by means of annihilation or universalism, whilst seemingly opposite one to the other, are in reality in close relationship; as in either case it is a light sort of thing within the limits of human checks and measurements, and fitted to the thoughts and conceptions of the natural man."

Such are the remedies which some of the wisest urge in these days against the exigencies of the eternal judgment of God! and if Mr. Denham Smith makes an effort in those addresses to strip the soil off the face of those fallacies, and calls upon Christians to submit their minds and thoughts to the revealed word of the Lord on those great matters, is it not keeping the faith? And is such not to be respected and valued?—respected and valued by those at least who feel they are but of yesterday, and know not anything, whilst He knoweth all things who is from everlasting to everlasting. Faith then in the Infinite, when the Infinite reveals Himself, belongs to the highest order of wisdom. And the object which Mr. Denham Smith seems to put before him in those addresses is to impress on Christians the value of implicit faith in the declared Revelation of God, and in doing so all who value the truth must bid him God speed.

CHICAGO.—Col. Clarke writes: The past year has been one of the most blessed of our Christian work at the Pacific Garden Mission. A regular nightly revival has been held in the mission for nearly eight years, and many thousand souls have expressed hope of conversion. The work is increasing as to numbers, importance, and visible results. Praise the Lord with us.

RELIGIOUS AND IRRELIGIOUS CANT.

II.—IRRELIGIOUS.

CANT is generally attributed to religious people, and there is indeed far too much of it among them, but they are not by any means afflicted with a monopoly of this undesirable quality.

There is the cant of Art, of which we had a newspaper exhibition a few months ago, in the apologies and defences of nude painting and sculpture. There is the Classic cant, which defends the reproduction of licentious writings, ancient and modern, because they have attained to a classic reputation. Thus, to go no further back than Fielding and Smollett, we have "Tom Jones" and "Roderick Random" issued by respectable London publishers, and sold by respectable booksellers, because their indecency is covered by the cant phrase "English Classics."

Then there is the cant of business, which sanctifies and sanctions a great deal, if not everything. A friend of ours the other day took up a book at a railway stall, and the young man in charge remarked that he should not have supposed he read such books as that. "No, I do not," replied our friend, "and I wonder a respectable firm should sell them." "We don't read them ourselves," was the reply, "we sell them as a matter of business." So that books are sold to all comers, young or old, which the sellers do not think fit for their own or their friends' reading; and yet the plain and outspoken denunciation of the vice pandered to by such literature is not sold because of its demoralising character!

One of the publications so prominently exposed on the railway stalls just now is "The World of Cant"—a monstrous and lying burlesque on evangelical religion; and another is Illustrated Bits, the cartoon in the current number of which is calculated to cast contempt on married life and to make a joke of flagrant immorality.

An exhibition of cant which can scarcely be called religious is specified by our good friend Mr Robert Burn in the following letter:—

> "Sir,—An experience on somewhat similar lines to your own, when your contractor defaced your contents-bills, has befallen our Association. We sent some double-demy bills to the North London Railway Company to post on our contract board, and on some of their own hoardings, announcing that Miss Ellice Hopkins would speak on Friday evening, to men only, on 'Is it True?' The result justified our expectation; we could not accommodate the large numbers of City young men who crowded into our house to hear the refined and high-toned address of Miss Hopkins. The Railway Company, presuming to act as public censor of morals, sent the following reply, accompanying the rejected bills:—
> 'London, July 22, 1885.
>
> 'Sir,—In reply to your letter of yesterday, I am under the necessity of returning the bills sent by you, as they are not such as the Company can exhibit.—I am, yours obediently,
>
> 'A. Flanders.
>
> 'Mr. Robt. Burn, Y.M.C.A.,
> '186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.'
> "Can you account for such hyper-sensitiveness on the part of a trading corporation? And can you understand the same Company permitting the sale on their bookstalls of the corrupting literature which makes much of our fighting necessary?—Yours most truly, "Robert Burn."

Another outrageous piece of cant is perpetrated by The World, in an article entitled, "An Ecclesiastical Scandal," in which the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and Cardinal Manning, are lectured for consenting to consider and report upon the truth of the revelations made by The Pall Mall Gazette. Twice over in half a column does this exemplary print inform these dignitaries that it is the duty of Bishops, in accordance with the form of their consecration, to be "wholesome examples in word, in conversation, in chastity, in purity," and not to "incur the reproach of wantonly intermeddling with any obscene business that does not concern them." The World does not weary of reminding its readers of a brief imprisonment at Holloway for libel, but it has no word of sympathy for young girls and children kidnapped, incarcerated, ruined, and exported—far worse than murdered; and it has the assurance to censure men of position and character for accepting a responsibility, to have refused which would have justly incurred the contempt of all right-thinking men and women.

Then there is the cant of silence, of which the London representatives of the Press—the boasted Fourth Estate of the Realm—are giving us from day to day such a sublimely virtuous example. On Friday The Daily Telegraph had a leader on a young hawk being almost drowned by two moorhens, whose nest he had attacked, but no expression of anxiety as to the plunder of human homes, and the outrage of young children. The Daily News breaks silence with a brief leader, which concludes with the astonishing assertion that the provisions of the Bill now under discussion have "nothing directly to do with those crimes of violence, for which the law, as it is, imposes the heaviest penalties." How, then, has the Minotaur escaped?

And lastly there is the cant of some Legislators, of which we have had some remarkable specimens during the debate on the Criminal Law Amendment Bill.

The American religious papers have made their great continent ring with the revelations, and fully justify those who have made them. Pastor Hirsch, writing in the Parisian paper Le Matin, an article from which we will quote further in our next, says:—

> "We must call to mind that among the rights of men is not comprised the right to plunge others into the mire, and to beastialise oneself. It is a gigantic task, but we have in Paris one who is worthy of the task. Pastor Fallot, who has been long at work, has found friends, by whose co-operation he has formed 'The French League for the Reformation of Public Morals.' There remains no alternative; we must act, and speak, and demolish completely the present accepted ideas, unless we wish to be among those who are helping in the degradation and corrupting of their fellow-men."

Upwards of a hundred enthusiastic and determined meetings have been held in London and the provinces during the past fortnight, and these are but the premonitory rumblings of the thunders of indignation which will soon be heard throughout the land. Numerous petitions have also been sent in, the largest being one from the Salvation Army. This petition, which has been signed by persons in all parts of the country to the number of 393,000, was displayed, securely fastened on an extemporised car drawn by a pair of horses, and escorted by a procession of about 250 "soldiers" of the Army, some of them being mounted, from the Congress Hall at Clapton to Westminster. At either end of the car were emblazoned the words, "In the name of God and the people and the Queen Mother of the nation, the Salvation Army demands that these iniquities shall cease."

The Gospel Purity Association is prepared to send competent lecturers to address meetings of men or women upon the subject of Social Purity. Apply to Mr. J. B. Wookey, 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C.

WHAT IS THE CAUSE?

I FEEL impelled to inquire what has caused all this flood of unbridled iniquity, the revelation of which has recently startled society and produced such deep grief in the hearts of all right-minded people? No doubt the wickedness and hardness of heart were prevalent long ago, but their extent and unblushing excesses are a modern growth. An explanation occurs to me which may account for a large proportion of the awful sum of depravity. If courtly Deans have taught our Princes, if mealy-mouthed Bishops and Canons are teaching the upper ten thousand, if popular Mission Preachers and degenerate descendants of the Puritans are telling the wealthy middle classes that there is no eternal hell, is it to be wondered that men in each of these ranks of society should take their religious teachers at their word, and live as if there were no hereafter of endless duration, and no great assize at which they must answer for the deeds done in the body?

If there be no hell-fire for the man who boasts that he has personally destroyed two thousand young Englishwomen, can I continue to believe that there is a God who judges in the earth? But, "verily, there is a God who judges in the earth;" and there is an awful reckoning for workers of iniquity such as that which is now making the ears of Englishmen to tingle. And what shall we say of the judgment of the men in responsible positions as teachers of the truth of God, who have cast, and are casting, doubt upon the plain meaning of his words who is The Truth; who are thus opening the flood-gates for this tide of immorality and reckless living; who have been set in conspicuous places to sound an alarm in the ears of sinners, but who are betraying their trust?

STRIKING AT THE ROOT.

By ELLICE HOPKINS.

AT a time when so many of us have been suffering so intensely, especially the women of England, it has occurred to me that it might be a great comfort to many to know of some effective way in which they can give a small sum of money towards attacking the evil at its root, which is pressing so heavily on our hearts. I confess in general to the greatest dread of the charitable appeal, and the golden tear which is dropped in response to it as the be-all and end-all of conscience.

I rarely appeal for money, but in this case the feeling is far too deep to be assuaged by any such superficial means; and the act of giving money, though common-place, has the advantage that it can be done at once. And the longer I work the more I feel that our only safety lies in immediate action. This is that Medusa's head in our life; gazed at in idle curiosity, suffered to die down in idle emotion, it must coarsen and harden and turn to stone all that is finest and most delicately pure in our nature. But, borne on the shield of faith, carried into instant action, this same Medusa's head becomes, as in the ancient fable, the most powerful means of slaying the monster evils in our life, especially that monster evil of religious selfishness.

Alas! that the human heart can produce such an anomalous gowth, which has eaten into the very heart of the Church of Christ, and which, in Ruskin's pathetic words addressed to good women, has "shut you within your park walls and garden gates, content to know that there is beyond them a whole world in wilderness—a world of secrets which you dare not penetrate, and of suffering which you dare not conceive, though it is you only that can feel the depths of pain and conceive the way of its healing." Taken up in the hand of faith this deadly serpent becomes a rod of wonders to open a way for the redeemed to pass over to a higher and nobler national life, a purer manhood and a truer womanhood.

No one, I hope, will suspect me of lightly thinking of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. For nine years I have been pleading all over England for the protection of the young. The labour of petitioning in connection with the Minors' Joint Protection Committee, with the exception of London and its neighbourhood, has rested on my secretary and myself; and, taking in the work of such valuable auxiliaries as the G.F.S., the Y.W.C.A., &c., the petitions for the protection of the young, even before the present agitation, show a larger total of signatures than any other subject this session except Scotch Disestablishment.

Legal protection for the young up to a much higher age than sixteen, at least from the astuteness of the trade of vice, we must have; and one of the debts we owe to the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette is the undoubted evidence that he has given us of its efficiency in the estimation of the traffickers themselves, who I presume are the best judges. The right of search we must have, the law upholding the parental rights of the poor father as well as of the rich, who, under the same circumstances, would immediately have recourse to the Habeas Corpus Act, undeterred by the £30 or £40 cost. Equality of the law for both sexes we must have, the law of the land mirroring the one law of God for men and women alike.

But, granted the supreme necessity of all this, let us remember that we have only dealt with one of the evil tentacles of this monster growth, by which it draws in the young and defenceless and sucks their life-blood; the centre from which all this lives, the remorseless demand which in some form or other will always create the pitiless supply, we have not touched; I say it advisedly, in the present low state of public opinion, with the present low standard of purity among men, the whole thing is hopeless.

Whilst it is possible for a noble peer to stand up in the House of Lords and say, "We have all been immoral in our youth, with very few exceptions," as he certainly would not have said, "We have been card-sharpers and liars in our days"; while women will insist on receiving men deeply tainted with this evil, unconcerned as long as it is not their girls who are degraded; whilst young men coming up, often from Christian homes, to our great centres of business are met by the assertion uttered with a cynical air of superior knowledge, "that all pretension to purity on the part of men is hypocrisy, and that no man can or does lead a pure life" (and how often this is said to an inexperienced lad, Mr. Alfred Dyer will join with me in testifying), I ask, What hope can there be? Pick off as many dead leaves as you like off this evil tree, there it is, and it will certainly bear fruit after its kind.

Here, then, is one of the great tap roots at which we must strike. We must band our young men that they may offer an organised resistance to what, God knows, has been shown to be a complex and highly-organised evil. We must band them to carry on a powerful crusade, with its active emissaries everywhere, against all that is low and foul and base and mean in our life. We must band them in order to have a ready-made public opinion to quote on the side of pureness of life.

An ounce of fact is worth a ton of assertion. Do you think that that scene which took place only a few weeks ago in the cathedral of Sydney had no effect on public opinion, seven to eight hundred men listening with rapt attention for more than an hour to a soul-stirring address from the Metropolitan Bishop of Sydney, Dr. Barry, and then, in sight of the whole congregation, one hundred and fifty men standing on the altar steps and taking the five White Cross obligations, in face of a great national danger, to maintain the law of purity as equally binding on men and women, to reverence women and protect them from all wrong and degradation, and, for our sakes, as well as for the sake of their God, to use all possible means to keep themselves pure. Do you think that scene did not strike deep into the imagination, the heart, and conscience of many a young Australian, who might have hitherto yielded without thought to the low standard around him? Our Australian brothers, who were the first to feel at the death of our best and bravest that one common blood of heroes makes us kin, and to take their place by the old mother country in her danger and difficulties, are now joining us in a nobler warfare under the banner of the White Cross.

Perhaps some will object: "But it is our duty as Christians to do all that; why is it not enough to preach the Gospel." So is it our duty as Christians to speak the truth; and yet we emphasise that duty in a Court of Justice before our brother men. So is it also our duty as Christians to be temperate; and yet we organise ourselves into powerful Temperance Associations to fight the Drink Traffic. So is it our duty, as Christians, not to oppress and enslave our brother man, and yet we form ourselves into strong organisations to get rid of slavery. And is it possible that anyone can think that we shall overcome our greatest national danger, our strongest national enemy, without disciplined troops, without the strength of combination for a purpose, without an organised movement?

It is, therefore, with the deepest satisfaction that I am able to state that the Bishop of Durham intends to give his great movement more definite shape. He has already formed a Council of Reference, consisting of the Earl of Aberdeen, the Bishop of Truro, the Warden of Keble, Canon Scott Holland, Rev. V. H. Stanton, Professor Stuart, Rev. J. M. Wilson, Head Master of Clifton, Rev. J. E. C. Welldon, Head Master of Harrow, and Rev. J. B. Ellin.

He is now endeavouring to find a powerful man who will undertake to be the organising Secretary of the movement, whose work it would be, at each of our great centres, to address young men belonging to our existing organisations, and enrol them as crusaders of the White Cross; to organise the older members into vigilance associations for working the amended laws when we get them, and seeing that they do not sink into a dead letter; and to conduct the correspondence which now comes from all parts of the world, seeking information about the movement. Personally, I confess to a strong interest in this matter of an organising secretary, for, unless I can be relieved of some portion of the strain that now for two years has made a single holiday an impossibility, I feel I shall be in danger of breaking down.

But to place the movement on this firmer basis requires funds till it can be made self-supporting. The man who gives up his whole time to it must live. As that astute saint and hero, Charles Gordon, says, "All things are ultimately governed by the ventral tube and its exigencies," and the White Cross movement is no exception. We want, therefore, to raise at once a modest fund of £300 to £400, which will cover office and secretarial expenses. It is to this fund for attacking the evil at its root that I will thankfully receive any contributions. But so perfect is our unity in this benificent work that, if anyone prefers the Gospel Purity Association to the White Cross—I need not say that the Cross stands, not for a badge, but simply for the fact that the whole movement is based on the self-giving manhood of our Lord, on Christ and Him crucified—I will gladly pass on any contribution to my friend and fellow-worker, Mr. Wookey. The Gospel Purity Association accepts the White Cross obligations, and is doing precisely the same work under a different name. Both organisations are open to Nonconformists as well as Churchmen.

In conclusion, let me give a very commonplace little incident to illustrate how the White Cross works. Two young men were riding on the top of an omnibus; one was a convert to the White Cross, the other "did not see the good of it." So the adherent of modern knighthood took the opportunity of meditative leisure presented by the "knife board," to offer his companion a White Cross paper, "What can we do?" * He watched him read it with unusual attention, and saw it had taken hold, but nothing was said.

Returning late in the evening from their excursion, they found a young girl on the platform in great distress. She had overshot her station, and had to find her way home in the dark for a considerable distance, and not knowing the way. At once the two young men went up to her and, taking off their hats to her, offered to escort her and see her safely home. One glance at their honest, open faces, and their offer was gladly accepted. It was a drenching night, and pitch dark; but all the way those two young men marched by her side, holding their umbrellas over her to keep her dry, and spluttering about among the dark puddles to find out the right road, till at last they landed her safely at her own door, when, again politely taking off their hats, they bade her good night. As they returned the one who could not see the good of joining the White Cross said to the other, "I could not help thinking of a passage in that little book you lent me, which suggested that we might put ourselves out a bit to see our young sister safe home through a bad neighbourhood." "Why," said the other, "that was just what I was thinking too."

Truly, a little thing. But yet if our young girls could look on every young man as their natural protector, and could say of our knights of the White Cross as the most unprotected girl could say of King Arthur, as Spenser sings:—

> "That all the while he by his side her bore,
> She was as safe as in a sanctuary;"

if the fact that a young girl's foolish, childish feet have slipped was no longer the signal, as it is now, to trample her deeper in the mire as "fair game," but the call to every man calling himself a man, to hasten to her side to raise her up and restore her to her lost womanhood, would all England be mourning as she is mourning now? Conceive the power that those four thousand young men represent who have enrolled under the White Cross in Glasgow alone within the last four months, all of them pledged to carry on active warfare against the whole evil, and give it no quarter, all of them pledged to put down the foul talk in warehouses and places of business, in clubs and on play-grounds, which more than anything else muddies the man at the very springs of his being, and prepares the ground for foul actions, all of them quietly, persistently, everywhere, and at all times, circulating publications giving sound teaching on subjects where one half of the evil springs from crass ignorance and thoughtlessness, and you will realise the mighty engine for forming a higher and purer public opinion which I am asking you to help. Especially may I not appeal to the mothers of sons in the solemn words of Scripture: "Arise, for this matter belongeth unto thee; we will be with thee:" ay, the whole power of the undivided Trinity, the love of the Father, the wisdom of the Son, the powers of the Holy Ghost. "Be of good courage, and do it."

LONDON.

"It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."—MATT. xi. 24.

OH, thou resort and mart of all the earth,
Chequered with all complexions of mankind,
And spotted with all crimes; in whom I see Much that I love, and more that I admire—
And all that I abhor. Thou frickled fair,
That pleases and yet shocks me.
I can laugh and I can weep,
Can hope and can despond,
Feel wrath, and pity, when I think on thee!
Ten righteous would have saved a city once,
And thou hast many righteous.
Well for thee, that salt preserves thee;
More corrupted else, and therefore more obnoxious at this hour
Than Sodom in her day had power to be,
For whom God heard his Abraham plead in vain.

YOUNG WOMEN AT RESTAURANTS.

AN INTERVIEW WITH MISS GOUGH.

WE have heard so much lately of the dark side of female life in London, that it will be a welcome relief to have a glimpse at the bright side. Not that the darkness has by any means been all explored. If the Secret Commissioner of The Pall Mall were to turn his attention to the conditions under which many young women live in London, who serve the thirsty public at railway-bars and public restaurants, he might get material for another gloomy chapter in the history of "Modern Babylon." As Miss Gough paradoxically remarked to the writer one day, "I could tell you many things that I could not tell you."

Miss Gough, as our readers may, or ought to, recollect, is a visitor in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association among the young women employed in public restaurants and refreshments-rooms. In this work she has been actively engaged for over two years, with the most blessed results. It was surely by the direct inspiration of the Holy Ghost that her mind and her steps were directed to this class of the community, of which there are many hundreds in London. No class needs more to be visited by a true and sympathetic friend. This Miss Gough has proved to be to many lonely, friendless, tempted sisters, the current of whose lives have been thoroughly altered, despite the strong tide of converging influences that would carry them swiftly in the downward way. By repeated visitation and kindly intercourse she gained first the respect and then the confidence of those whom she wished to serve. These young people, most of whom live away from the restraining and softening influences of home and family life, with abnormally long hours of service and few privileges of any desirable sort, began to welcome the visits of Miss Gough, and to value her unwearied efforts on their behalf. These efforts being so much appreciated, they were multiplied and varied as opportunity arose. To visitation were added the gift of monthly packets of good reading matter, as well as letters written by Christian ladies, who undertook in this way to show a kindly interest in a certain number of young women. Then came occasional social gatherings in the drawing-rooms of various ladies in the West-end. These reunions were much prized as bright spots in their sombre lives. A Penny Bank was started, a Temperance Society &c., and these have been undoubted instruments of good. It needs little proof to show that the temptation to indulge freely in strong drinks is one of the most frequently recurring, and one of the most subtle to which the barmaid is exposed. Even with all the help and encouragement that Miss Gough so freely renders to her clients, their struggles against the drink are such as few outside can imagine. By the grace of God, and the sisterly support of their visitor, not a few of them are bravely fighting the foe that is under their very noses all day long, and to conquer which is no child's task.

So the work went on, with many discouragements, no doubt, but also with ample encouragement. By and by it came to the ears of Mr. Samuel Morley that a great boon to this work would be some place to which the young women could resort in their brief hours of leisure, and where they could cultivate mutual sympathy, and improve themselves both mentally and spiritually. Very generously indeed did Mr. Morley respond to Miss Gough's representation. The upshot of the matter is this, that two rooms have been rented at 14, John-street, Bedford-row, for the purposes of an Institute for the special use of these young women. Mr. Morley holds himself responsible for the rent, for a stated period, and has also contributed largely to the expense of furnishing. Miss Gough has, with a due regard to economy, furnished the rooms with much taste and wisdom, so that the place looked to us, on a recent visit, pretty, and comfortable enough to be a boudoir for a duchess. The young people themselves are, we understand, charmed with it, and so they well may be. The great thing is that it is a place which they can call "their very own;" where they can feel as free as under their own roof, and where we hope and believe multitudes of them will set their faces heavenward, and be strengthened in the desire for what is lovely and pure, and of good report.

We could say much about the dangers that surround these young women; we could furnish some startling stories of the perfidy shown toward them by the other sex: but we forbear. We trust we have said enough to awaken the most lively and practical interest in the barmaids engaged in London restaurants and railway bars. Christian ladies especially can help by personal co-operation in this work; all can help by prayer and by defraying needful expenses for the support of the rooms. We hope all who can do so will in some way strengthen the hands of Miss Gough in this really splendid work on behalf of a class which demands, by the exigencies of their daily life, the hearty goodwill of those who desire the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom on the earth.

"A LOST VILLAGE."

A LADY writes from Somersetshire:—"I desire to bring before your Committee, very earnestly, the needs of the district lying round here, especially of a village between this and Taunton. It is absolutely without spiritual advantages, through circumstances which I cannot suitably explain. My husband held a small cottage meeting there last week in the only house in the place left free, being copyhold instead of leasehold. . . . The evils are of a very bad kind. If your funds allow of the establishment of a colporteur in a district where subscriptions would not easily be obtained, you could hardly, through the length and breadth of the kingdom, find a place more needing one. The woman at whose house my husband held the meeting is an awakened person. I shall never forget the tone in which she said, 'this is a lost village.' May I ask your special prayers for this 'lost village,' that the two or three there who have not denied Christ's name may be strengthened, and that some spiritual help may be sent them."

Alas, this is by no means the only "lost village" to be found in Christian England. The spiritual darkness that reigns in very many is most saddening. A colporteur asked an old man whom he found sitting on his doorstep, if he knew the way to heaven. "No," the old man replied, "there ain't no place o' that name about these parts." "Have you ever heard of the Lord Jesus Christ?" inquired the colporteur. "Yes," said the old man, in a sad tone; "I have heard on Him, but not for these score o' years past."

Drink, immorality, ungodliness, and the deepest ignorance have a terrible hold in many of these villages, and, removed as they are from centres of Christian activity, the light that is in them is often darkness indeed.

Added to this, an active Romish propaganda is now being carried on in villages to an alarming extent, and the poor people are being led by "easy stages," from darkness and indifference into deadly error. We receive appeals on every hand to send colporteurs to some of these places, this agency being so admirably suited to carry the light of the Gospel into these out-of-the-way parts. The quiet work of the colporteur arouses little or no active opposition, while the systematic house to house visitation, the personal dealing with souls, and, especially, the Word of God and Gospel books left behind—not as a loan or gift, but as a purchase—have proved an invaluable means of making known the way of salvation. About a thousand villages are already thus visited by our colporteurs monthly, and much blessing has attended their labours.

May the Lord's stewards be stirred up to increase this agency tenfold, for assuredly Satan is busy at work with "pen and pencil" to destroy the souls of men. H. D. BROWN, Secretary.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

SEVERAL of our friends remind us, when sending their contributions, that they are glad to see a notice in THE CHRISTIAN now and then of the work of this Mission amongst the Jews. We are truly grateful to the Editor for such kind notices, and to the readers for their sympathy.

From the commencement of the Mission, in 1876, we have steadily kept before us our one object, that of preaching Christ, by the living voice, or by printed matter, to all the Jews in Great Britain, before their restoration to Palestine, or the return of our Lord. This object has already been largely realised, though the number of Jews has increased about 20,000 since the Mission commenced. Our Medical Mission has been and is still an untold blessing to multitudes. Its two doctors, two deaconesses, and dispenser, besides other helpers, have as much work as they can get through. The room is usually crowded with the poor and the sick who listen most respectfully to the preaching of the Gospel, and many engage in earnest conversation after the address, hymn, and prayer. We are safe in saying that hundreds are secret believers in Jesus as the Messiah. The last two Saturdays the room at Cannon-place, Whitechapel, was crowded. Our night-school for Jewish children, four nights a week, has on its books about 150, with an attendance of about seventy. A work of God is going on amongst these little ones, and several truly love Jesus. Our weekly meeting for Jewesses at Wellclose-square is usually filled with about eighty, while several are shut out for lack of room.

God's signal blessing has rested on our Convalescent Home at Highgate, on our Home for inquirers in Newington-green, on our Cromwell Lodge Home for destitute children; indeed, on every branch of the work. Our Itinerant Mission has already visited the Jews in about fifty or sixty towns and cities, some twice or three times over. Mr. Adler and Mr. Halbmillion are just now visiting the Jews in Hull and in Grimsby with friendly access to all classes, including the officials of the synagogue; whilst our brethren, Messrs. Baron and Barnett, are giving special attention to the higher-class Jews residing in the suburbs of London, north, east, south, and west.

For details of the work we shall be glad to send our annual statement to any name and address supplied to us. Our workers now number about twenty six, and our needs are about £5000 a year. Though we have had trials of faith, the Lord has hitherto supplied our needs through the voluntary offerings of his stewards. Surely we ought to have a thousand times more interest in Israel than is now manifested. The Jewish field was never more inviting, never more promising. We are praying and longing for such a mighty movement of the Holy Spirit amongst the Jews as the Church has never witnessed since Pentecost. Will the Lord's people join us in this prayer?

79, Mildmay-road. JOHN WILKINSON.

Y.M.C.A., BRIDGWATER.—The monthly meeting of the "Christian Workers' Union" was held on the 21st ult., the chair being occupied by the President, Mr. William Hurman. The report given showed that the noon-day meeting sustains its interest in point of numbers, and there was an increasing depth in the spiritual tone, which meant well for the future. The young men's and workers' meetings, and Bible-class had all been well attended, and a thirst for the Word of God was so apparent that extra Bible-readings were held, which were thoroughly appreciated; the various branches of work amongst policemen, sailors, and railway employés are going on satisfactorily, but the most encouraging is the open-air work amongst those who on Sunday evenings will not attend Divine worship; six out of nine inquirers had been led to a decision for Christ during the past three Sundays. In addition to this, the members had been roused to greater activity, and this influence is spreading through the churches and chapels in the town, while two members have decided to go out as missionaries to China.

Notes and Comments.

WE regret that the necessity of going to press early, on account of Bank Holiday, obliges us to postpone much important matter to our next.

The twenty-third Annual Conference at Perth will be held (D.V.) in the City Hall, from September 8 to 10. Information regarding lodgings, &c., will be furnished by Mr. Thomas Russell, 65, South Methuen-street, Perth.

In a book on Rescue Work recently published, the author, chaplain to a hospital for fallen women, says:—

> "Thanks to the unwise conduct of many of the lady agitators for the repeal of the C.D. Acts, I am not surprised at numbers of husbands being very much against their wives having anything to do with any effort to mitigate what is called the Social Evil. . . . Wide and fearful harm has been done to the cause of purity in more ways than one, by the fanatical and ignorant agitation that has been fomented and carried on amongst ladies married and single, the vast majority not having the slightest practical or accurate knowledge of what is being raved about."

Is this true? Some of the noblest and best Christian women in the land have taken up this subject and its concomitants. Their love for human kind has driven them into the very depths of "practical and accurate knowledge," and at this present time they are doing God's work with a delicacy and decision that can come only from such knowledge. God guide and guard them in the coming struggle!

The Pope's idea of heaven would appear to be a somewhat singular one. One of the Romish bishops who recently went to Rome, and who had, it was believed, made himself somewhat obnoxious to the Pope by reason of his threats, took the precaution of conveying with him, and presenting, the "Peter's pence" of his diocese, amounting altogether to the sum of £1800. He was very favourably received by the Pope, who begged him to inform the contributors that the Holy Father had not silver and gold with which to express how deeply he loved them, but that he sent his apostolical benediction. He hoped that blessing would strengthen their faith and form their resolutions, "and support them in their onward march to glory, where," he added, "perhaps we may all meet hereafter, and where I may thank them again for the favour they have bestowed on me."

Whilst the Ritualists, in an apparently retrograde movement, are laying on burdens which cannot be borne, and multiplying genuflexions and formularies and ceremonies, the Roman Catholics seem to be losing many of their old landmarks. A little manual of directions to Christians, a new and revised edition of which has recently been published under the sanction of an archbishop, contains the following perversion of the Gospel: "When death comes, be sure to make an Act of Contrition: say, O my God, I am very sorry that I have sinned against you, because you are so good, and I will not sin again. This Act of Contrition from your heart will save your soul if there is no priest to hear your confession when dying." This is Romanism prepared for the intelligent and comparatively educated; what must that be which filters down to the unlettered and dull!

Something like this, perhaps, taken as it is from the same manual: "It is a venial sin to steal a little. If you steal often a little it is a sin each time, and when the little sins come to make altogether a large sum, then it becomes a mortal sin." Or this: "It is a mortal sin to get drunk so as to lose your senses." Or even this: "Remember that in the movement when the priest says over you the great words of pardon and absolution, your sins are forgiven, the pains of hell are taken away, your soul is made bright and beautiful like an angel of God, and the kingdom of heaven is yours." One would hardly think that after this the old sins need be borne in remembrance, but in another part of the manual it is laid down: "For those who have only venial sins to confess, it is well to confess over again some great sin of their past life."

An illustration of Mr. Lucas's figures with reference to the decline of Romanism, lately quoted in our pages, may be found in a recent utterance from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath upon his return from Rome. Speaking at Navan, the Bishop said, in accepting a gift of £400, "He firmly believed there was no poorer priesthood in Ireland. The reason of that was, they had not people; they had cattle, but they had not people."

A minister, who has been preaching in some country villages, says it is quite common for young girls to wander in fields and lanes on Sunday nights, their mothers allowing them to do so. Can nothing be done to open the eyes of these mothers, who are strangely ignorant or thoughtless, and who will never hear of recent disclosures? If Christian ladies, instead of scolding the watchmen, would listen to and pass on the warning, many a giddy girl would be saved.

The Wesleyan Conference, now sitting, has spoken out against the suspicious policy that would make the Criminal Law Amendment Bill a dead letter, and Mr. S. Smith's proposed drastic amendment to flog certain offenders was received with "loud cheers." There is hope that the Conference will inaugurate a vigorous Metropolitan movement to reach the masses. If, as at the first, Methodism will keep down officialism, trust the laity, both men and women, and preach with the old directness, and through the Holy Ghost, a message of present salvation from the wrath to come to every one, it will find the age wants no "new theology."

Another problem engages the attention of the Conference. This is the serious one of extending the three years of pastoral residency. The principle of itinerancy has done much for Methodism, and it is not for outsiders to criticise it. Nevertheless it may be said that it is dangerous for any denomination in these anxious days to be domineered by human laws. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there will be a wholesome fear of man-made restrictions.

Sir Henry Peek's circular touching the empty City churches should touch the consciences of men. In London there are forty City churches, the incomes of which represent the capital sum of £2,000,000. Four of these churches have been visited regularly for three months, and the fact proved that, of each one, the unofficial attendants were thirty-three persons! What are we to think of the past ruling men here?

What could be done with this enormous capital is made clear by the Report of the Evangelisation Committee of the London Diocesan Conference. Partly through lack of accommodation, and partly, no doubt, through indifferentism, the startling fact is brought out that in two London areas, outside the city, there are only about 5000 in average attendance on worship of any kind out of nearly 100,000 persons. And it is to be noted that the inquiry was not confined to the labouring, but took in every social class. The anomaly of a capital sum of two millions sterling being locked up for a city that is increasingly becoming on Sundays a place of empty warehouses, and an acknowledged spiritual destitution near at hand, is nothing less than a scandal, and makes men doubt a religion which the money was intended to advance.

The burial of General Grant, who brought the war of emancipation to a close, suggests a timely lesson. Not many years ago the faithful few who advocated emancipation were hated by the South, and denounced in Northern States. They were animadverted upon as indiscreet by the Pulpit, condemned by the Press, and objected to as sentimental by Church members. But courage on the side of the right triumphs in a world which God rules. Now, America is united on the question of freedom, and the Southerners join hands with the cities of the North in placing chaplets on the coffin of the military liberator.

☞ Rahab, a poem by James Bowker, announced in our Contents Bill, has been crowded out. It will appear next week.

While having a little respite from active work for the recruiting of his physical strength, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe has been cogitating on his favourite subject—the Evangelisation of the Heathen World. In a letter to Mr. Thompson, secretary to the evangelistic movement among the Edinburgh Medical Students, he suggests that, in this period of holiday and of scattering, the students might utilise the opportunities of fanning the flame of missionary zeal in different lands:—

> "Why should not two of the students go from Leith or Hull to Gothenburg, Stockholm, and Helsingfors; two to several places in Finland; two to Copenhagen, Christiania, and northward along the coast of Norway to Throndhjem; two to Rotterdam, Cologne, Berlin, and Hamburg; two to Paris, Geneva, and home by Basle and Holland; two to some of the chief places in Canada and the United States? I know only one language—English—but have preached in the native tongues in almost every place in Europe above mentioned. My interpreters have been invariably converted natives, and it is seldom I have had to pay for their services."

Mr. Radcliffe longs that the summer and autumn exodus of Christians from this country should be made a blessing wherever the stream may flow. Would that his yearning desire could be communicated to all who profess to believe in the same Lord and Master.

Mr. Joseph Malins, the head of the Good Templars, has been interviewed by The Pall Mall Gazette, in reference to the forthcoming election. He maintains that demand for legislation in regard to the drink traffic will enormously spread. In one lodge where there were five voters, there will now be seventy, and, among all the newly enfranchised, political antagonism to the existing trade in intoxicating drinks will show that in not a few constituencies the Temperance electors have the result of the poll in their hands.

The gains of Temperance advocacy were thus summed up: Legislation in relation to Sunday closing had been extended in Wales, Ireland, and Scotland; the national drink bill has been reduced by about £20,000,000 since 1877; the coffee-house movement had so grown that in Birmingham and Liverpool the annual receipts were £80,000, and elsewhere in similar proportions; the drink licenses were 1,700 fewer last year than the year before; publicans were everywhere ready to sell out, and in the United Kingdom there were not far less than five millions of adherents to the Temperance cause.

To fear God is to respect the rights of our fellow-creatures, and deal justly. God has revealed Himself in olden time, when "at sundry times and in divers manners He spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets." Men would do well to study again these words of God, and let the voice of Jehovah be heard by their consciences. They would be nerved to defend the weak and protect the helpless; and many would stand aghast at their ungodliness. Take the following specimens of the principles laid down by God:—

(1) Ex. xxi. 18, 19. If one man strike another in a quarrel and hurt him, then "he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed" God holds each man responsible for his own actions towards his neighbour. The principle, if enforced, of having to pay for every damage inflicted, would make men pause before they strike.

(2) Ex. xxi. 28—31. The owner of an ox that was wont to gore is held responsible for the damage done by the animal, and if he, knowing the character of the animal, lets it loose, he must suffer the penalty of death, should the ox cause the death of any. Men engaged in the manufacture and sale of dangerous and deadly articles will be held accountable to God for all the mischief wrought in the destruction of the souls of their fellow-creatures. What a terrific reckoning for brewers, distillers, and opium merchants! God is unchangeable in his principles, and will assuredly enforce them.

(3) Lev. v. 15, 16. Withholding from God the right proportion of property, or failing to fulfil his vow, brought the Jew under the necessity of procuring atonement. Atonement in such cases included restitution, and restitution meant adding considerably to the original value of the amount that was due. It does not pay to ignore the claims of God on property and on the profits of business. God is not unmindful either of the ways in which money is being made, and his principle is that all fraudulent practices, and all covetous withholdings from Him shall be met by the payment of "a double tithe," and by the addition of a fifth part as amends for the unjust dealing with another's property.

(4) The theft of an ox was to be atoned for by the payment of five oxen—of a sheep, by the payment of four sheep—of money by the payment of double the amount. Zaccheus understood this principle, and, the moment his heart was opened to the fear of God, he said he would restore fourfold. Ananias and Sapphira wished to stand well before the community in Jerusalem, and were untruthful with regard to the sale of their property. They trespassed in the holy things of the Lord, and the judgment of God overtook them.

Those who preach the Gospel of the grace of God must not omit to preach the righteousness of God. Those who rule must rule in the fear of God; and what hope can there be for a nation whose rulers set more value on property than on the bodies and souls of its children? God will soon vindicate his honour, and, by the outpouring of his wrath, declare that He acknowledges no such nation as a God-fearing nation whose laws are the opposite to his revealed principles. Mere profession of godliness will avail nothing in the presence of acts of ungodliness.

We have received a large amount of correspondence on the great social question of the day, for which we warmly thank the writers. It conveys much valuable information and many useful suggestions, of which we shall take advantage, although insertion in extenso is impossible.

RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF EUROPE.

Glancing first at Russia, we find religious circles disturbed by many excitements not unlike those which prevail in the politics of the Empire. The national Church is confronted on one side by the Raskolniks, the Old Believers, the ultra orthodox who stand related to the Establishment something as did the Covenanters of Scotland, and the Non-Jurors of England, to the National Churches of their kingdoms. On the other hand, the Imperial Government is putting forth many acts of power against the Roman Catholic hierarchy of different provinces of the Empire. In the great millenary celebrations this year in honour of Cyril and Methodius, who, a thousand years ago preached the Gospel to the Slavonic nations, there are conflicts of race and of religious parties. But while, through the empire generally, a dead orthodoxy prevails, the religious condition of Russia is an interesting study. The emancipation of the serfs has been followed by educational movements not unlike those of the last twenty years among the freedmen in this country, and there can be little doubt that the intellectual awakening will be attended with religious progress.

In the Scandinavian nations there is spiritual activity. We have spoken, at some length, at different times, of the condition of the State Church of Sweden, and of the "Free Church" movement, as seen in the organisation of societies of the "Waldenströmians," Baptists, and Methodists. In Norway similar movements are in progress. The meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, in Copenhagen, last year, turned the thoughts of many to the Church affairs of Denmark, and it is seen that there, also, in religion and in politics, are movements toward a larger freedom and a more earnest life.

In Belgium, where the Church of Rome has had unusual power, there have occurred, the past year, exciting political conflicts on educational questions, which were intimately associated with Church life. It may be expected that the ferment will result in broader views, which will be favourable to the progress of religious truth.

In Germany, evangelical doctrine seems to be making advances. The Universities are no longer under the influence of Rationalism; but in nearly all of them orthodox thought has gained the field. The number of students for the ministry is increasing, and evangelical influences are prevailing. The religious history of Germany, in recent decades, furnishes a powerful argument for the truth of the evangelical system. For that record shows that Christianity is strong—not merely in the conservatism which adheres to ancient ideas, but also in its own reasonableness, and that, when cast aside, as it was to a great extent in the prevalence of Rationalism in Germany, it can command a restoration as the only satisfactory solution of the mysteries of life.

In Austria Romanism is still dominant; but the power of the Hierarchy is far short of what it was twenty-five years ago. The people are not less religious; but it is God, not the priest, to whom they give reverence.

In France there is commotion in religion as well as in politics. There is steady progress toward the severance of the connection between Church and State. The appalling prevalence of Infidelity shows the utter failure of Romanism as a power for proper religious training. The Hierarchy had full control in France; it was the sole teacher of religion and morals; but it was unable to hold the confidence of the people, and they broke away from the guidance of the Church, and became not merely indifferent, but, to a great extent, bitterly hostile to Christianity. Had the Reformation prevailed in France, the nation never would have sunk into its present condition. But evangelical influences are at work in the land of the Huguenots, and there is reason to hope that Christianity, when presented in a purer form, will win back the allegiance of the people.

Italy is another witness to the failure of Romanism; for Italy, like France, is largely sceptical. With only the Papal hierarchy to guide them, the people have wandered away from the Gospel, and very largely deny the truth of Christianity. But, as the last score of years has seen the rising of a new Italy politically, a few years more may see the development of a new religious life.

The religious condition of the continent of Europe has many serious and perplexing aspects; but it is by no means discouraging. True Christianity is advancing. The downfall of superstition does not involve the decadence of the Christian system; but only gives it a clearer field in which it makes a more rapid and a sure advance.

TEN MORE MISSIONARIES FOR KABYLIA.

DEAR SIR,—You have from time to time kindly recorded in your paper the deep spiritual needs of North Africa, and the progress of the work begun there by Mr. George Pearse, and carried on by the Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber races.

Your readers have generously helped to send the Gospel to these long-neglected people, so that we have now ten missionaries and their wives labouring among them. Some of these friends can now make themselves fairly understood by the natives, and are much encouraged by the open doors on every side. They are all asking us to send out more labourers to help them in the work.

We are thankful to say we have now ten brethren and sisters ready to go out this autumn, and hope, by God's help to send them as soon as the hot weather is over. Beyond this there are several others who are offering who may go later on. These reinforcements fill us with thankfulness; but it is manifest that the supply is still totally inadequate to meet the need of the millions of people there who are scattered over an area more extensive than British India and China Proper.

We ask the further prayers of your readers that all the needs of this work may be supplied, and these countries quickly evangelised.

EDWARD H. GLENNY, Hon. Sec.

Barking.

JAPAN.—M. Itagaki, the leader of the party of progress, has asked the American Presbyterian Church to place a missionary in his native town, engaging to pay half the expense himself. The Marine School of Jobosouka has also asked for a missionary to be Professor of the English language and the Christian religion. On the other hand, the Buddhist party have formed at Kioto an association called the National Religious Society, to oppose the progress of Christianity. A Buddhist priest at Imabari reads a chapter of the Gospel of Matthew, which he explains according to Christian fashion, and he then refutes the doctrine. All this proves that Christianity is making progress in Japan.—Missions au XIXe. Siècle.

CHRISTIAN EXCAVATORS' MISSION.

SIR,—There may be some amongst your readers who may be willing, from love to Christ, to assist in the carrying on of a work which God has greatly blessed, and which has grown beyond us. I speak of the Christian Excavators' Union.

This association was formed by a few navvies and two clergymen in 1875. The men themselves drew up the promises, which are very broad, and yet very strict. They are these:—

> "I ——— desire, by God's help, to serve the Lord Jesus Christ, and to lead others to do so. To this end (1) I promise to abstain from drunkenness, swearing and ungodly living; (2) I promise never to neglect praying each morning and night; (3) I promise to keep the Lord's Day holy, and, when possible, attend a place of public worship.

To carry out these promises, any navvy knows, will at once subject him to constant persecution. There is nothing of temporal advantage to be gained by joining the C. E. U., and admittance into it is preceded by three months of trial and probation. After entering, the members are marked men amongst the other navvies, and known at once by their badge. Any inconsistency is brought up by their fellow members at the weekly prayer-meetings, and an unworthy member is, after two warnings, dismissed. Yet so strengthening has this bond of Union proved, so full of the life of Christ is it, that its numbers have risen from 35 in 1875 to over 300 in 1885, it is working, thank God, amidst, and upraising the most tempted and formerly most degraded class in our land.

The C. E. U. members are active in Christian work as tract distributors, Sunday-school teachers, temperance workers, &c., all amongst their fellow-workmen. They elect annually their secretary, whose duty it is from time to time to attend the prayer-meetings in their district, to correspond with the members, to watch over them; in fact, to let them feel they have a friend. All the so chosen secretaries (with one exception) have been ladies, generally the Bible-class teacher. For many years I was the only district secretary. Then Mrs. Sleight was appointed for Hull, and other ladies for other single places.

This plan answered for a time, but will no longer do so, for the members are scattered now in every part of England. So, as works end, secretaries find themselves with no members, and members, having removed to seek new employment, no secretaries. Then the Mission must drop to pieces. If the Christian Excavators' Union, which our God has so wonderfully blessed, is to be kept up, it follows, as an absolute necessity, that members should be visited and their meetings attended by the secretaries. There are only three districts in England so seen to the Hon. Miss Kinnaird's, Mrs. Sleight's, and my own. Miss Kinnaird's district comprises London; Mrs. Sleight's, Hull Line and Dock, and Tilbury Dock; mine, Yorkshire and Lancashire. All the other works in England and Wales are unprovided with secretaries.

At some places men have been waiting six and eight months for admittance until one of us had an opportunity of going down. The reason of this is, not that the country could not be divided into other districts, not that we have not ladies suited and used to the work, and known to the members, but only that though they would gladly give time, trouble and earnest work, they cannot afford to pay their travelling expenses (even third class), and we have no funds for the purpose. The member's subscription is 6d. per year. Then they help others who are ill, and to the utmost of, yea, and beyond their power, Christ's cause out of their small wages. We cannot ask more, rather would we gladly help them, for they often sorely need assistance

I want, therefore, to raise a fund (of which the strictest account shall be given) to carry on this volunteer work for our Lord—one which the workers love with all their hearts, and which He has deigned so to bless. I must earnestly beg those who can help us to save us the pain of seeing two-thirds of this work left undone. I do not ask for any pay for these secretaries, only that I may not hear again and again the sad remark, "God knows how gladly I would do it, but I cannot afford the expense."—I am, sir, faithfully yours,

ELIZABETH GARNETT,
Editor of the Navvy's Quarterly Letter, &c.

WOMEN CO-OPERATORS.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me once more to communicate, through your columns, with those who were good enough to assist me in beginning the "Working Women's Co-operative Association" little more than a year ago? We started with three, we have now thirty workers. We have been obliged to remove from Shadwell into a large house at 6, Crescent, Minories, close to the Mark-lane, Aldgate, and Fenchurch-street railways, where we have good air, being close to Tower-hill and the wide street of the Minories, lofty workrooms, and a quiet and commodious standing-place in front for carriages, besides being of easy access through the largest city thoroughfares, and conveniently near to our East-end workers. We have separate rooms which can be used as show-rooms for ladies' and gentlemen's garments, a tailoring department, where any tailoring work can be executed for which a pattern can be sent, and where we have for some little time been executing orders kindly given to us by the Army Clothing Department. We have executed orders for dress shirts, and also for ladies' skirts and mantles, besides underclothing of all descriptions, and, having the advantage now of a matron who has been trained in the best Paris and London houses, we are quite prepared to take orders for millinery.

We have been able to improve both the material and moral well-being of our work-people, and by the term "we" I wish it to be understood that I mean the work-people themselves as well as our supporters, for the co-operation of each individual work-woman is as much required in keeping up a good moral standard in the work-room as in maintaining a good standard of work in it. I could tell many interesting facts, illustrative of this assertion.

I have just registered the Association under the Co-operative Societies Act, and henceforth the management will be carried on under the direction of a committee. The rules were submitted to two of the best-known and most respected co-operators before registration, and as soon as they are printed a copy of them and a statement will be sent to each of our subscribers.

I beg all your readers to try to obtain orders for us, for, until we are able to increase the number of our hands (and we have space for double the number we now employ), our working expenses will be a very heavy weight on us.

At the present moment, when the minds of all earnest thinkers are turned to the great battle that is continually being fought around us between virtue and vice, the political necessity of endeavouring to raise the scale of wages is more than usually apparent. I wish it to be clearly understood that we do not aim at selling our work cheaper than the ordinary shop price; we do not compete with the lowest, nor regulate our prices by the highest market, but aim at giving such a wage for good work as shall enable our workers to live decently and happily, if they are painstaking and industrious, and at regulating the hours of work, so that each worker may have time to attend to her household duties without encroaching on that Sunday rest which is as necessary to material as to moral well-being.

Any communications will receive my prompt and grateful attention. We have detailed price-lists which I shall most gladly forward to any one kind enough to distribute them.

Yours faithfully,
6, Crescent, Minories. (Mrs.) SARAH HECKFORD.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For one much beloved and once an active worker for Christ, who has grievously fallen through drink, and is helpless in its grasp.——For the Lord's work carried on by Rev. W. Raeburn, in Wairoa, Napier, N.Z.

A MISSIONARY'S APPEAL.

HASTE, haste to assist us, ye servants of God,
For carnage and death are prevailing abroad;
The victims of dark superstition around [ground.
Fall thick, and their blood cries for help from the
As storms o'er the mariner blindly secure,
Or hair-balanced blade over banquets impure,
So broods the just vengeance of God o'er the land:
The heralds of peace, why so feeble a band?

The proud shrines of Kashee,* the Churrukh's † vile
The shameless Byragee,‡ the lewd Holee song,§ [throng,
The Brahmin's imposture, the shackles of Caste,
The pilgrims who crowd Juggernaut's sickly waste;
Should these be unheeded—sin's gloomy domain,
Where blasphemy, baseness, and cruelty reign?
Shall nations of men for whom Jesus hath bled,
Unwarned, uninvited, go down to the dead?

O! privileged brethren, awake to the sight!
Review the sad scene in Eternity's light;
The balm is with you, and its sweetness you taste;
Impart the glad news with benevolent haste.
Unmerited mercy exalteth your hope,
While burdened Hindoos in obscurity grope.
Oh send them the Gospel, their darkness relieve,
Your own kind Redeemer new praise shall receive.

Your prayers and support to his messengers give;
Sin's captives, exulting, in freedom shall live:
Or have you ability? plead for their sake;
In others the glowings of sympathy wake.
If fitted by Christ to enlist in his bands
Where rages the contest in heathenish lands;
Obey the sure signal, your services yield,
And, clothed in love's panoply, come to the field.

Should Satan persuade to ignoble repose,
Should flesh many fears and objections propose,
Set Jesus before you, contemplate his love,
Let his self-devotion your faintness reprove:
Unshaken your faith, and undaunted your breast,
Determine to toil till in heaven you rest;
You there shall unite with Hindoos to adore
The Light of the Gentiles, the Lamb, evermore.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

WHILE learning the daily progress of cholera in Spain, it is cheering to find that the Word of life is also spreading. M. Fliedner in his report on evangelisation in Spain, notes the avidity with which the people accept Bibles, Gospels, and tracts, when they are judiciously distributed. The great interest, or rather curiosity, which drew the people to Protestant meetings has ceased, but their thirst for reading remains. If you have a tract in your hand, in a public carriage, and lay down another by your side, your neighbour is sure to ask permission to look at it, and that often gives rise to conversation and further distribution.

M. Sabio gives some interesting details of work in Saragossa, where the Gospel was first announced in 1869. The little church of Iznatoraf is said to closely resemble the primitive churches of which we read in the Acts of the Apostles.

A new mission has been started in Granada by M. Fuente, who was horrified at the frightful demoralisation in one quarter of the town. Some fruit of his work has appeared.

In the province of Pontevedra, M. and Mme. Blamire describe the work as very encouraging. Nine persons were recently baptized, and twelve others were awaiting baptism, and more than 100 professed to be saved. Men and women are needed to carry the work yet further.—Le Christianisme.

BERLIN.—The Magdalen Society, seeing the desirability of separating the younger from the elder women, have provided a Home for girls, which was opened June 30. The Emperor gave the site, and the means for building, &c., was collected and given by ladies. At the opening, the Empress sent the following telegram: "I thank all who have any share in founding this benevolent Institution, for the joy which it causes me. May God bless the work!—AUGUSTA."

ISSIONARY TRIALS AND TRIUMPHS.

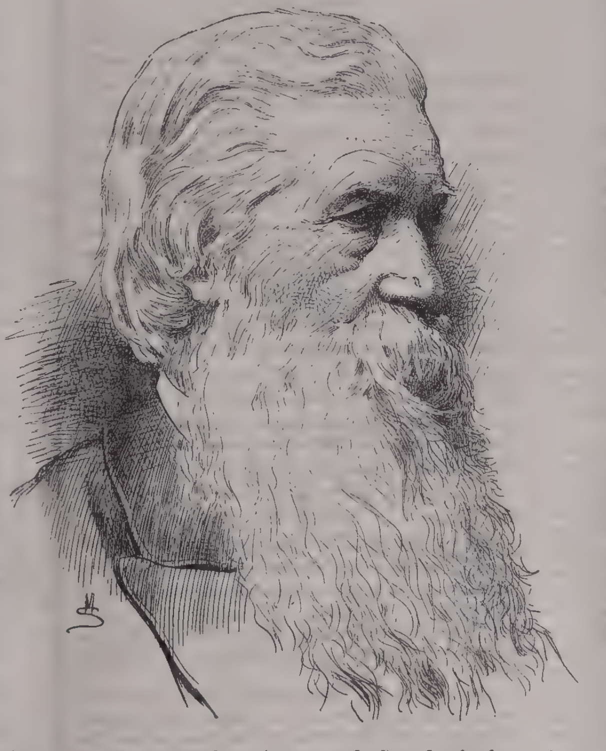
ev. J. G. PATON, of the New Hebrides Mission.

THE world may be growing old; certainly it — has not yet grown very good; but it still oduces a man, here and there, worthy of a race eated in the image of God. We have seldom en more deeply impressed with the grandeur human life, when devoted to the noblest pur- ses, than during a recent interview with the nerable Rev. J. G. Paton, missionary to the ew Hebrides, whose portrait it is our pleasure is week to present to our readers. Our veteran other has grown grey—snow white, indeed— the service of his Master, but he retains all the ow and enthusiasm of youth. For nearly a neration he has been facing the foe in the guise savagery and cannibalism, in the South Seas, d no one would think it much amiss if he now rposed to spend the rest of his days in his tive Scotland in comparative ease. Instead of at, he is counting the prospective weeks to the ne when, having accomplished his mission here, can return to his loved occupation as ambassador of the Cross in the far- vay and sunny South.

Mr. Paton comes of a humble but godly d pious stock. He speaks of the godly ample and prayers of his father and other with the most affectionate enthu- asm, and attributes to them the early owth of love to Christ in his young art. Early in life he learned a handi- aft, but having a holy ambition to gage in spiritual work, he began to epare himself by attending classes in e Dumfries Academy, working with s hands and sustaining himself mean- hile, as many another poor but per- vering Scottish youth has done. From umfries he went to Glasgow to engage teaching, where he at the same time rsued his studies in Classics, Divinity, d Medicine, preparatory to going abroad a missionary. In the course of a long rriculum of eleven years, he entered on ty Mission work in Glasgow, and suc- eded in building up a congregation; ortly after he left for the foreign field pastor was appointed, who still ministers a flourishing church.

The steps of the young missionary, who ent out under the auspices of the eformed Presbyterian Church, were rected towards the island of Tanna, in e New Hebrides group. This part of e story may best be told in his own ords:—"I heard the wail of the far-off eathen," he says, "and my heart was awn out to them. The Tannese anders were all cannibals then. They d no written language and no Bible. rom the first we encountered difficulties and ngers. We had only been two or three days the island, when six people were not only lled in a fight, but were cooked and eaten. e natives came to see me building my house. wo tribes not on friendly terms met, old preju- ces were revived, and they were at once in adly combat. We struggled on for three and half years amid many difficulties, attempts ing often made on our lives. Before the end that period my wife and child had died. I d acquired the language, had reduced it to riting, and was progressing pretty well, when position broke out. Two missionaries in con- ction with the same mission — Mr. and rs. Gordon—were murdered on Erromanga. gain and again the natives tried to murder e, and, at last, a young missionary, Mr. hnson, fell by my side, as the result of e of the attacks made on us. The station had be broken up. I took shelter for a week or so th a friendly chief, and, during that time, I vered, as it were, between life and death. I d part of one night in a fig-tree, and managed escape to sea. I got round to the other side the island, where there were another mis- onary and his wife. At the end of two months more we all got away in a vessel. This missionary's wife died when we got to Aneityum, and he himself died soon after in the island of Marè."

Such, in brief, was the first eventful chapter of Mr. Paton's missionary career. Nothing daunted, he proceeded to Australia in a trading vessel. He set to work among the Churches there, and raised money to get a missionary ship to bring over provisions from Sydney. He returned to the New Hebrides, and this time began work on the island of Aniwa. That first vessel was wrecked. He proceeded to Australia a second time, and was instrumental in procuring a second ship. As one of the main objects of Mr. Paton's present visit to this country is to raise the money for building a third mission vessel, it may be well to state here that, as there are no regular mails or traders, the missionaries are dependent on the mission ship for keeping open their communications with the outer world. Twice a year the ship goes to the Australian colony, 1400 miles distant, and returns with letters and a supply of fresh provisions. During the rest of the year she is occupied in visiting among the islands conveying teachers from place to place, opening new stations, preparing the islands for the Gospel, and generally helping on missionary work. An annual Synod of the workers engaged in the mission (which is attached to the Presbyterian Church of Victoria) is held in the northern and southern parts of the group alternately. The work of the mission for the year is there arranged. A missionary agent, appointed by the Synod, accompanies the vessel, and reports to the next Synod.



So the work goes on from year to year, and the results achieved within the last twenty years are of the grandest description. Sixteen islands are now occupied by missionaries, with an estimated total of 8000 real converts to Christian faith and practice. This has been done at a cost of six missionaries murdered (besides many native teachers), while others have died at their post. What greater proof of the Gospel triumphs could be found than in this fact, stated with very pardonable satisfaction by Mr. Paton, that, whereas every inhabitant of the island of Aniwa was a heathen when he landed there seventeen years ago, now the island does not contain a single heathen. In every household there is a family altar where the true God is sincerely worshipped. In the island of Aneityum 3000 savages have become consistant Christians through fifteen years' labours of two missionaries.

We have already alluded in these pages to the remarkable sacrifices made by the natives to secure the printing of the Bible in the language of the islands, which is to be had now, in whole or in part, in ten different languages. It is endeavoured to make the missions so far self-supporting. The converts, out of their own resources, erect all the church and school buildings, which are really excellent and substantial structures. As a striking instance of the reality of missionary work in these far-off islands of the sea, Mr. Paton tells of the Erromangans who, on one occasion, brought all their weapons of war to the missionary. They said they had no money to give; but, as they were now Christians, they would have no further use for these weapons, and they thought that perhaps they might be taken to Sydney and sold as curiosities, so that the proceeds might help to supply them with the Word of God.

Fourteen islands in the New Hebrides group are still without missionaries. On these, says Mr. Paton, there are 70,000 natives who are yet cannibals, and who will remain so till the Gospel is taken to them. They are prepared to receive these messengers of the Cross; indeed, some are crying for missionaries to settle among them. In order to meet this need, Mr. Paton, at the request of the Victoria Churches, came to Great Britain a year ago to secure more missionaries, if possible, and to raise £6000 for a new mission steamer, which is greatly needed for the development of the work. In response to the public appeals made by Mr. Paton, more than £5600 has been subscribed by British Christians. We should greatly covet for our readers the honour and privilege of placing the top-stone on this noble Gospel crusade by making up the last £400. If the Lord should incline their hearts to act on this suggestion, they can forward the sums they may give, either to Mr. Wm. Storie, Lindisfarne, Harold-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.; or to Rev. J. G. Paton, 2, Park Quadrant, Glasgow.

OBITUARY.

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE.

THE death of Sir Moses Montefiore, which occurred on July 28, has removed from our midst one of the most devoted philanthropists of recent years. The approach of death was very gradual, and he was conscious until near the end. His last illness continued a fortnight. As the end drew near he frequently prayed, and often ejaculated "Thank God," and "Thank Heaven." The aged baronet's benefactions were almost universal. No Jewish charity or philanthropic movement appealed to him in vain, and, in return, Jews throughout the world hold his name in reverence as a symbol of honourable well-doing. It is said that his latest act was to sign the cheque to pay for the cabinet which he presented to Princess Beatrice, accompanied by an eloquent and congratulatory letter.

AMERICA.—At Fairfield, in one of the Western States, the Baptists have recently ordained Miss Frances E. Rownsley to the ministry.

MADAGASCAR. — The London Missionary Society's Report of this Mission gives intelligence furnished by the society's agents labouring at the various stations comprised in the Imerina District. Notwithstanding the war, several new chapels have been built; even the soldiers at the seat of war have held regular religious services; prayer meetings have been continued in the capital, and the spiritual life of the converts has strengthened and deepened. The patriotic fund, raised by the churches for the soldiers on duty, reached 25,000 dollars. The Malagasy-English dictionary is on its way toward completion. The Orphan Society carried on by the Christian natives still prosecutes its excellent work. The knowledge of Scripture is spreading fast among the native children, many of whom have learned to love the Saviour. Brief accounts are also added of the Iboina, Antsihanaca, and other Missions on the Island, some of which have been much disturbed and hindered through the conflict.

HOLIDAY HOUSE.

THE matron sent me quite a long letter the other day, and asked me to read it to a number of children who come here every week. They were so quiet and attentive while it was being read, that I think you too would like to hear part of the letter. Writing about the surroundings of the house the matron says:—

"We often go into the woods to gather flowers, and there we find such wonderful things, or, rather, what are mistaken for such. One little girl came up to me the other day with a handful of roots, saying, 'I did not know onions growed in the woods.' What do you think she had? Nothing but bluebell roots! Another found a 'dear little pig' and carried it home for me to see. It was only a mole! 'There is a monkey up there,' cried a little boy in great excitement; we looked, but it was a frisky squirrel!

"Girls, too, make mistakes; this morning a little maiden ran in to tell me that two such large dogs were in the meadow minding the horses. Guess what they were? Two young foals! Then the big water-wheel which goes round and round frightened one little fellow very much; he began to cry, and said he thought it was alive.

"Willie —— had a strange liking for frogs. One morning at breakfast I noticed that he and his friend were very uneasy about something. I asked the reason, and found that Willie had a frog in his pocket. Of course I had to send Mr. Frog off, as I did not allow such company at the table. Poor Willie was greatly troubled, but he wrapped the frog up in his pocket-handkerchief and put it on the hedge. When breakfast was over he went off to see if any harm had come to this frog. It was quite safe. Later on in the day I heard a boy crying. It was Willie! Some wicked boys had killed his frog, and he had so wanted to bring it home to his baby-sister. The other day when we were going across the meadow to gather flowers, one boy ran off to get a foxglove. He went straight into a miry ditch and screamed, and threw his arms up because he thought the ground was going to swallow him."

We went down one day to see the children, and had such a pretty walk in the wood, which has now a deep undergrowth of tangled fern and bracken. We started many a bird, and listened to hear their wings flutter and then see them fly away. At last we came to the house, and, going in, we found about twenty children sitting round the kitchen table enjoying their dinner. They soon took us out down the lane and into the orchard, where the boys play cricket and the girls swing ceaselessly under a chestnut tree. Just before tea-time we all sat down under the trees to sing hymns and tell stories. The children like to choose their own hymns. We had just sung "There is a city bright," and were talking about heaven, when a little girl said, "It's kind of God to have given us one week in the country." "Yes! but think how our Lord is preparing a home for us for ever." Then we all wondered if we should be there, and we remembered that Jesus is the Way, and that He invites us to come. "Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest."

You will think that the Holiday House weekly visitors have a happy time, and you think truly; they have. But this is only the story of one week in their lives. The other fifty-one weeks in the year are spent so differently. They form a shady background, indeed, to this one sunny spot. The homes and surroundings of the children are very sad. From early childhood work begins. Running errands for mother often means going to the public-house, and the little child, barely able to step inside the door, is brought at once in contact with sights and sounds which would make many of us shudder. Think of these little children! What are we doing for them?

"Christ looks down from heaven
To see us shine,
You in your small corner,
And I in mine."

SUFFER THE LITTLE ONES TO COME UNTO ME.

Children come to Jesu's feet,
Offer Him your praises sweet;
Kind He was to babes of old,
And his love has not grown cold,
Yesterday, to-day, for ever,
Jesus Christ is still the same.
He's a friend that faileth never.
Do you love his blessed name?
Give Him but your hearts to-day,
He will wash your sins away;
Though the road be rough and steep,
He will never let you roam.
Jesus will his children keep,
Till they reach their heavenly home;
There around his throne they'll stand,
Gazing on his blessed face;
And, a holy, happy band,
Praise Him for his love and grace.

"PRAYER AND THANKSGIVING."

Col. iv. 2.

A short time back I had a dear little girl, just turned five, stay with me for several weeks. Nature has been bountiful to this little one, her lovely features attract the attentions of many, while her gentle, winsome, and loving manner, also her childish playfulness, wins affection from all with whom she is. This little one is the child of godly parents, and the subject of earnest prayers. Lillie has been taught by her mother to kneel down every morning before leaving her room, and every evening on going to bed, and, after saying her little hymn, to ask God, in her own simple way, for whatever she may want. I have known her sometimes ask God to let her remember where she put a lost book, doll, or other toy.

While she was with me I had a dear friend very ill, and the child often heard me speak of her. There was also a Mrs. F—— (the mother of a little girl whom I had in to play with her sometimes) ill. Without being told, little Lillie, after her morning and evening prayer, would say, "Please, Jesus, make dear Mrs. M—— and Mrs. F—— better very soon—quite well, if it is your will." Sometimes she would look into my face and say, "Do you think Jesus will soon answer my prayer, and make them well like I am?"

One Saturday, Lillie and I were out for a walk and met Mrs. F——, who had not been able to be out for some weeks, and whom the child had been praying for. Lillie made no remark to me at the time, but at night, when kneeling on my lap, she said, "Please, Jesus, make Mrs. M—— well very soon, and thank you very, very much, dear Jesus, for hearing my prayer, and making Mrs. F—— well." This little one not only sent up her petition day after day, but looked for the answer, and was quick to see it when it came.

Was it not, dear reader, a splendid instance of a child's faith, and may not we, who are older, learn a lesson from this little one, and not be so easily discouraged if we see not the answer at once?

What a privilege the Christian has in being able, through Christ, to approach God! What a preparation for the trials, the little crosses and the difficulties of our daily life, is prayer! Let us with childlike faith (for it is a Father to whom we come) take everything to Him, not only the dark side, but let our hearts be full of praise as we approach his throne, and on bended knees let us think of his love, and the countless mercies he has bestowed upon his children. This will make our hearts overflow with love to Him, and enable us to rise above the disappointments and trials of this life, and triumph in the midst of temptation.

THE BEAUTIFUL CITY.

Beautiful City of God!
Beautiful City of light!
Where nought that defileth may enter,
Where none see the shadow of night.

Beautiful City of God!
Beautiful City of gold!
Whose treasures are far beyond telling,
Whose glories have yet to unfold.

Beautiful City of God!
Beautiful City of rest!
Where the wanderer runs to a shelter,
As the lamb to its Shepherd's breast.

Beautiful City of God!
Beautiful City of praise!
Where songs of the ransomed shall echo,
Through Eternity's endless days.

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.

THESE Homes, eight in number, are becomin a means of incalculable good. In their recen Report the Committee announce the carrying c of the work with increased success, and that " larger number than ever of homeless workin lads have been helped to live an industrious an we hope, in many instances, a godly life." Th has been signally the case at Pelham Hous which is always full. A little incident is men tioned that occurred at Hanbury House, showing the good qualities found in many these lads. One of them, seeing that anoth who had just arrived was very poorly clad, once gave him a jacket and waistcoat which had in his box. A valuable testimonial is fu nished by the Vicar of Holy Trinity Churc Woolwich, who says, "Of all the Institutions this town, of a philanthropic kind, there is no which, in my opinion, is doing so good a work the Home for Working Boys at Cromwe House." The total income for the ye amounted to £3629. THE NEGROES IN THE SOUTH.

MY last referred to the remarkable work which the Lord permitted me to have amongst the coloured brethren in Augusta, Georgia. This southerly State was regarded as one of the head-quarters of the slave system, where what I would call the corrupt heritages of slavery are seen in their worst form.

Imagine, less than thirty years since, the following to occur in this beautiful city. In the principal street, and in one of the largest mansions lived Colonel C——. He was a prominent citizen and slave-owner. In this beautiful and elegantly furnished house lived his wife with her seven children. In the back part of the same house, and on the same plot of ground, resided his coloured mistress (a slave) with her seven or eight children. The Colonel dies, his slave mistress and her children (his children, be it observed) were all sold as goods, and formed part of the estate of the wife and her children. And yet such was the moral corruption both of the city and of society that this man held up his head and was recognised as one of Augusta's leading men. This case is only a sample of the then existing condition. At the same time the law of the State of Georgia was such that it was a punishable offence to teach the coloured people to read or write. Further, the same State laws forbad marriage, and refused any family relationship to the slaves. This was done the better to secure the human property to the slave-proprietors. It is appalling to hear how both men and women were kept simply for breeding purposes even as cattle are in England.

You cannot get rid of the iniquitous fruits of such appalling wickedness in one generation. To this day numbers of refined and educated ladies in Augusta sneer at the idea of a coloured girl's marriage. When you remember how the splendid estates, Church edifices, large and elegantly furnished houses, are mainly the product of this inhuman system in the past, it is simply impossible to find any pleasure in them. You are constantly saddened as you come in contact with large numbers of old grey-headed men and women, who, in their poverty and depression, bear all the marks of this degrading system. Oh, the joy to hear them tell of "Massa Jesus," and "the dear Lord," whose grace and glory has, indeed, provided "some better thing for them."

We can hardly realise in England that all the great denominational bodies separated from the Northern Churches on this question. To hear of it is one thing; to see it and know its results is quite another. Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian, all the Southern Churches, took sides with and for the defence and perpetuation of slavery.

Such, as your readers are aware, was the case. How strange, that men who professed to represent Christ and to teach the golden rule, "As ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them," could thus become the principal defenders of this dreadful system. To me it was terrible to come in contact with men who were and still are pastors, officers of Churches, and Church members, whose past history had been part and parcel of slave proprietorships, and to find them still actually destitute of any conscience on the subject. I do not believe I met three men in the South who showed either sorrow or repentance for their past connection with slavery. Indeed, nothing but the terrific arbitrament of four years' bloody war sufficed to deal with this huge social cancer in the nation's life.

Time has wrought wonders and still works on the behalf of the seven or eight millions of the freed coloured race. Their future is one of America's difficult problems.

In some parts of the South they are lapsing into Fetishism, and their moral and social condition is deplorable. Nevertheless the great bulk of them are progressing rapidly, and the fear of God is amongst them of a truth. Of course, with such an experience, you cannot be surprised that the coloured people have low and imperfect conceptions of the rights of property, of morality, industry and cleanliness, but in every neighbourhood and coloured church which I visited, I was greatly pleased with the improvement which has taken place since they were made free.

My special reason for calling attention in your columns to this interesting people is to ask whether there are not some English brethren who would go and spend a winter in the South, labouring specially in the coloured churches in the various cities. I could give letters of introduction to some of the coloured ministers, and I know of no richer field for labour in preaching Christ and teaching the Word of God. I am sure that going forth from England to tell the old, old story, they would be welcomed with open arms. It is desirable that the brethren so going should have an intelligent acquaintance with the Word of God, men of education, some means, and filled with the Spirit of Christ. Oh! who will come? The fields are white to harvest. I believe no richer or more fruitful soil exists. I have preached to the densest crowds in their churches, and I have not been more troubled either on the score of propriety, order, or conduct, than in hundreds of crowded meetings in England. I had been told of hysterical fanaticism, of unbearable odours, and the wildest conduct. I bear witness that it is not so, and I would delight to spend the coming winter amongst those against whom both our English and American fathers have sinned so deeply. I am not sure what my Lord's will concerning me is, but I am prepared to say, "Here am I, send me."

In my next I will tell your readers of further work for Christ in this vast sphere.

Letters to the Editor.

MARK XVI. 9—20.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to reply to Mr. Gamble's courteous answer to my letter? It will be the last on my part, as on his.

Mr. Gamble sets out four "grave objections" to the statement that the scribe of Codex Vat. wrote the quire of Cod. Sin., containing the end of St. Mark's Gospel.

They are: "(1) Tischendorf, the editor of both, regarded the Sinaitic as more ancient than the other." (Answer.)—But it was Tischendorf himself, who, in 1867, asserted the identity of handwriting—an assertion at first received incredulously by all, but now largely (by no means universally) admitted, even by critics of such opposite schools as Scrivener and Dr. Hort.

"(2) The MSS. differ in size, number of lines, and columns to a page." (A.)—I confess I do not perceive the relevancy of this objection, unless we start with the major premiss: Two documents differing in size of material, &c., cannot be written by the same hand! My last letter was written on 8vo. paper; I write this on 4to.: do you, Mr. Editor, on that account question whether they are in the same handwriting?

"(3) The readings of the two MSS. differ, moreover, in the subscriptions." (A.)—A fact of no importance at all, when it is remembered that the subscription of the Vatican MS. is admittedly by a later hand. (See fac-sim. Plate viii., Scrivener's Introd. Crit. Gk. T.)

"(4) The blank spaces in both MSS. follow the subscriptions, showing that the writers knew of no omission." (A.)—There is no blank in Cod. Sin.; and the fact of the subscription of Cod. Vat. being before its blank is met by the answer to (3)—viz: that it is the work of a later hand.

But I am not at all concerned to prove the identity of handwriting. I merely attempted to show that, if the claim of such identity set up by objectors to Mark xvi. 9—20 be allowed, these documents have not the weight of two independent witnesses. But if it could be demonstrated that they are as independent as Cod. Bezæ and Cod. Alexandrinus, little inconvenience to my contention would result; the silence of any two MSS. ought not to be allowed to weigh against the positive testimony of Copies, Versions, and Fathers—testimony which may well be called catholic. All that Mr. Gamble writes does not touch the fact stated by me, that about thirty Versions and Fathers, prior to or contemporaneous with these two documents, vouch for the disputed section—Irenæus (second century) expressly, alone far outweighing Eusebius's objection nearly 200 years later.

I readily grant that I did not use the word "canon" in its strictest sense. I am aware that the passage is said to be "canonical" even by objectors. Its authenticity is doubted by some, denied by others. Thus, Archdeacon Farrar: "Mark xvi. 9—20 is canonical, but almost certainly unauthentic." While Dr. Hort writes: "It manifestly cannot claim any Apostolic authority." I leave your readers to estimate what additional worth they would attach to any book—"unauthentic," and devoid of "Apostolic authority"—by the mere circumstance of its being "in the canon." The same thing applies to a section of a book. Mr. Gamble is my witness that Mark xvi. 9—20 no longer avails like the rest of "the Scriptures" for doctrine, nor, I suppose, "for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." If plain people learn that this or any passage is "unauthentic," they will little trouble their heads about it being "canonical." But, practically, unauthentic canonical Scripture is a contradiction.

In conclusion, I need hardly remind Mr. Gamble that the Revisers' Note against Mark xvi. 9—20 (however notorious "the doubt" may have been) is, in the judgment of some of the ripest scholars and divines, one of the serious blemishes of that Version. William Jeater.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

Sir,—The condition of Spain pains me greatly. The hundreds dying daily by this dreadful plague of cholera, and in so many places no one who can lift up the "brazen serpent," or give succour to the stricken and helpless widows, orphans and others. I would remind your readers that it was during a similar visitation, when hundreds were dying daily around our dwelling, we were enabled to minister to their wants, and, as a consequence, when the pestilence had done its work, hundreds of children remained with us, and were gathered into the schools which have become such blessings, and from whence a large company have been gathered to sing "Hosannah" to the Prince of Peace. Now is the time to do like work. If the Lord will, and his people should be able to send such substantial help as to justify my going into the stricken district, "here am I, send me," or I will gladly forward any pecuniary greatly needed help to brethren on the spot. SOCIAL ETHICS.

Dear Sir,—As you inserted "M.D.'s" article on this important matter, I beg to ask that you will allow the space for the better understanding of "How to support the principles advanced by 'M.D.' for the attainment of moral purity." In this case, charity begins at home; the work of regeneration is personal. "M.D." says, "thousands of people eat and drink too much; Christian people eat too much, and break down in their work. No experienced engine-driver over-charges his engine with steam;" but will "M.D." state how much fuel for five shillings a week will support a man like myself, working hard twelve hours a day, out-door labour, this hot weather, and what should be the character of the food? It is no use giving advice unless it is intelligible. "M.D." says, "the soil will produce four-fold more than it does under the present mode of starvation cropping; but until there is a system of inspection by Government of land cultivation, there will be no improvement in home produce, the land is neglected, and the people mourn." Will "M.D." show what he means by living according to God's laws?

A Hard-working Man.

THE STREETS OF LONDON.

Sir,—Permit me through your columns to call the attention of Christians, who have hours of leisure in the evenings, to a very simple way of serving the Lord, which may be conveniently engaged in at this time of the year. It is to go out with a few good tracts or handbills relating to some evangelistic meeting, and use them as a means of opening up religious conversation with any persons met with who may be inclined to stay and speak. If this is done, surprise will probably be felt, at the number to be found in our streets on these warm summer evenings, who are not only willing to talk on religious subjects, but will spend ten or fifteen minutes, or even a longer time, in this way. Many may thus be reached who are untouched by any existing agencies for the spread of the truth, and impressions made which may result in conversion.

If Socrates, "the wisest of the Greeks," exercised a transcendent influence by simply engaging in personal conversation with any comer in the streets of Athens, surely much may be accomplished by earnest Christians going forth in the same way, armed with the sword of the Spirit.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

IT is gratifying to know that, so far as this great gathering has been brought together, God has been very signally blessing those who have manifestly assembled in the hope of obtaining spiritual refreshment and strength. The weather has been perfect, and there has been much promise of good, but it was not until Wednesday that it became evident that there was to be a rich bestowal of Divine grace. Large numbers have flocked into the tent, not from curiosity, but with an evident consciousness that there was "something more to follow." It was an unusual and a gratifying sight, that of a multitude of persons plying their pencils assiduously, as some teacher blessed of God led them to fresh riches of His word.

The Bible-readings of the Rev. Herbert Brooke disclosed treasures of Scriptural truth which delighted and surprised many. He pointed out how there ran through the whole Gospel of St. John this leading idea, "that the Son of Man should be glorified," and we advert to this, because it supplies, as it were, the keynote to the past proceedings of this Convention. For the most part this thought has been kept well in view, and, as a consequence, God's presence and power have been wonderfully experienced.

Dr. Elder Cumming's address at the early prayer meeting, on Isaac as an example of a fully consecrated life; Mr. Brooke's reading on taking up the Cross; and Mr. Figgis's words on 2 Kings x. 15, may be especially mentioned as used of God's Spirit for the leading of many to fuller consecration, or deeper joy of heart. In regard to numbers, and still more deep earnestness of feeling, this Convention may be regarded as "a great success," not in an earthly sense only, but when tested by the truer evidences of God's favour, souls drawn to God, and his own children led to a fuller revelation of God's "riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Another correspondent says—The Keswick Convention is now being held for the eleventh year. It opened with a most moving solemnity. Only two years ago the originator of the Convention, the Rev. Canon Battersby, vicar of St. John's, Keswick, was called to his rest on the opening day of the Convention, and his funeral was held on the closing day, and the thousands who had come at his invitation gathered round his open grave. This year the gate of heaven has again been opened, this time for his widow, and on Tuesday the same blessed words of triumphant hope sounded over her grave. She had been one with him in welcome and work for the gatherings; now they are one together in presence again with their Lord. It is a remarkable thing that they, who originated and fostered this blessed annual gathering, should both have its hundreds round their grave, accompanying them almost into the presence of Him for whose glory they had convened these meetings. Prayer at half-past two. The Convention visitors gathered in the tent, and then filled the churchyard, while the congregation assembled in the church. Few have ever been laid to rest with feelings of such widespread love following them. The memory of his and her thirty years' life-labour at Keswick is very vivid, and the church was quite full of sorrowing mourners. But, as the procession entered, there seemed to break through all the outward signs of loss, the thought of her bright, brave spirit, which always looked at the sunny side—the Father's side of every trial, and a ring of triumph bounded out in the words of the opening hymn:—

> "Jesus lives! No longer now > Can thy terrors, Death, appal us."

"Jesus lives, and she lives with Him!" was what broke through the mourning. There were many hundreds to meet the procession, as it passed into the churchyard, and there "Peace, perfect Peace" was sung over her grave. The unclouded sky, the glowing sunshine, and the beautiful hills, all told of the fulness of the life on which she had entered, and swallowed up the present sorrow in the certainty of the nearing glory. A text in large ivy-leaf letters on white hung against the church wall at the head of the grave, "With Christ, which is far better." At the close, "Till He come" was sung. Her six children were there; three devoted to the ministry, and a fourth dedicated for missionary work. May sons', father's and mother's life-long devotion be repeated in them!

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—5.

MANY a time, when a boy, have I wandered through Wadleigh woods, the most beautiful of which, alas, have now vanished before the feller's axe. And many a time, when a boy, have I gone with relatives to Wadleigh Church, to hear the singing that made it famous among the village churches round. I seem to see it now, as then, with the people who filled it forty years ago; while I could imagine that the rugged old sexton, from whose lips I learnt its early history, is himself telling the tales again that he told me "in the days of auld lang syne."

His mother had remembered the advent of the Methodists to Wadleigh. Headed by a pious tailor named Thompson, they had sallied forth from a neighbouring market town to attempt the enlightenment of the Wadleigh villagers. But it was a rough reception they received. Their leader's wig was torn from his head and sent flying through the air, he himself was ducked in "The Hall Well," and when, at last, his followers found it necessary to retreat, a powerful man stood at the "towns-end" gate, and struck, with a piece of leather, each fugitive that passed through. Methodism, nevertheless, had rooted itself in Wadleigh, and flourishes to this day.

Just now the new church was opened, and, with whatever ceremonies and rites it was consecrated to the worship and service of God, some of the parties who had opposed the Methodists proceeded with great zeal to devote it to the devil. They ascended and danced the morris upon its flat, leaden roof, and soon afterwards another party took a quantity of beer into the "sacred" edifice, where they drank and rang the bell all night, defying the churchwarden to dislodge them, as the keys were with them inside the church.

For several years after this, it had but one service daily, its old rector often commanding the clerk, after this was over, to stop up the foxholes and do other like work, against the day when the hounds might be round. Two of its curates, when I was a boy, were thorough-going, fox-hunting parsons, and, by way of comparison with many who followed them, these were most eminent Christian men. Worthy exceptions to the general rule there have been; but, when I look back on the line of clergy who have ministered in Wadleigh Church, wonder is to me that any who in other days allowed themselves to become habit-bound to it should have been kept from infidelity. I have heard the funeral service read at the grave-side, by a man whose drink-bound tongue would scarcely allow him to utter the words he wished to use. Another, who since has "posed" as a somewhat popular preacher, brought worse scandal on the name of religion than he. I might go on to tell of others whose names are left in the books of tradesmen where they remain to the present day.

But to finish this dark and painful picture, I will just give a scene I witnessed myself in Wadleigh Church, some few years ago. The clergyman conducting the service was seen to be in drink. Mechanically, he managed to get through the first part of his "duty;" but in attempting the Psalms he most ignominiously failed; and the churchwarden, in the presence of a large congregation, compelled him to come from the reading-desk, and make way for another clergyman who happened to be in church at the time.

Some may ask the use of unveiling such matters, and deem it wisest to leave the past buried in its own grave; but what Wadleigh was many villages possibly may be still. It is not well to take too much for granted. And then, too, while everything Romish is cherished, there ever and anon arises from some quarters such a howl of hostility towards Dissent, as if it were calculated to blight the very life of the people. What would Wadleigh have been without Methodism? And what would many a parish in our land be without Nonconformists at the present day? Ecclesiasticism has been skilful of late years to hide many of its crying sins in villages and hamlets; and sepulchres remaining full of all uncleanness have been beautifully whited over. But no very earnest search is needed to discover many places where the powers of darkness have established and entrenched themselves; and whoever or whatever he may be who shall carry the light of truth to such places shall have the "God speed" of

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

UFFCULME, DEVON.—Mr. Charles Lazenby, of the Evangelisation Society, preached in the Gospel tent here on Sunday, 26th inst., to crowded audiences. Prayer is desired for blessing on the tent work thus happily inaugurated.—W. BROWN.

WELLINGTON, SALOP.—Dr. Cranage writes: "We have had the unspeakable pleasure of hearing that honoured servant of God, Rev. J. G. Paton, tell of the marvels of the grace of God amongst the heathen of the New Hebrides." [We are presenting to our readers this week a sketch of his life and work, which we are sure will be read with great interest.—ED.]

FRAMSDEN, SUFFOLK.—An eight days' mission was held here from July 19 to 26. The tent which has for ten years done good service in Suffolk was kindly lent by Mr. J. F. Vincent, of Wrentham, and his committee, to Rev. Alfred J. Begbie, vicar of Framsden. In holds 300 people. Mr. W. Smith, from the Evangelisation Society, gave the addresses, and three or four of the neighbouring clergy took part in the meetings. The tent was pitched in the vicarage field, and well filled on each occasion. Two special addresses to young were given every afternoon (excepting Saturday). Mr. Smith also gave at the vicarage valuable Bible-readings. Some anxious souls have found peace with God, and believers have been greatly refreshed. On the last Sunday a goodly company gathered in Christian fellowship round the Lord's table. Mr. W. Smith went on Monday, the 27th, to commence a week's services in the neighbouring parish of Ashbocking by request of the vicar, Rev. M. B. Cowell.

KENSINGTON.—Mr. Russell Hurditch has erected one of the tents of the Evangelistic Mission in the Blythe-road, near Addison-road Station, where Mr. C. King and his wife have met with very gratifying results. The unconventional character of the addresses is one reason for their attractiveness. Mr. King seems to buttonhole his audience, catching attention by an earnest word interjected between the verses of a hymn or reading, and then as soon as the hearer's attention is riveted the message is delivered with a faithfulness that provokes alternate smiles and tears. A thorough grip of Scripture, and readiness in illustrating it, are the principal characteristics of our friend's style. Miss Trowbridge, upon whose ground the tent stands, and other Christian workers who gather round her, are much cheered by this success. Every night souls have professed to find Christ, in some instances husband and wife together. A series of afternoon Bible-readings has been carried on during the fortnight at Rev. A. Griffith's schoolroom at Shepherd's Bush, and educated and refined persons who have attended them are equally delighted with Mr. King's ministrations.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND PURITY SOCIETY announces a public meeting for men only at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Thursday evening next, August 6, to promote the protection of women. Mr. George W. E. Russell, M.P., will preside. The Bishop of Bedford expresses the feeling which has led to this meeting in a letter to the Secretary, in which he says:—"The Church cannot stand by silent in the face of the terrible disclosures of hidden wickedness so recently made. Whether the disclosures were wisely or unwisely made is not now the question. We want to raise the tone of society. We want to inspire a chivalrous resolve to protect the weak from wrong. We want to make profligacy a social disqualification. The Church has not been idle in this matter; but she must redouble her exertions, and persevere in her crusade against vice, until such an exposure as we have just had shall be both unnecessary and impossible."

Notes on Daily Readings.

AUGUST 6.—2 THESSALONIANS III.

v. 1.—"May have free course" ("may run," R.V.).—There may be an allusion to Psalm xix., where, under the figure of the sun, which "rejoiceth as a strong man to run his course" (R.V.), is described the progress of "the law of the Lord" in its converting and enlightening power.

v. 2.—"Unreasonable."—The first meaning given by Liddell and Scott for the Greek word is "out of place," which is its original meaning, as the word itself shows. No meaning could be more appropriate here, as those to whom he alludes are evidently the "false brethren unawares brought in" of the Church of Corinth, from which place he is writing.

"For all men have not faith."—This would be a pointless truism if spoken of the world, but as referring to the Church—which it evidently does—it confirms what has gone before, that these opposers of the Gospel were men "out of place." The "Speaker's Commentary" paraphrases it thus: "For not of all whom you see entered into the pale of the Church is that faith which makes men truly Christians."

v. 5.—"The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patience of Christ" (R.V.)—One misses here "the patient waiting for Christ," with which the A.V. has made us familiar; but it must be owned that they had no authority for rendering the common word for "patience" or "patient endurance," as they have done. The prayer seems to be that the Lord (the Spirit)—mark the allusion to the Trinity—may direct their hearts into the contemplation of God's love to them (the Father's), and of Christ's patient endurance for them.

v. 6.—"Withdraw yourselves."—Sp. Com. says of the Greek word here used, "It is peculiarly used of those on a voyage by sea, 'to give a wide berth to.'"

v. 11.—"Working not at all, but are busybodies."—There is a play in the Greek upon two nearly similar words, which it is hard to reproduce. Liddell and Scott quote Demosthenes as using together these same two words, which they render "being busy, and over busy."

AUGUST 7.—I TIMOTHY I.

v. 2.—"My own son in the faith."—The word "my own" is literally "genuine." R.V. renders it "true."

v. 4.—"Godly edifying which is in faith."—The word for "edifying" differs but in one letter from the word for "dispensation," and this latter is now adopted by the Textual critics, as best attested. It is rendered in R.V., "a dispensation of God which is in faith;" better still by Bishop Ellicot, "God's dispensation."

v. 5.—The end of the commandment."—The word here is not the ordinary one for "commandment," but is a noun corresponding to the verb "charge," in verse 3. It is therefore rightly rendered "charge" in R.V. If "end" were translated "aim" it would make it clearer: "The aim of the charge (which he was to deliver) is love," &c. Showing that it was not merely a negative effect he looked for from Timothy's teaching—the suppression of false teaching—but the inculcation of true doctrine, or rather true Christian life, love springing out of a pure heart, and a good conscience, and faith unfeigned.

v. 6.—"From which some having swerved."—"The margin is better, 'not aiming at' or 'having missed their aim at which.'"—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 8.—"The law is good, if a man use it lawfully."—The lawful use of the law is against sinners as such, but if a sinner has taken refuge in Christ he is the "righteous man" of verse 9, and, as such, comes under the "healthful teaching" of the Gospel, which agrees with the law in its denunciations of wickedness: so much so, that whatever is contrary to one is contrary to the other; but for this very reason the imposition of the law on the conscience of a believer becomes both unnecessary in itself, and also subversive of "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God."

v. 15.—"Sinners; of whom I am chief."—"The tense is instructive: of whom I am chief, not I was. A pardoned sinner is a sinner still."—Sp. Com.

AUGUST 8.—I TIMOTHY II.

v. 2.—"For all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life."—If these words are taken together (as the Greek would allow) they give an additional motive for praying for those in an exalted position—namely, that they are put there, "that we may live a quiet and peaceable life." This is better than the common way of regarding these words as indicating the subject of our prayer for them, which, after all, resolves itself into a selfish prayer for ourselves! The Genevan Version (1557) evidently took this view, for they render it, "for all that are therefore in authority, that we may lead, &c." The subject of prayer for them is, from what follows, clearly their salvation.

v. 4.—"Who will have all men to be saved"—Commentators draw a distinction between God willing "to save" all men, which is not asserted here, and willing all men "to be saved"—the conditions of salvation being observed. This is of importance, as showing that "Universalism" receives no countenance from this passage; but what follows, "For there is one God," &c., is so very parallel to Rom. iii. 30, that it is probable that here, as there, it is the extension of salvation to the Gentiles which is chiefly in the Apostle's mind. The salvability of the Gentiles was a truth against which even Jewish believers were much prejudiced, and when "kings and those in authority" were often their persecutors, it made it the more difficult to regard them as within the pale of salvation.

v. 15.—"She shall be saved through the child-bearing" (R.V.).—Bishop Ellicott explains thus this altered rendering, which emphasises the article before the word "child-bearing": "'By the child-bearing,' i.e., by the relation in which woman stood to the Messiah, in consequence of the primal prophecy that 'her seed (not man's) should bruise the serpent's head.'" Bishop Jackson, too (Speaker's Commentary), explains the expression, "the child-bearing," similarly, "as the instrument of the incarnation of Him who 'when the fulness of time was come' was 'born of a woman.'"

AUGUST 9.—I TIMOTHY III.

v. 1.—"This is a faithful saying."—"Chrysostom refers this to what has preceded" (Sp. Com.). It is much better to take it so, and render it "faithful is the word," the reference being to the Gospel, whose first announcement had just been alluded to.

"The office of a bishop" (margin R.V., "overseer").—It would have saved misunderstanding if this marginal reading, which is the most literal one, had been put in the text. "Overseer" here, as in Acts xx. 28, refers to the office of "presbyter," not to that which we now call "bishop."

v. 15.—"The pillar and ground of the truth."—These words may refer to Timothy himself rather than to "the Church." As there is no definite article before the word "pillar," it is rendered by many, "how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God—which is the church of the living God—(as) a pillar and ground of the truth." See Gal. ii. 9, where Apostles are called "pillars," and Rev. iii. 12, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar," &c. Propriety of imagery, too, confirms this reading, as the church could hardly be called both "house" and "pillar" in the same sentence; whereas, if the church be God's house, a faithful minister may well be called a pillar. This is on the whole the most satisfactory interpretation, and appears as early as the second century, in a letter written by the Churches of Lyons and Vienne (preserved in Eusebius), for, alluding to an eminent Christian at Pergamus, they apply to him these two words, "pillar and ground," evidently quoting from this text.

v. 16.—"God was manifest in the flesh" ("He who was manifest in the flesh," R.V.).—The difference between the two Greek letters which represent the contraction for "God," and the word "who," is very slight. On the presence or absence of two thin strokes depends which is to be read. Careful examination of the MSS., and the testimony of the most ancient Versions and Fathers has led all modern textual critics of note to adopt "who" instead of "God." The text is not appealed to in the Arian controversy of the fourth century.

AUGUST 10.—I TIMOTHY IV.

v. 2.—"Speaking lies in hypocrisy" ("through the hypocrisy of men that speak lies," R.V.).—A manifestly improved rendering. It describes the instrumentality by which some would be led to depart from the faith; or, as Bishop Ellicott puts it, "prepositional clause, defining the manner (pretended sanctity and orthodoxy) in which the 'giving heed,' &c., was brought about." "Having their conscience seared with a hot iron." "Branded in their own conscience, as with a hot iron" (R.V.). "Our English Version has taken the idea of the loss of sensibility produced by the burning." Sp. Com., which seems to prefer the reference to slavery of conscience: "Men branded on their own conscience, as slaves were with their master's brand." This interpretation is the more pertinent, when we remember that the conscience is that part of a man's being where he should be especially free, no authority but that of God being recognised. Luther's protest at the Diet of Worms on behalf of freedom of conscience is an interesting illustration of this foretold character of the Apostasy.

v. 3.—"Forbidding to marry."—It is strange that the R.V. has not given the more extended meaning of the verb here rendered "forbid." Liddell and Scott give as its meaning. "to let, hinder, check, stop, prevent, forbid." Of these "hinder" is generally accepted as the normal meaning of the word, and thus we have foretold not only the direct prohibitions of marriage enjoined by the Romish Apostasy—the celibacy of the clergy and of those devoted to what is called a religious life—but also the hindrances to marriage arising from Rome's studied depreciation of it as compared with the supposed sanctity of virginity. Commentators mostly refer to the Gnostic heresies of the second century as illustrating what is here alluded to, but Isaac Taylor's words are worth quoting: "Gnosticism, repelled by the ancient Church, and at length . . . extirpated as a visible heresy, did not expire until after it had deposited myriads of its eggs within the vitals of the Church. Gnosticism surviving in principle, and Polytheism in ritual, make up together the bastard religion of the Middle Ages, otherwise called Popery."—Ancient Christianity, i. 147.

AUGUST 11.—I TIMOTHY V.

v. 8.—"He hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (or "unbeliever," R.V.)—"He has denied the faith practically, and is in this respect worse than an unbeliever, who does for the most part perform these natural duties of domestic life."—Sp. Com.

v. 9.—"Let not a widow be taken into the number" ("Let none be enrolled as a widow," R.V.)—This shows that there was an enrolment or college of widows as such, to which what follows up to ver. 16 applies.

v. 14.—"I will therefore that the younger women marry."—For "women" R.V. reads "widows," which seems right, as the context is about such. Speaker's Commentary, too, reads "widows."

v. 17.—"Let the elders that rule well," &c.—"It may be inferred from this passage (says Bishop Jackson), first, that there were, at this early time, some presbyters who ruled but did not teach; and, secondly, that both these, and in a higher degree those who also taught, received maintenance from the congregation, even from the first foundation of at least the Pauline Churches."

v. 18.—"The ox that treadeth out the corn." "More literally 'an ox while threshing.'" Speaker's Commentary, which adds: "St. Paul in an earlier Epistle (1 Cor. ix. 10) had argued from this text the right of a minister to be maintained by those to whom he ministers: he here refers to it as inferring the right."

vv. 24, 25.—"Some men's sins are open," &c.—The point of these two verses seems to be, "do not suppose that those men whose sins are open and notorious are the only sinners, or that the prominent workers of good deeds which attract attention are the only good men."

AUGUST 12.—I TIMOTHY VI.

v. 2.—"Because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. Sp. Com. well explains how this should be taken. "But let them serve them the more, because they who are receivers of the benefit (i.e., of their service) are believers and beloved;" very nearly so is the R.V.

v. 5.—"Supposing that gain is godliness."—Rather, "that godliness is a source of gain." The grammar of the Greek is clear as to this being the right rendering.

v. 10.—"The root of all evil."—There is no article in the Greek before "root," and there is before "evil," so it should be, as in R.V.: "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil."

v. 12.—"Professed a good profession."—Rather, as R.V., "didst confess the good confession." "The tense of the verbs points to some special occasion which, though well known, of course, to Timothy, it is impossible to determine with certainty now. It might be his ordination, or some time of trial and danger, but more probably his baptism, when, as we know . . . a public profession of faith was made."—Sp. Com.

v. 13.—"Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed the good confession" (R.V.).—Bengel says, "'To witness the confession' was the part of the Lord; 'to confess the confession' belonged to Timothy." Bishop Ellicott says, "Our Lord attested, by his sufferings and death, the truth of the 'confession.' Timothy only confesses that which his Master had thus authenticated."

v. 19.—"That they may lay hold on eternal life," or, rather, as a better attested reading now has it, "on that which is life indeed."

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

ST. CLOUD.—Rev. W. Gibson opened a new mission-hall near this place on July 5.

GERMANY.—The evangelistic work started by Professor Christlieb in Bonn is already being carried into practice. A piece of ground has been obtained, and an evangelistic school established. The well-known Pastor Schrenk, of Bonn, has placed himself at the disposal of the Society.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

BRUNSWICK.—In this town the Irvingites have recently been making great efforts to extend their society, but they have been somewhat hindered by the late quarrel, which has resulted in a division into the so-called English and German Apostolic Churches, which number in Brunswick about 200 English Irvingites and forty German.—Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger.

AUSTRIA.—The new law of Sunday rest, which was put into vigorous operation in June, has considerably changed the aspect of the streets in Vienna. Until now, troops of workmen might have been seen on Sunday morning going to their workshops or yards. The churches are much fuller than usual, and in the afternoon the public parks are visited by workmen with their wives and children.—Le Christianisme.

FRANCE.—A prize of 250 francs is offered for the best answer to the following question:—"Is not the domestic happiness of the working classes intimately connected with the Observation and Sanctification of the Sabbath?" Only persons belonging to the working classes are admitted to the contest. L'Evangéliste give an interesting report of Mdlle. de Broen's dispensary in Paris. Many poor afflicted persons come very long distances to receive advice. If asked why they do not prefer hospitals more accessible to them, they reply, "Because your doctor really works miracles of cure, and then you treat us like men and brothers, whereas down there we are only numbers."

Notices of Books, &c.

More Half-hours with my Girls. By Amy Baker. 2s. 6d. Hatchards. A series of sensible, practical readings to a village class, dealing with all sorts of useful subjects. An easy conversational style is adopted, which materially adds to the effect of the book.

Friendly Greetings. Vol. x. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. We cannot too highly recommend these lively entertaining "Readings for the People." Life, nature, art, all contribute something to this store of good cheer and useful lessons. The illustrations are also very attractive.

Homely Talks, 3s. 6d., Hatchards, with preface by Canon Westcott. This volume presents to young men lessons drawn from the lives of the young men of the Bible. New light is thrown here and there upon incidents and truths familiar to us all, and we trust that many readers will be stimulated to active service by its perusal.

Faithful Teaching. 3s. 6d. Hatchards. This work comprises sermons of the late Rev. C. Bradley, of Southgate, and a short memoir by the Dean of Westminster. Those who knew him will greatly value this memento of his labours, and many others will be fed in spiritual things by a careful study of these faithful discourses.

Short Comments on the Gospels. By Bishop Oxenden. 3s. 6d. Hatchards. These little discourses are intended more especially for use at family worship, the present volume dealing with Matthew and Mark. Their brevity only admits of a cursory consideration of each passage, but they are concise and suggestive, forming a nucleus around which other thoughts will freely cluster.

Anno Domini: A Glimpse at the World into which Messias was Born. By J. Craig Houston, B.D. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The state of the Roman and Jewish world at the birth of Jesus Christ is concisely yet graphically described. To those who have little time or opportunity for the study of larger works this little book will be a real help.

Stones that Speak, or, Musings on Mount Moriah. By Rev. J. Ormiston. 6d. W. Mack. Though the Temple of Solomon has been the theme of many large and learned books, this little book is by no means superfluous. It contains not only fresh thoughts, but new and interesting facts. An excellent engraving of the "Golden Gate" serves as frontispiece.

The Devotional Service and Chant Book. Whittingham & Co. Six services for the use of Christian congregations. Many of the prayers and collects are from the Church of England Prayer-book, and room is left for a first and second lesson. Thirty-three chants, chiefly from the Psalms, are given, and provision is made for the introduction of extempore prayers.

Forthcoming Meetings.

Mission and other Appeals.

Rescue Society.—Sir,—Allow me to invite your earnest attention to the fact that at the present time we have 174 in our homes needing daily food, and very little money has recently come to hand. Do help us if you can, and try to induce others to do so. With grateful thanks for all your past assistance, believe me, yours faithfully, C. Stuart Thorpe, Secretary, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Rest and Country Air.—The Convalescent Branch of the Y.W.C.A. offers sincere thanks for all kind responses to Lord Kinnaird's appeal in The Christian of June 18. Any other intending contributors are urgently requested to send their donations as soon as possible to Y.W.C.A. Secretary, 4, Inverness-terrace, W., to enable us to send to the cottages now offered the many needy cases still on our lists.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Friday Morning, July 31, 1885.

 In consequence of Bank Holiday, our Donation List was made up on Friday morning. All sums received after that date will be acknowledged in our next issue.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? And amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

INVESTIGATION CRUSADE.

PROTECTION OF PURE YOUNG GIRLS.

IN RECENT DISCLOSURES it is affirmed that in a West-end work-room, where there are frequent new hands imported FROM THE COUNTRY as apprentices, there are two base women whose real object it is to profit pecuniarily by the moral ruin of these poor girls; and cases of success, from their point of view, are given. Now this traffic must, in the very nature of things, excite the INDIGNATION of all right thinking people; and further, such a state of things demands the most searching investigation, so that these monsters in human form may be exposed, and the SYSTEM STAMPED OUT. ALL WEST-END employers are under the imputation. All SUPERINTENDENTS of WORK-ROOMS are under the same CLOUD; and, so far as the statement is true, the daughters of hundreds of respectable people in the Country are in danger.

Already my powers are more than overtaxed, but THESE VILE CONSPIRATORS must be UNEARTHED, and the facts laid before the public.

I do not ask for money for THIS CRUSADE. It is not a pecuniary question; but I ask for moral support.

Let those who sympathise, or who can give any information for or against the accusation, or who think they can help in any way, write to me. Mark envelope outside, "INVESTIGATION CRUSADE."

SOLDIERS' HOME.

In Memory of

Major-Gen. Sir HERBERT STEWART, K.C.B.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is my earnest wish and desire to raise some memorial in the town in which I live in memory of my late brother, Sir Herbert Stewart, and I appeal to your liberality and generous aid. It is proposed to open for soldiers coffee, reading, recreation, and dining-rooms, library, and Bible-class rooms, besides nightly Gospel and Temperance addresses, &c.

All who are interested in the Soldiers' welfare would (if they knew this town) agree with me that this "Home" is urgently needed, and the opportunity of possessing a building, at this particular moment, coupled with my earnest wish to do something in memory of my brother, clearly shows me that it is the Lord's work (before whom I have laid the whole scheme), and I confidently appeal to your Christian sympathy, being assured that, with the blessing of Him "whose are the silver and gold," I shall not make the appeal in vain.

Full particulars and circulars will be forwarded to anyone who will write for them. Collecting cards will be gratefully supplied, and Christian workers are earnestly asked to help in raising the necessary funds.—Believe me, very truly yours, Augusta Everett.

Contributions will be most thankfully received by myself, the Rectory, Dorchester, or at Messrs. Williams' Bank, Dorchester, or the Office of The Christian.

To the Editor of The Christian.

Dear Sir,—I consider it a happy privilege to recommend the proposed scheme for a Soldiers' Home in Dorchester, in memory of the late distinguished soldier, Sir Herbert Stewart, K.C.B. I feel sure that you share the universal sorrow in the loss of this gallant and brave soldier, the youngest General in the British Army, and therefore I, in behalf of his sister, appeal through your paper to the liberality of all sympathisers in this excellent scheme.

The "Home" will greatly benefit our 600 soldiers, as a resort for quiet enjoyment, recreation, and Christian instruction. At present, out of barracks, the public-houses (of which we have a very liberal supply) are the chief places where our soldiers spend their evenings, and consequently, get into endless mischief, as I and other officers can fully testify.

H. Marshall, late 9th Lancers,
Commanding 39th Regimental District,
Dorchester.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

CHURCH of ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

Instituted in 1844, and now supplying nearly 130 earnest and faithful workers to visit among the poor and outcast of London.

The Readers go from house to house and from room to room, with the Bible in their hands, and seek by loving personal contact and teaching to rescue, comfort, and encourage those amongst whom they labour.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to maintain this religious and social work.

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Bible Interpreter;

A CONDENSED BIBLE DICTIONARY.

By the Author of "THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER."

This book is specially intended for the use of those who, whilst desiring information on Biblical subjects, cannot afford the purchase of large and expensive Bible dictionaries. The present small volume contains explanations of MORE THAN EIGHTEEN HUNDRED Scripture words and subjects, and it is believed that many a painstaking Sabbath School teacher and many a humble Bible student will find "help by the way" from consulting this little manual.

In addition to the ordinary features of a BIBLE DICTIONARY, there will be found in an Appendix details of FULFILLED PROPHECIES, concerning the following peoples, places, and events:—

The Jewish Nation.
The Destruction of Jerusalem.
The Destruction of Samaria.
The Ammonites.
The Arabs.
Babylon.
Edom.
Egypt.
Moab.
Nineveh
Philistia.
Tyre.
The Seven Churches of Asia
Popery.

The volume also contains a Table, or List, of 361 HISTORICAL EVENTS AND BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES, by which the Bible reader is enabled to turn at once to the portion of Scripture where any particular event is referred to, or any Biblical character is named or described.

The book also contains:—

A List of the Prayers Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Miracles Recorded in the Old and New Testaments;
A List of the Parables in the Bible;
A Table of the Reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel: in parallel columns;
A Table of Scripture Proper Names, with their correct Pronunciation;
A Table of the Order and Dates of the Books of the Bible.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations, and numerous smaller Engravings.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

Works by Rev. E. P. HAMMOND, M.A.

(COPYRIGHT.)

"We notice that Morgan & Scott, London, are publishing Rev. E. Payson Hammond's Books for Children. They are of proved excellence; and most of them have gone through several editions in this country. At last advices Mr. Hammond was continuing his Meetings with good results."—New York Evangelist.

Jesus, the Lamb of God:

Showing how He Died on Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

Gathered Lambs:

Telling how Jesus Gathers the Lambs to his Fold. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most effective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

The Conversion of Children.

Anecdotes and Appeals: with very numerous Instances of the Early Regeneration of the Young. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has been to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, translated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been taught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to praise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the adults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered in these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

"Twelve nicely got up pamphlets (price 6d.), suitable to give to Sunday-school scholars. Pastors also could give them to advantage. The tracts are very interesting, and cannot fail to do good."—Oldham Chronicle.

The Better Life: AND HOW TO FIND IT.

A Book intended for Young People between the ages of Twelve and Twenty years; with the hope of leading them to THE BETTER LIFE. With Thirteen Illustrations.

"This is a very neat volume, in which the truths of the Gospel are set forth in a simple and attractive form; brief narratives of illustrative cases being introduced which make the work very interesting. The author is the well-known Evangelist."
North British Daily Mail.

The Reaper and The Harvest.

Scenes and Incidents, in connection with the Work of the Holy Spirit, in the Life and Labours of Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. Edited by Rev. P. C. Headley. 550 Pages. With Life-like Portrait of Mr. Hammond. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Ministers, Evangelists, and Christian Workers, who are looking for illustrations and facts will discover here a treasury of information. They will at the same time feel their own hearts stimulated to labour more earnestly for the salvation of souls.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"This work consists of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, which are for the most part original. . . . This is really a new Hymn and Tune Book, and one which is sure to become very popular. It is a Gem. The hymns are suitable for Special Meetings, Family Worship, and Children's Services."—Oldham Chronicle.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath-schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."

New National Scheme for the Deliverance of Unprotected Girls and the Rescue of the Fallen.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

DEAR FRIEND,

We are receiving many letters in which the writers ask the question, "What can we do?" with regard to this subject. I am quite aware that various commendable Societies are already at work, but the present circumstances demand that some more extended and effective efforts should be made. The recent agitation has awakened public attention to the enormous number of fallen women already on the streets, there being 50,000 in London alone, 5,000 of these being girls under 16 years of age. The whole situation demands that something shall be done. We propose the following:

I.—THE IMMEDIATE FORMATION OF A CENTRAL OFFICE OF HELP AND INQUIRY.

1.—What will be the objects of such an Institution?

1. It will be a place of refuge to which girls already fallen can fly for deliverance.

2. It will afford a ready means of escape to pure girls who are thrown into circumstances of danger.

3. Where girls, who have been ruined and forsaken, and are consequently in trouble, but are opposed o leading an immoral life, can find counsel and be assisted.

4. Where the fallen can obtain counsel and help in their troubles, even before they have decided to abandon their evil life. Such an office, it is believed, will form a link between these girls and their friends and relatives. By it, also, the confidence of the "unfortunate" community will be gained, and the way prepared for their restoration.

5. To such an institution parents, guardians and friends can apply for information respecting their hildren, and others who they may have reason to believe have gone astray or are in danger of doing so.

2.—Where will such an Office of Inquiry be situated?

1. The Chief Central Office must, of course, be in London.

2. Auxiliary Offices of Inquiry would be opened as soon as possible in Paris, New York, Chicago, Toronto, Melbourne, Sydney, and ultimately in all the principal cities of the world where The Army is at work.

3. At least one Officer of The Salvation Army, or an Auxiliary acting as one, can at once be appointed n most of the towns and villages where the English language is spoken, who can be relied upon to co-operate with the Central Office of Inquiry.

3.—How would such Chief Central Office of Inquiry be conducted?

1. Its doors must be open day and night to any lost or friendless girl desiring admittance.

2. It must have some rooms connected with it for the temporary accommodation of those needing helter, prior to being drafted to the Homes of Refuge, sent to their own friends or elsewhere.

3. It must have connected with it:—

(a) Officers who understand the work to be done, and who are fully in sympathy with the class whom they seek to benefit.

(b) Officers speaking and writing different languages.

(c) Officers who know the haunts and ways of the traffic in London.
(d) Officers skilled in making inquiries.
(e) Lists of homes and lodging-houses would be kept, where girls coming to London for situations could find sa lodgings.

4. The existence of this Office of Inquiry could be made known to the class it seeks to benefit by circular distributed at all their haunts. This circular must contain the address of the place, a description the purpose for which it exists, and an assurance of welcome to all.

4.—How this Office of Help and Inquiry would Work.

1. In a short time confidence will be created in the Office, and the girls will come to look upon it a being established in their interest, and fall back upon it for help.

2. Unfortunate girls are not without sympathies, and, being generally opposed to child harlotry, the will in many instances co-operate in plans for rescuing the younger girls. In many cases they will also hel to save those who, during the first few weeks, may want to be rescued. With regard to these and others, th Office of Help will afford them the opportunity of giving information.

3. When the confidence of the girls is gained, it is expected they will call for various purposes, thu giving opportunity for conversation and prayer, all tending to produce the conviction in the hearts of thi unfortunate class that their best interests are being sought.

4. The thousands of mothers and fathers up and down the land who are in ignorance about the daughters, or who only know too well that they are gone astray, have, if poor, now no means of inquirin respecting them—much less of using methods for their restoration. The knowledge of local authoritie ordinarily does not extend much beyond the parish; such an inquiry would be outside the duty of th Police; the father or mother cannot afford either the time or money to go to the town from whence they las heard of their daughter; but this Office of Inquiry will afford at once to the broken-hearted parents simple method of obtaining such information as it is possible to acquire. For instance, suppose the following case:—

A daughter comes to London—it would apply to almost any other town—but we will say London. For a time the gi writes regularly home. It is hoped that she is doing well. She then ceases to write, or sends very unsatisfactory letters. Tl mother writes inquiringly, but to no purpose. She fears the worst, but can do nothing, as things are at present, but weep ar pray. London is a big place, a long way off, and what could she do if she got there? But on this plan she would simply hav to apply to the nearest Salvation Army Corps. The Officer would secure a portrait, and send it, with full particulars, to th Central Office, where skilled Officers would make the inquiry, and most probably obtain reliable information respecting the gir If it was found that she had gone wrong, they would put forth every possible effort to save her, communicating the result to th mother, whatever it might be. But, if the girl was found all right, then the glad tidings would be sent to the mother.

II.—THE ESTABLISHMENT, ON A LARGE SCALE, OF HOMES OF REFUGE FOR THI FALLEN.

1.—The Character and Situation of the Homes.

1.—It is intended to establish Homes in different parts of London and the provinces to contain at leas 1,000 girls. Among these will be an industrial settlement at Mitcham. A generous friend has presente us with five acres of freehold land admirably situated for this purpose. By this method, that absolute contro which is essential to success can more easily be maintained than in one Institution containing a very larg number.

2.—As the work grows, small receiving houses can be established in the large towns and populou neighbourhoods.

3.—Arrangements must at once be made for the formation of a Home in Canada, where restored girl can be received and distributed. A Home for the same purpose can, doubtless, be opened in one of th Western States.

4.—A Hospital must be started at once. Skilled nurses are waiting to undertake it. Thi will not only be an inexpressible boon to the poor girls, but one means for training nurses for other fields c labour.

2.—The General Principles on which these Homes will be conducted.

1.—First and foremost SALVATION. No reliance will be placed on any changes short of the salvatio of the soul, and the actual realisation by the girls of the destruction of the power of their old habits by th Spirit of God, through the blood of Jesus Christ.

2.—The Opening of the door to a full restoration and a life of usefulness. Every girl will be shown ho she can start afresh with the prospect, not only of having all the dark past forgiven, but also forgotten, an her feet put on a ladder leading to greater happiness and goodness than—in many cases—she had eve hoped to reach.

3.—The Spirit of love, every girl being made to feel that she is received as one of the family, and tha instead of being looked down upon as an inferior creature, she is regarded as a sister; though having erre till a sister, whose sins everybody is glad to forgive and to forget. Many of these girls have never known any ove ; many of them are stray children, or the children of drunkards, used only as conveniences and drudges. 'o such the feeling that anybody loves them, that they have got into a home of love, will melt them down, nd, though their stay in it may be short—though they may run from it—its memory will haunt them and ome over them again and again in their future hours down to their dying day, with Christ-like and Ieavenly influence.

4. The fourth principle on which these homes will be conducted will be that of entire freedom. There ill be nothing like imprisonment. Those in them will understand that they can go, if they wish it, whenver they will. In the present Home, during twelve months, there have been only seven runaways, of whom our have returned.

5. Another principle will be obedience. There will be, as there are throughout The Salvation Army,)rders and Regulations, and they will have to be obeyed.

6. Every girl will be taught some method of earning a livelihood, if she does not know one already. irl will be allowed to stay in the Home who is not willing to work. There will be no slave-driving, but o the willingness to do something will be regarded as a proof of that desire for amendment without which estoration is impossible.

Our present experience goes to show that the following methods of industry are remunerative under uch circumstances :—

1) Laundry work. (2) Boot sewing. (3) Bag and box and brush making. (4) Straw plait work.

7. The great principle of The Amy will be carried out here in inspiring and qualifying the girls to save thers. This may only be possible to a portion ; but experience goes to show that that portion will be a very nportant one. From the hundreds of this class who have been reached by The Salvation Army, there have ome some of the most successful workers it has been our privilege to know. What an army of deliverers—nyway, of their own class—may not this scheme bring forth !

III.—HOW WILL INMATES BE OBTAINED FOR THE REFUGES ?

1. The girls must be visited in the streets and in the houses where they live. We have hundreds f godly women, who, with pitying tenderness, will gladly perform this duty.

2. The younger girls are not difficult to dissuade from their dreadful business, and as the age of rotection is raised they will become still more accessible.

3. Midnight and other meetings can be held.

4. Every "Unfortunate" girl that comes to the penitent-form, all over the kingdom, can be dealt with.

5. The character of these Homes will soon be known among the women, and numbers of them, in imes of depression, conviction, and sickness, will apply for deliverance.

IV.—HOW SHALL WE FIND PEOPLE TO WORK THESE AGENCIES ?

1. We will establish Rescue Brigades, in connection with all our large Corps, devoted to this special ork.

2. Appoint at least one person in every Corps, with whom the Chief Central Office can confer, or hrough whom inquiry can be made, or who can help any friendless girl near.

3. Appoint Rescue Auxiliaries, who, though not soldiers, shall be willing to undertake certain duties, nd assist generally in working out the deliverance of the girls.

4. To have a list of those who are willing to take girls into their homes as servants, or for some ther form of employment, for a short season, in order to be able to give a character.

5. To receive the names of Army friends in Canada, the United States, and elsewhere, who will take irls as servants, pay their passage out, and take the responsibility of watching over them.

V.—THE KIND OF PEOPLE WANTED FOR THIS CLASS OF WORK.

1. Only such as are fully given up to follow Jesus Christ in saving the lost, and who delight in escuing harlots and thieves, and those who have none to help them.

2. Only those who really love this class and feel towards them as to their own sisters.

3. Only those who can exercise patience with those who stumble in the effort to rise, and who can o out after them again and again into the wilderness, however frequently they stray away.

4. Only those who are willing to spend any amount of time, and to be at any amount of trouble, learn how to succeed in this difficult task.

5. Only those who have the Holy Ghost, and can therefore exert a holy influence upon those whom the seek to save.

VI.—WHAT WILL BE THE RESULTS OF THIS SCHEME?

Judging from the experiences of The Army in Australia, they will be very satisfactory. In Melbourn the results have been so remarkable as to induce the Prime Minister to ask the Victorian Government make a liberal grant towards the purchase of a new Home in order to extend the Rescue labours.

In London operations have only been as yet on a very limited scale. Out of one hundred girls wh have passed through the Home during the last twelve months, seventy are known to be doing well. Mr Bramwell Booth calculates on results fully equal to this, if the work can be pushed forward on this enlarge plan.

It is proposed to secure Homes capable of containing 1000 Girls.

Supposing these girls are kept three months on an average, that would be at the rate of 4,000 pe annum. Supposing that the same ratio of good cases is maintained, that will show the gratifying result 2,800 rescued girls per annum. But even if we put the number down at 2,500, or even less than that, wha a glorious harvest will be gained.

In addition to these results, it must be borne in mind that other benefits, equally valuable and gratif ing in the way of prevention, must follow if this scheme is efficiently carried out.

VII.—THE COST OF THE UNDERTAKING.

To fit up and furnish the Office of Inquiry, and to establish, fit up, and furnish these Homes for 1,00 girls in London and the provinces, it is calculated that at least £20,000 will be required.

To support the undertaking when launched a considerable annual amount will be necessary. T maintain 1,000 inmates (making 4,000 cases in the year) with travelling and all the expenses of th Homes, will cost at least £20,000 per annum. Towards this it is calculated that the industrial employmen of the girls, together with what they will collect, will produce about £10,000. That would leave £10,000 t be provided by contributions, and if another £1,000 be added for the Office of Inquiry, the amount increased to £11,000. Suppose the number named before are rescued annually, that will make each on cost about £4.

It is for those who have the power to furnish this amount to say how far this scheme shall be carrie out. It would be unjust to ask the already overburdened Salvation Army to add this load to its liabilities Indeed, it would be impossible for it to do so. We can only work out this plan as far as means are supplied We pledge ourselves no further.

Just now there is an opportunity for rescuing the girls—especially those of tender years—which wi not occur again. The new legislation has rendered it difficult, if not impossible, to follow their wretche calling. Many are therefore left absolutely without the means of livelihood. It is estimated that i London alone there are nearly 5,000 fallen girls under 16 years of age. It is for these especially we wish t provide.

In all but the finances God has given us the ability and opportunity to make these proposals a success and, though I am resolved to await the response to this appeal before undertaking the serious liabilitie involved, the generous promises mentioned below fill me with gratitude, and confidence that the man others whose hearts have been wrung with anguish over the late revelations will contribute according to the several ability. Remittances can be sent to me at 101, Queen Victoria Street; or, to Messrs. Morgan Scott, of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

GOOD WORKS, LAW, AND FAITH.

GOOD works are cut down in Galatians ii. —not one word written in their favour —why is this? The works there mentioned are the children of and God will not acknowledge one of them. Nay! God even says in that chapter that if righteousness come by the Law, then Christ is dead in vain. Loyal obedience is an impossibility to the soul desiring heaven, yet that soul must expect to show fruits and works, but the fruits must be fruits of FAITH.

Faith is the parent of all fruits and works that are acceptable to God. Luther, at one time, could not endure the Epistle of James —he found works required there, and works exalted: it appeared to him that you could never reconcile Gal. ii., despising works, and James ii., exalting works.

I remember about twenty years ago a very earnest Quaker or "Friend" drawing my attention to "James" as a proof that works "justified a man." I asked him to tell me from that chapter the parent of the works, was her name "Law" or "Faith." He read for a little, and said, "Works of Faith." "Faith must then have been the mother," I said. "Yes, I must confess it," he replied. "Then faith must have existed in the soul before works came." "Yes," he said, "it must be, and I never saw that before."

That earnest "Friend" had been a most industrious good-worker, a benevolent, charitable Christian, labouring to do good to others, and to establish his own right to a place in heaven; but not one of his works could God credit him with—not one. They were works of law. Verily, like the Pharisees, he would get a reward from men, their thanks, praises, and honours, but he soon became, and is now, I think, one of God's pillars in the north of England—a wealthy merchant, still kind and liberal, but he can now preach that all our righteousnesses are filthy rags.

LAW WORKS UP TO GOD.

It begins at the margin of hell and the curse, as it were, and works right up, assuming that it meritoriously makes its way from sin up to righteousness and holiness.

FAITH WORKS DOWN.

Faith in Christ makes me a member of Christ's body, bone of his bone, the first day I trust Him, and cast my own old self down as vile and bad. Faith makes me to be a heavenly member. My place by faith is with Christ. I do not work to get up to Him; I am a member of Christ already, and I can only work down, not up.

I stoop from my heavenly rank now in order to work among sinners, as a branch of the heavenly Vine, with my root in heaven. I hold out tendrils of truth, and proclaim God's love to those that are as yet earthly, working like the mole their way up, and throwing up little mounds of their own works, like the mole, fancying as they do so that on these little mole-hills of works they shall stand up and reach to the sun.

Faith gives Christ's rank at once—places the poor sinner on Christ's pedestal; he is now a brother or sister of the Lord. We are Christ's hands and fingers, as it were, and at work now. We stoop down and drag the thoughtless ones up. We say "Come," not "Go," because we are already alongside of the Lord Himself. If we were not so we would say; "Go to heaven," go to Christ; but as saved ones we speak from above, from the inside, not from the outside. God said to Noah:[*] "Come thou (Gen. vii. 1) . . . into the ark." The Lord went in first, and asked his faithful child to follow Him.

WE ARE FELLOW-LABOURERS

with the Lord. Let us not forget our rank or high calling; it stimulates us, warms our love, enables us to bear a cross for the "joy set before us," and enables us to crush under our feet the vile and low temptations to which Satan strives to drag us down.

"DELIGHT THYSELF IN THE LORD."

Ps. xxxvii. 9.

A TRIED servant of the Lord, one of his "choice spirits," wrote the other day, "Men are building huge scaffoldings about the Bible, and in so doing they think they are propping up the truth, as if the truth needs a prop! These scaffoldings are hiding much of the beauty and blessedness of the Word from those who depend upon others for what they get in the way of spiritual food, so that they lean on the props, and not on the building itself." True; but just as men are busy rewriting the Bible and making one of their own, many Christians are "cumbered" about points of doctrine, faith-healing, the higher Christian life, perfection, rest, prophecy, annihilation or restitution, and many other things. They go running after myths, and while they are orthodox in spirit, they become heterodox in mind, and so, for no reason but that they would "move with the time," they miss the joy of confidence in God. "But one thing is needful," and Mary, with complete trust in her Lord, was able, in the midst of the day's occupations, to seat herself calmly at his feet, and enjoy the repose of his love in that "good part" for which He commended her.

"I love the Lord dearly, but I know I do not delight myself in Him—I get no time to do it," said one mother to another. "No time! Do it every moment—just let everything go but that. Don't you see that while you worry over the little frocks, the common ailments, the meaning of a text, you are destroying your power for satisfaction or service? You are forgetting that God alone is your helper, and while you are fretting over the work you are not trusting the Great Worker to teach you how to do the work He puts into your hand," said the other.

"But how is it done? I cannot be careless."

"Neither careless nor careful. Let your soul so delight itself in the Lord that, filled with joy, it looks—cannot help looking—to Him for the perfection in service which He alone can give. Your little girl cannot write, but she knows you can. She wants to write a letter, and you put the pen in her fingers and guide the chubby hand as she, with delightful trust, looks up into your face and, although she cannot read a word of the letter she has written, says, 'I am holding the pen. Mother guides my hand.' She has no care, she is free to delight herself in the swift movements of the pen, because she trusts you. So let everything in your hand or heart be held of God, and you will have leisure to delight yourself in Him."

You who are not getting half the joy out of your living, loving Lord that He has promised you, "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Do not be waiting, hoping, thinking that you are to have these delights only in the heavenly life, but get them now. Let everything—your purse, your work, your hopes, your prayers, your desires, your health, your mind, your very life—be subject to Him in careless trust, the utter abandonment of self, the forgetting to remember, which comes from trust in God. And you shall have cause to "delight thyself in the Lord," for He will load you with such blessings as only empty hands, heart, hopes can take. Oh, then, delight thyself in Him, and He will give thee the desire of thine heart, that resting at his feet, which cannot be disturbed by the storm of life, nor by the noise of the scaffold-builders round the Shrine of Peace.

ERIN'S ONLY HOPE.

THE Committee of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland present their sixty-fourth Report to their friends and supporters with deep gratitude, rejoicing that its efforts have been "largely blessed among all denominations." A map, denoting the itinerating districts of the agents, shows, however, that the funds are altogether inadequate to send forth readers into every part of the country, who earnestly appeal for a larger income to enable them to cover the entire ground. The circulation of the Scriptures and various Christian literature, has opened doors in many new districts, which are preparing the way for the entrance of the agents. Special praise is accorded to the lady collectors "for their zeal in collecting money; many new friends have been raised up to help them greatly, while old supporters do as much as ever, or even more." Attention is called to the enormous strides made of late years by the Roman Catholics, during which period nearly £6,000,000 have been raised and expended in building churches, convents, asylums, colleges, &c.

The following case narrated by one of the readers will show that practical and soul-saving work is being done. "Some few days ago I visited a woman who was in great trouble about her soul. I read a few portions of Scripture to her, made some plain remarks to her, and explained how God saves the poor sinner. On leaving I was rejoiced to hear her say 'I can now lay all my sins on Jesus; yes, I can lay them at the foot of the cross and be at rest.'"

Another says: "Early this morning I was sent for to go and visit a young woman who was supposed to be dying. At first she was very dark in her mind, but gradually the light began to dawn upon her mind and heart. After many visits, joined with much reading, conversation, and prayer, she gave herself up entirely to the Lord, and was ultimately able to rejoice in the assurance of his favour."

No statistics are given in this Report, but the good being done by these zealous workers is abundantly testified to by the superintendents, the clergy, and independent witnesses. The total income for the past year amounted to £3300. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Captain James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin. Donors are requested to forward their contributions as early as convenient, and to circulate the report where it may be of service to the Society.

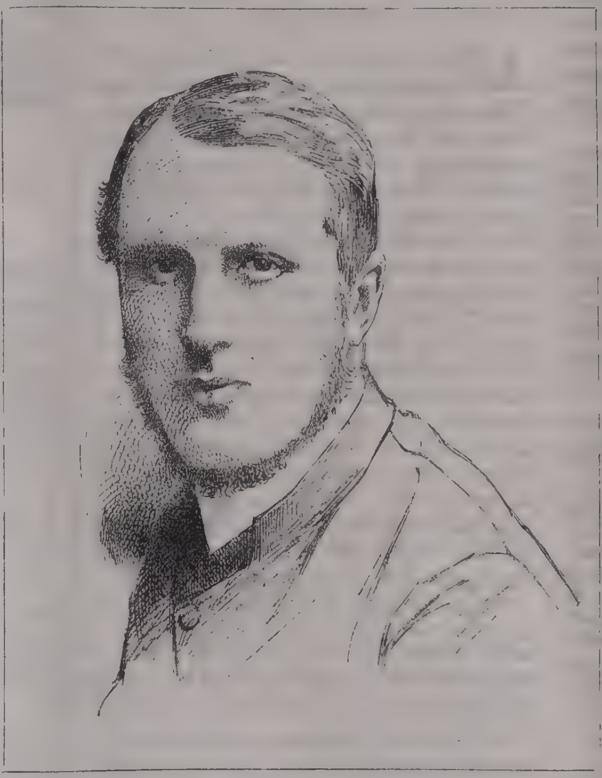
[*] Our translators often do injustice to this Hebrew word. They evidently failed to see that, by translating it "go" sometimes, they spoilt the spiritual meaning.

REV. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON.



THE subject of this sketch was born at Christ Church Park, Ipswich, on July 10, 1837. His father, Charles Lillingston, Esq., afterwards removed to the Chantry, which has since been the residence of Sir Fitzroy Kelly. Mr. Lillingston was educated first by a private tutor; he went to Ipswich Grammar School, and later to Brighton College.

In 1855 he went to Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1859 was silver medallist in Moral Philosophy and Ethics, and the next year gained Archbishop Downe's prize for extempore preaching.

In December of the same year he was ordained by the late Archbishop of Canterbury, then Bishop of London, Rev. Canon Fowney, who was then vicar of St. John's, Deptford, giving him his title. After serving as deacon, and for three months as priest, Mr. Lillingston was appointed vicar of Christ Church, Madras, and Secretary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society for Southern India. His health breaking down in 1864, just at the time when the new Bishop of Goulburn was appointed, he was offered by the Bishop his Chaplaincy. This was accepted, and, joining the Bishop in Ceylon, Mr. Lillingston accompanied him to Australia. He was immediately appointed Vicar of Yass, at that time a large straggling parish, two or three hundred miles in area, which was later broken up into smaller districts.

In 1869 he was appointed by the Bishop Archdeacon of Yass, and returned to England in 1872, and shortly was appointed Vicar of Broxbourne, Herts., where he remainded till 1878, when he was appointed Vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway, by the trustees. This is a large parish, having ten thousand inhabitants, chiefly poor. The church seats fourteen or fifteen hundred, and is generally very well filled. There are also three mission houses which are always in use for some classes, meetings, or services.

In 1877 Mr. Lillingston joined the Temperance cause, of which, since then, he has been a strenuous and active advocate. He has published several works; "Scripture Marks of a True Believer" (Hunt & Co.), "Self" (Marshall Bros.), and others.

The following discourse, founded on Rom. xv. 13, was delivered by him on Sunday, August 2:—

THE GOD OF HOPE.

The subject here is one of the deepest interest with all Christians, for it is the subject of Hope. Our lives would be very sad, very awful, unless enlightened and helped by hope. In the midst of all our work, our trials, our sorrows, our resistance of temptation, we are helped, comforted, sustained, by hope. Do let us get this firmly into our minds, that God is a God of hope, and has given us his Word to tell us of hope, that we may at all times live and rejoice therein.

Now, our duty is to abound in hope. The very object of our life must be to increase in hope, and to study the means whereby we may produce that result. It should give a colour to our entire lives, and play an important part in them. Let us take this, not as a privilege which we may use or dispense with at our will, but as our very life, our very duty at all times, to abound in hope.

There are times in all our lives, even when we belong to Christ, when all else will seem to us as very dark, very dull, very sad; when a cloud of depression will settle on us, and when if left to ourselves we should hardly know how to exist. At such times the man of the world has to seek for some unhealthy, or some actually sinful, excitement to drive away the gloom; but the Christian has this great resource, to abound in hope. Here is distinctly not our home. Event after event arises to tell us this, and to warn us that we are only on a journey. We reach certain stages, and these very stages tell us that we are journeying, and that there will be an end to it only when we reach home. So that we are forcibly reminded, whether we wish it or not, that now is the time in which to live for hope, and to live on hope. Oh, these stages, when changes come, may be and ought to be, not what they are naturally, but what God intends them to be, reminders to dwell more on hope, and less on the past and present.

Let us see (1) The Christian's Hope; (2) How to abound in it; (3) How to keep it.

I.—THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

(a) To be for ever with the Lord. How we ought to hope for this! We are living now in a world with a good deal of sin in it; and much which affects our own spiritual life, because of contact with the world and with sin; but then, we shall be with Jesus, who will comfort us, shelter us, help us, and bless us. We are made capable of very great affections. We little know what an important part in all our lives is played by our affections, until in some way they are torn and lacerated, and so aroused into fullest action. But when we are with Jesus, we shall have the fullest affection without any sorrow mixed with it. Here, our greatest blessings are at times the cause of our deepest sorrows. But when we see Jesus, we shall find that in his presence we shall have unbounded love, and shall share love without any sorrow. Let us, then, look for the blessed moment when we shall see Him, the holy, loving Lord Jesus, who has bled for us; Jesus, who has died for us; whom to know now is the joy of our lives, even life eternal. He is so worthy of our love, and in his tenderness He puts Himself forward as our one great object of love and hope.

(b) We shall be for ever with all who are dear to us, who have either gone before us or whom now we love in the Lord. Yes, now is the time of constant separations. There, we shall be for ever with Jesus, and with those who, like us, are his. Here we have much to do with hope, as to meeting Christians. We part with the hope of meeting again, but although we are always conscious that it may not be on this earth, yet the thought often sustains us that there will be no parting there. Think, brethren, of the company of the blessed, of the redeemed. What a grand meeting! No shyness, no reserve, but all in the fulness of holiness and bright happiness. No cloud of care, no tinge of sorrow, not one atom of regret, no doubtful inquiries about others, but all there in the presence of Christ. Oh, will not that moment make up, far more than we can express, for all the agonising moments which we have here endured? Let us dwell on it very much. It is drawing nearer, nearer. Each holy affection will be intensified there, each tie sanctioned and given by God will be stronger. Let us think of those from whom we are now parted, whether upon earth temporarily, or by death: we shall meet there, and parting will be no more.

(c) We shall be without sin or mistakes. The cloud of our life here is that we sin. Alas! how often, how unworthily, how sadly. There was a time when we thought, perhaps, lightly of sin; but since we have found Jesus, our heaviest burden is that we sin. Oh, how awful is sin! Oh, how sad it makes us at times, at the end of a day, or week, or some period of our lives; but we shall not sin there. Thank God, no sin. Here so often the clouds come up, we know not whence they come, except from earth, and the Sun of our lives, Christ, is hidden from us; but there will be no sin in heaven, and no mistakes. How often we make mistakes! It is true that God overrules our mistakes for his glory and for our good. It is true that nothing so shows his tender, fatherly love, as his goodness to us in sheltering us from the consequences of our mistakes. But still, we suffer for them at times severely; it is part of our discipline here; there, we shall make no mistakes. I love to think of heaven as the land of no mistakes. Oh, what a bright hope!

(d) It will be the time of perfect love, all walking in love. Oh, what a source of pleasure we have here in love. But still we often find pain arising from the fact that necessarily the deepest, the holiest love is limited, and we have to leave it, and to go out among those who do not love us, who care nought for us; but think of that time and place where all will be love, where the whole atmosphere will be love, where everyone we meet will be full of love.

II.—HOW SHALL WE ABOUND IN IT?

(a) Make it constant. We are too much inclined to think it is only for special times: it ought to be always. The more constant we make it, the more power it will have in making us holy and happy. Oh, let us seek to live constantly in hope, that thus we may live rejoicing in hope.

(b) Make it growing, yes, growing in power, in fulness, in distinctness, in efficacy. Let it be connected more and more with different portions of our lives. Ought it not to grow? Have we not opportunity of thinking more of the love of Christ, more of the purposes and plans He has in love for us?

(c) Let it come into all the different departments of our lives. Our work: we work in Hope; our resistance of temptation; our bearing affliction; our comforting others; our prayers; our very life, for life itself is made up of closely entwined fragments. Let the atmosphere of hope come into all.

(d) Let us speak hopefully, love hopefully, fight hopefully, toil hopefully, die hopefully.

III. HOW SHALL WE KEEP IT?

(a) It must be by constantly seeking the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, for He is the Spirit of Hope. Therefore, pray daily for the Holy Spirit.

(b) We must feed on the Word, to increase our faith, grasping the promises.

(c) By obedience and firmness.

(d) By acting as those who have a living Saviour.

RAHAB.

H lender form had nameless grace,
he grace that hangs around a child;
Her face was like a baby's face,
Her eyes were soft and mild,

And yet she bore a load of pain,
A load of woe, a load of sin.
I watched her in the wintry rain
Where guests were crowding in.

As from bright halls a stream of light
Flashed out across the steaming flags,
And fell on her, out in the night
In fluttering mud-stained rags.

She gazed upon a maiden sweet
Clad all in white, with jewels rare,
White shoes upon her dainty feet,
White roses in her hair;

Who from a carriage lightly stepped,
Eager to enter fashion's whirl,
And clutched her robe, as on she swept,
Lest it should touch the girl.

The child's torn rags were soiled and wet,
The child herself was stained no less;
Child though she was, and yet, and yet,
They were her only dress.

One pitying glance, God only knows,
Might e'en have given hope again—
A whisper frees the avalanche snows,
The sea is swelled by rain—

It was refused. The lost one turned Away again into the gloom;
And in her heart there fiercely burned
The lurid fire of doom.

From street to street, "Move on," they said.
Ghost-like she passed from chime to chime,
And then at dawn she found a bed
Amid the river slime.

"Move on" from out shocked Virtue's sight!
"Move on," Lust's helpless baby slaves!
"Move on" to death's dread darksome night!
"Move on" to weed-grown graves!

Ye might have lived the Christian lives
Of Englishwomen sweet and fair;
Ye might have been glad, happy wives,
With, round you, babes at prayer;

But even in this English land,
"A Gospel land," men proudly say,
"Where serried rows of churches stand,"
Rich lust must have its prey.

Our "surplus population," ye!
Slain by our wealth, in one long stream
Ye drift into the shoreless sea,
Forgotten like a dream,

But in his silence God doth know
Whose was each sin, whose was each shame;
And though his anger burneth low,
It shall flash up in flame,

Lighting the dome of his great day,
And through his judgment's fiery rain,
Clad in his thunder, God shall say.
"Where is thy lost one, Cain?"

JAMES BOWKER.

THE ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

UNDER the able superintendence of Mr. George Hatton, this Mission continues its successful rescue work. The Report recently issued records "considerable progress and marked success in every department of the Institution." No less than 17,000 prisoners were met at the gates of the three prisons—Coldbath Fields, Holloway, and Wandsworth, during the past year, of whom the majority were provided with breakfast, and several thousands signed the Temperance pledge. A valuable testimony to the practical good done by this Mission, is furnished by Mr. J. Monro, Assistant-Commissioner of Police, and Chief Inspector Neame, of Scotland-yard, who says: "To the good work which the St. Giles' Christian Mission has done for the past three years, may be partly attributed the decrease of yearly crime shown by yearly returns, and testified to by Her Majesty's Judges, and others within the past few months."

The following letter from a chaplain shows the depths to which some have sunk, who once moved in good society:—"Please take the bearer in until I see you. It is a notorious case, but I should not like to see the young fellow cast away. He has been a great professor, a preacher, a choirmaster, a Bible-class teacher, and engaged in a great many good works, as a cloak for sin. We will talk about him when we meet."

Temperance work, Bible-classes, the Free Medical Mission, and other departments of this growing and extensive sphere of labour, are all maintained with increasing efficiency. The Sunday-schools rejoice in having a noble staff of teachers numbering nearly eighty; the open-air preachers tell of God's rich blessing following the Word; old scholars are gathered occasionally, who bear a testimony to the saving power of the blood; and house-to-house visitors record the rescue of some of the most depraved and vicious.

Friends should apply for these annual reports, and would thereby learn what God is doing in the regions beyond and altogether outside the ordinary church and chapel organisations. Much-needed aid in the way of funds, clothing, &c., may be sent to Mr. George Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

THE "ODD MINUTE" SOCIETY.—Some readers of THE CHRISTIAN may be pleased to hear that during the three and a half years the above-named Society has been formed. Great blessing from the Lord has attended it; 3374 garments have been given to the poor through the medium of mothers' meetings and the St. Giles' Medical Mission, whilst the subscriptions have helped us to relieve cases of extreme distress. Also many letters have been received from invalids, stating the pleasure it has been to help in this little work for the dear Master when laid aside by himself from active service. Some of these dear ones have been called home; we miss their loving gifts and sympathy, and wish much to extend our border. Who will come forward and join us in this happy service? Full particulars and rules may be obtained from Miss Popplewell, Hon. Secretary, 29, Hayter-road, Brixton-rise, London, S.W.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCE IN GLASGOW.

THE next Conference of the Evangelical Alliance is fixed to take place in Glasgow on October 6 and two following days; and the programme—complete substantially—has been issued from the office of the Society, in Adam-street, Strand. The interesting variety of topics put down for discussion, as well as the array of distinguished speakers, constitute the earnest of an acceptance, in every essential respect, of the invitation of the Glasgow Conference, which is not only cordial, but which emanates from ministers and laymen influential within and beyond the different evangelical churches of the western capital of Scotland.

As heretofore the deliberations of the Conference will be distributed over morning and afternoon sittings, with a public meeting in the evening There is to be open conference in the afternoon, and partly in the morning of the second and third days. The proceedings of the first day will comprise a conversazione and a public meeting, over which the Lord Provost of Glasgow will preside. Here the addresses of welcome will be delivered. The work of the Evangelical Alliance, in promoting Christian union and in defending the persecuted, will engage attention. The business of the second day will be prefaced by a united communion service; and when Conference assembles the Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson will deliver the annual address, which will probably strike the keynote of the Conference. Then will be read and enforced, by Rev. Dr. John Stoughton, the "Practical Resolutions," which embody, in a permanent form, the principles of the Alliance. The subjects for discussion are: in the afternoon—Present Day Unbelief and Worldliness among Professing Christians, the selected speakers on these two topics being Rev. Prebendary Anderson, and Rev. Talbot Greaves. At the evening meeting the State of Religion on the Continent will be considered, with special reference to Scandinavia, Germany, Italy, and the East, the selected speakers being Rev. Principal Cairns, Rev. Principal Simon, Rev. J. J. Varnier (Messina), and Rev. Dr. A. N. Somerville.

On Thursday addresses will be given. In the morning on "The Authority and Sufficiency of the Holy Scripture," by Rev. Canon Taylor (Liverpool); "The Power of Christ's Resurrection," by Rev. J. W. Bardsley (Huddersfield); and "The Work of the Holy Spirit," by Rev. Charles Graham. In the afternoon Rev. Newman Hall is to speak on "Faith-Healing; or, the Power of Prayer." Other topics include the Observance of the Lord's Day and Temperance. In the evening, "Foreign Missions: Work among the Scattered, at Home and Abroad," and "Godly Upbringing of the Young," Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes delivering one of the speeches. The concluding address will be given by Sir William Muir (a Vice-President). The Chairmen who are to preside at the several sittings of the Conference, or at services connected with it, include the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Rev. Andrew Bonar, Lord Polwarth (President of the Alliance), Mr J. Campbell White, the Lord Mayor of London, M.P. (Sir R. Fowler, a Vice-President), Sir William Collins, Sir William McArthur, M.P., Admiral Sir W. King Hall, and Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P. There will be, on Thursday, a public breakfast. The Council of the Alliance, as well as the Local Committee, are extremely gratified at the promise which the progress of the arrangements, so far, give of a largely attended Conference, comparing favourably with, if not rivalling, in an eminent degree, its numerous predecessors which have assembled in various parts of the United Kingdom.

SOWING THE SEED IN ITALY.

I HAVE been south to Naples, where I spent the winter after having stayed a little while in Florence and Rome. I have entirely given myself to distributing the Word in any shape I can get it, and introducing myself into families where I have been able to take the Gospel and leave my testimony. Personal dealing being specially useful, I am glad to tell you that I can always find souls ready to hear, and I see the necessity of not waiting to get them into churches, which has proved such a failure, especially among the middle and upper classes. At Naples I got the free use of a hotel parlour, where I would invite a family at a time to come to see me, and I would turn it into a sort of social Bible reading, allowing doubts to be expressed and clearing up foggy minds. To give myself to this I refused pulpit work, as three years of past experience has caused me to study my people as well as my Bible. I have been privileged in being able to distribute over 3000 Testaments, besides tracts and Gospels, to souls who had never seen the Word, and we can only wait and see all that it will do; but suffice to say that I find great desire among Italians, especially with young men, to read the Word, and the virgin soil on which one sows is so susceptible, that it is much pleasanter work than speaking to Gospel-hardened English or Americans.

We are on the side of victory, and no obstacle can hide from my eyes the greatness of the love of God and what He can do. He doeth marvellous things, and I see that He is blessing Italy by the Gospel. "Great is the Holy One in the midst of thee," and believing this, as also "the Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty, He will save," &c., firm on these promises I feel strong in the inner man, and thank God that we have big obstacles that He might get greater glory.

In May I came to Rome, and then I was led to Florence, and afterwards here, where I am helping the weakest missions. There are thousands of bathers here, as this is the Brighton of Italy, and I wish I had the same opportunity to speak out in the open-air as there. Still, I have been very fortunate in getting the use of a terrace, covered with canvas, in front of an English gentleman's house, and here I gather some forty people to hear the Word, who are really interested. Doors are continually opening to me, right and left, and I do ask your prayers for me and other workers in Italy.

Last December, on my return to Naples, a poor orphan boy, whom I had helped, and who was said to be stupid and half-witted, came to see me at an early hour in the morning. I admitted him to my room. He came with a bright face, and embraced me. He had been a servant in a house I had lived in when there before, and as he could not read, we had often prayed and talked together. He had heard I had returned, and now came to see me with an alabaster box of ointment, and said: "I have often prayed God to send you back here, and when yesterday I heard you had arrived, my heart was overjoyed, and I desired to bring you a present. That evening an uncle of mine brought me a piece of Dutch cheese, and knowing how fond you are of cheese, I was glad at last to have something good to give you." Seeing this poor boy, half-starved looking and poorly clad, bringing me about a pound of Dutch cheese, touched my heart a great deal more than any gift I ever had.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The Y.W.C.A. reports a great increase in membership during the year, and "the Association is more than ever becoming an army of women who are really winning souls for Christ." Great help has been afforded to many of the members by procuring them situations, and in many instances mistresses speak in the highest terms of them, and ask for others. A separate council has been established for the colonial and missionary branches, with a view to starting branches in all our Colonies and dependencies. New branches have been formed in Holland, and the work has extended in Sweden, while fifty new secretaries have taken up the cause in Ireland.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

THE recent Bank Holiday meetings at Kilburn Hall were again marked by large attendances and abounding spiritual enthusiasm and power. The afternoon meeting opened with a season of hearty praise and fervent prayer. Mr. Henry Dyer delivered a valuable address on the Cross of Christ. That Cross kills the weed of pride, while it nourishes the plant of grace. All that is preserved of the material cross is its measurement, as indicated by Immanuel's hands and feet, for we shall never behold Him in the glory but as the One who hung on the cross. There He died (1) For a single individual sinner—Gal. ii., from ver. 20; (2) for his precious Church—Eph. v., from ver. 25; (3) as God's Zion-Monarch, who is to live and reign for a thousand years—John xviii. from ver. 36; (4) that He might be heir of a new creation—Heb. ii., from ver. 5. Therefore, we should live beneath the cross—(1) for our individuality; (2) that we may learn to love all saints; (3) that we may turn from idle contention for political power, and wait to reign when Jesus reigns; (4) that we may roll away even creation from under our feet, and, by faith, plant our feet upon a new creation. Only an entire Jesus could be a substitute for a single sinner, therefore, unforgiven sin can merit nothing short of everlasting punishment; and how great a congregation is even a single soul! In the new creation each individual believer possesses the whole for ever. The moment you know He died for you, you have an interest in and concern for all saints. They who suffer will find it doubly sweet to reign. We cling to naught here, but to God as our Father, through whom we have a joyful heirship as the possessors of all things in a new creation.

After more prayer and a hymn, Lord Radstock dealt with the subject of practical manifestation of love to God's Church. While we are called to build that Church after the pattern of his Word, we should yearn over those who do not see their place in the Body, rather than encourage thoughts of our own spiritual superiority. We have as much need of those we may consider a lower sort of Christian, as they of us. Does the world see our fellowship of Christ in being broken for others; or are we seeking to wash the feet of the saints with scalding water? The Lord give us grace to minister to those who have not had our advantages. After tea, friends came together in increased numbers, and quite filled the Hall for the evening meeting. Much time was again devoted to praise and prayer.

Mr. Soltau said that 2 Cor. i. 20 shows all God's promises, plans, and thoughts to be centred in his beloved Son. All prayer reaches the throne, through a promise. All our needs, temptations, and trials may be put upon some one of the promises. As an old saint said: "My prayers go up very crooked, but his answers come down very straight."

Mr. Wm. Frith said spiritual resurrection is preceded by a death unto sin, inseparable from the Redeemer's death. Power, for earthly service, is derived from a risen Christ, through the Holy Ghost, who revives our hearts, as the dew. Active service will not fail of reward, though all the power is of grace. The development of the flower is not in itself, but in the sun and the dew. We have little time and much work, but all-sufficient grace.

Mr. F. C. Spurr said London will be moved as was Jerusalem, when Christ reigns in the hearts of his people. He frustrated the purpose of men to make Him a King; but when God has a hand in it, the revival is real. The very children would have shouted, but the starched-up people were sore displeased. If all left that Hall in that condition, God alone knew what the result would be in seven days! God set us on fire for Christ.

Mr. Vines (New Zealand), said realisation of our responsibilities in the position in which God has placed us, solves the whole question of practical holiness. Christ was and is the only man wholly sanctified unto God; and we are called to stand in Him. We may have the two natures; but the life we now live we "live by the faith of the Son of God," until we see all things put under his feet.

Dr. Popham said if we be "dead indeed," practical results will follow. First, perfect death, then the sunshine and power of perfect communion realised in our hearts, then the "rivers of living water," in service.

Mr. Henry Dyer said the calm of our souls should reflect eternity in our daily life. Eternity means the shout and the Lord in the air. This will make all our waiting time a moment, and all afflictions light. Eternity will gather up our moments, between now and then, in which we have pleased God. May we grasp eternity to make every burden light, every moment precious. Who would not live for this, which may well moderate our hurry and impatience for our heavenly home? Thank God if we have got anything out of a Bank Holiday with Him!

After a hymn, Mr. J. E. Hawkins closed the day with prayer.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

THE Fortieth Report of this Society, containing nearly 150 pages, is one of the best hitherto published. Those who are interested in the progress of this deserving work, may obtain it from the secretary, Mr. E. J. Mather, 31, Bridge-street, E.C., for 6d. Over forty illustrations are given, representing seafaring life and peril in almost every form. A chart also showing the mission stations along the River Thames adds to the interest of the reader. The committee thankfully tell "of great things that God has done during the past year, it having been replete with encouragement and cheer." The extensive docks now being built at Tilbury, employing six thousand men, have proved a fertile field of labour, as numerous extracts from the missionaries' journals show. At meal-times, in the huts, and at the mission-hall, these men are reached, not a few of whom give evidence of a true change.

The work includes nearly 30,000 visits paid to vessels, the distribution of nearly as many copies of the Word of God, the attendance of 170,000 persons at the various services, and the circulation of no less than 350,000 tracts, magazines, Scripture rolls, &c. Gospel services have also been regularly conducted on board the Arethusa, Chichester, and other training-ships, as well as among the aged sailors at the Royal Alfred Institution at Belvedere. Many hundreds of sailors' library bags have been presented to the seamen, but a much larger number "are at this moment lying at home empty, every one of which, filled and placed on board, would be warmly welcomed by the men."

The total income for the year amounted to £5766. Several good supporters, however, have died, and the committee earnestly appeal for continued and increased aid. The Worshipful Company of Mercers have granted a donation of twenty-five guineas to the funds of the Thames Church Mission.

THE LONDON Y.W.C.A.—The annual report comprises a detailed account of all the Metropolitan branches of this institution with a complete list of the various boarding houses, convalescent homes, and restaurants. The entire income for the year amounted to about £3600, the deficit being £400. During this period, twenty-four new branches have been formed, including eight new institutes, thus bringing the London branches up to a total of 103. The Central Institute is 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., of which Miss Ely is the superintendent, and where the usual improvement classes are maintained, as well as sewing classes to work for the poor. Those who have not seen the report can form but little idea what a perfect hive of industry this Y.W.C.A. is becoming. The visitation alone does a vast amount of good—girls in music halls and public-houses being reached with marked success. The Committee are anxious to extend this department to a lower class of girls, if some friends would provide the means of employing one or two visitors, for which the sum of £60 or so is needed. More than eighty railway stations are constantly attended, governesses and servants are provided by the Employment Agency, more than two thousand invalids have been helped to the London and Brighton Homes, and the remaining operations appear to be equally valuable.

UNION HALL MISSION.

TWO months of nightly services have just been concluded at Battersea, where goodly numbers gathered night by night to hear the glad tidings of salvation. The Sunday afternoon and evening meetings were specially well attended, and we believe that many were led to a saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus.

The closing meeting was held on Thursday, when a large number came together, and partook of tea. After which, several most interesting testimonies were given by those saved in the tent, and many Christians told of soul refreshing and blessing which they had experienced since the tent services had been held; then followed short addresses by Mr. H. D. Brown, of the Colportage Mission; Mr. W. Grove, Mr. Edwin Baughan, late of the Coldstream Guards, and Mr. E. Cook. At the close of this meeting three or four put up their hands, desiring to be prayed for. This tent has now been erected in the Crown-road, Fulham, for August.

The services nightly in the tent at Brentford are being prospered of God. Will the Lord's people pray for us in this work, and help with funds, as He may enable them.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—I write a line for the readers of The Christian, who uphold by prayer the hands of the servants of Christ who are in the thickest of the fight with the powers of darkness, in preaching the Gospel. Since May we have visited many towns and villages with tents, and in the open air and in other ways seek to bring the Gospel before such as do not hear it in the ordinary places of worship, with more or less of blessing in every place. We are much more encouraged in the villages of Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, than in the towns. The people receive the word with more readiness of mind, and many flock to the tents from miles distant and take away with them the word of life which has made them happy in the knowledge of salvation through the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ. Souls of all ages, from the grey and wrinkled sinner of over four-score, down to the young of ten years of age, have been brought under the power of the Gospel, and are rejoicing in the salvation of God.

We have two tents in full work, besides the daily visiting over hill and dale, among the Militia, the highways and hedges, and from house to house. Yet the cry comes from various other places, which we have not been able to reach with the Gospel, for want of help and helpers. Is it so, that the channels through which blessing is to flow to the world are being dried up? So much used for self-gratification and worldly pleasures that so little can be spared for the service of Christ—so little can be given to send the bread of life to the starving and perishing sons of men?

A short time since I met a party of poor labouring men, and said I was shortly about to send a Gospel tent into their parish. All expressed their thanks, saying, "'Tis high time; nobody cares for us. I s'pose we beant ov no 'count." "Does not the minister care for you?" I asked. "No, I reckon; he have never spoke to I ever since he come to the parish," said one, and others gave the same testimony of utter neglect. Alas! this is too frequent in many parts of the country, and people who are thus neglected care not to attend the ministry of such shepherds. We endeavour to reach some of these neglected places, and we ask your fellowship, dear reader, by prayer and by help to meet expenses.—Yours faithfully in Christ,

Geo. Brealey.

EAST LONDON INSTITUTE.

MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS has issued a statement of the accounts of this Institute for Home and Foreign Missions for the past year. The sum raised for all purposes has amounted to close on £16,000, the largest part of which has been expended on the main and original work. The students who are residing at the Institute have combined study during the year with various evangelistic labours, especially in the new Bromley Hall. Those who have gone forth during the year, fifty in number, are located in Europe, Asia, Africa, the United States, and the Colonies.

The history of the transfer of the Congo Mission work to the America Baptist Missionary Union is briefly set forth with a report of subsequent progress. The advantages accruing from the Berlin Conference, "securing a wide, effectual, and permanent door of entrance into this region," are also thankfully recognised. The "Passage and Outfit Association" has proved a valuable addition to the Institution, £900 being contributed to its funds last year. The death-roll affectingly recounts the sufferings and death of several of the brave Congo men, also the patience and fortitude displayed by survivors.

The Home Mission operations, which include the Berger Hall, the men's night-school, and Bible-classes, "become more continuous and extensive than in the earlier years of the Institute. The constant sight," says Mrs. Guinness, "of Godless multitudes, of which not more than three per cent. of the men attend any form of Christian worship; the infidel-lecturing that goes on; the countless drinking-shops with their awful effects; and the swarms of neglected children, are so many provocations to Christian zeal."

SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY.

THIS society has been in existence rather more than a year, and has already assisted abroad (chiefly to Canada) considerably over a hundred persons. All those who have been sent out in connection with the "Free Breakfasts," recently given to dock-labourers and others, have gone through the agency of this society. The reports sent home by these emigrants have been, in nearly all cases, eminently satisfactory. One instance may be given as a sample of many:— In September last, a plumber's labourer, coming out of hospital quite friendless, quickly fell into utter destitution. This society was instrumental in sending him to Queensland. Ten days after landing, he wrote that he had had twenty offers of work, and could earn 15s. to 20s. a week with board and lodging, as a labourer.

The society aims at assisting to emigrate by means of advice and information, as well as (so far as funds permit) by means of grants and loans, all suitable applicants who, through being unable to obtain employment here, are anxious to emigrate, and are willing to supply (so far as possible) some portion of the necessary funds.

Emigration is now fully recognised as a ready means of assisting those who are in destitution here to positions of comparative comfort and independence in the colonies. The society is, therefore, very anxious to extend its work. This is purely undenominational. Contributions will be most thankfully received by Rev. Andrew Mearns, or by the undersigned Clergymen and others who meet with cases they deem eligible for assistance, but who do not possess the requisite means and organisation for sending them out, would oblige by sending them (accompanied by "Cards of Recommendation," which may be obtained on application) to the office (50, Fleet-lane, Farringdon-street), between the hours of 7 and 8 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. Information and advice will be freely given to all comers; but it must be distinctly understood that the Society will not guarantee to send out any case, unless either the emigrant or his introducer is willing to provide an agreed portion of the passage-money.

Faithfully yours,

Robt. Miller Christy, Secretary (pro tem.).

A PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

ON Thursday afternoon, a Prophetic Conference was held at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Rev. W. Frith, of Kensington, who addressed the meeting on the importance of personal consecration in view of the Second Advent. Several passages were read showing the extent to which believers are urged to be found ready. It was, he said, more than ever being recognised by prophetic students that in the Church are to be found two classes, and there is an essential difference between being "found unto praise and honour and glory at his appearing," and "being saved yet so as by fire."

Mr. Warrand Houghton called attention to Gen. xvi. where, instead of trusting God to fulfil his promise, Abraham adopted means to bring about that fulfilment himself. This false step resulted in Ishmael's entrance on the scene, who became the persecutor of Israel, both literal and spiritual, developing into the awful Mohammedan scourge. In this the Church followed Abraham's type. Finding that the Lord Jesus had not appeared to take the kingdoms of this world according to promise, and, losing the precious hope of his personal appearing, they became reconciled to heathen institutions, and when persecutions came, instead of thereby seeing their present position of separateness, they amalgamated with the world-kingdoms on Satan's terms, although the Master had refused all rule at his hand. This act of amalgamation was twice perpetrated; first, after the persecutions of Pagan Rome, and, secondly, in the midst of those of Rome Papal. Accepting the leadership of men like Constantine and Henry VIII. was an offence to Almighty God. As the Lord is to destroy the world-power, those who cling to it must regard the Advent with fear. Thus the Christian hope was lost, and the raptures of 1 Thess. iv., and 1 Cor. xv., were thrown forward beyond the Millennium, in the Church's counsels. In conclusion, Mr. Houghton said that the point now exercising the mind of students is whether the Scriptures just alluded to point to one or two events, and that his own view was decidedly in favour of the latter. Hence the need of being "ready" at the call.

Rev. J. Meyers, of the Free Church, Putney, observed that, if the children of God were to be victorious over the world, they must live above it. Mr. Bennett remarked that Luke xxi. 36 decisively showed that some would escape the last great tribulation. Let them not be Lots, but Abrahams. The state of readiness was beautifully shown in Rev. xiv. They might be quite sure that Paul's enthusiastic desire to know Christ, extended to the knowledge of his Second Advent.

At the close of the meeting there was a discussion, in which several took part. In the evening another meeting was held, when various "events likely to occur in connection with the Advent," were dilated upon.

OUR SOLDIERS IN EGYPT.

SIR,—Pray allow me to thank the very many kind friends who so promptly and generously responded to an appeal from me in February last, which you were good enough to insert in The Christian, for books, tracts, &c., for soldiers then going to Suakim. It was only on my return to England that I found how very many parcels had been sent to my club instead of their being sent to me to Suakim, as I had requested in my letter addressed to you. A multitude of letters must remain unanswered except by this letter of hearty thanks for all that has been done.

We had Gospel meetings nightly at Suakim, when soldiers, blue-jackets, and navvies attended in large numbers. The papers that reached me were eagerly taken by the men, and God only knows the real result of the effort.—Yours obediently, H. G. MacGregor, Lieut.-Col.

EMIGRANTS' HOME, BLACKWALL, E.

DEAR SIR,—As so many of the readers of The Christian have had a share in starting and supporting this Home, the Committee are anxious that all should join with them in thanking and praising God for the marked blessing and success given during the past twelve months, and this notwithstanding some failures and shortcomings. The numbers which have passed through the Home during that period amount to 10,870.

The universal testimony of the emigrants has been one of thankfulness that such a comfortable home has been provided, where they are housed, sheltered, and cared for bodily and spiritually. When the emigrants are in the Home nightly meetings are held, and short addresses given by many well-known Christian workers.

Besides real conversions, one of the most cheering results has been at once to get all the Christians to know each other, so as to form a little band in each ship for mutual help in carrying on a daily prayer meeting and reading of the Word of God on the voyage out to Queensland. By this means it is hoped the good work once begun may grow and increase.

The Committee have received many testimonies of God's children being thus refreshed and revived; also scores who have come in with hearts torn and sad have gone away cheered by the kindness they have experienced at the hands of the manager and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Wilké, and others. The crying need for such a place for the protection of single women and girls passing through London has, by the late disclosures, been only too terribly demonstrated.

Christians everywhere may do much by writing to the manager in the case of any third-class passengers going from London to Queensland, New Zealand, the Cape, or America.

The Committee at the same time wish to bear testimony to the great care and attention shown by the Queensland Government officials for the protection of all women and girls going to that colony.

The Home, financially, now needs no help, as it meets all its expenses, for which there is great cause for thankfulness.

All Christians are cordially welcomed at the Home, which is alongside Blackwall Station, and only sixteen minutes from Fenchurch-street Station. Toys, boxes of tracts, books, and Christian papers will be thankfully acknowledged by Mr. Wilké. Will your readers praise God with us for his great goodness.

Yours faithfully, for the Committee,

T. A. Denny.

CHERBOURG GOSPEL MISSION.

THE work so happily begun in the winter on board Mr. H. Cook's Gospel Ship, of Gosport, is now being continued on shore.

Mr. Lerenda and I have opened a room on the quay opposite the Docks, 72, Quai de Paris, where we hold meetings in French five times weekly, and twice meetings for the English sailors and others. They are not so crowded as in winter, but we have a good attendance, and many of our faithful friends, who were delighted to welcome us back, attend regularly. We have one meeting specially for instructing the converts of whom we trust there are not a few.

We meet with very little sympathy from the Protestants here, with a few exceptions, and, therefore, we need all the help our Christian brethren in England and elsewhere can give us. Our aim is to preach Christ to those around us—for whose souls no man cares—and who are as sheep without a shepherd. We hope to be able, while working especially for the French, to gather in the English sailors also, and to this end we need help in the form of English books, Bibles, tracts, hymn-books, &c.

Any help, either in money, or in books, or periodicals, will be welcomed by myself or Mr. Lerenda, my fellow-helper.

CLOSE OF KESWICK CONVENTION.

We thankfully state that the promise of Divine blessing at Keswick was amply fulfilled in the latter days of the meeting. On Thursday Mr. Campbell's address upon spiritual lessons to be derived from Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther; and Mr. Hubert Brooke's reading on Enoch were felt to be deeply instructive.

The evening meeting of that day was one to be much remembered. Mr. Fox's address was practical in the best sense, and a feeling of deep solemnity rested upon his audience. At the after-meeting, for which almost the whole of those present remained, a large number rose to declare their purpose of wholly surrendering themselves to the Lord, and claiming his keeping and cleansing power. It was felt that the power of the Lord was indeed present to heal.

The most remarkable feature of the Friday meetings was the testimony given in the afternoon. It was, almost throughout, of the most satisfactory kind; remarkably free from excitement, or self-consciousness, bearing far more upon what Christ had done for those who spoke, than for what they had felt or done. What was most striking was that far the larger portion of the testimony came from the young men present, and very beautiful it was to hear one after another tell of Christ's power to save, and to express readiness to devote himself to the salvation of souls as his life's work.

All were filled with thankfulness to find so many resolved, in the power of the new life, to "follow the Lord fully," and the meeting was felt to be one amongst many evidences that God is gathering together multitudes of young men for the working out of purposes which we cannot as yet clearly discern, but which will need, in the days which are before us, bold, self-sacrificing, Christ-honouring, witnesses and workers.

On the whole, without affirming that all was absolutely satisfactory, we have reason to believe that there was a higher tone of spiritual feeling than in many preceding conventions, and that real, heart-searching, spiritual work was done, the effect of which will abide long after the last visitor has departed from this beautiful spot, beautiful in a material sense, but immeasurably more beautiful as the place endeared to many by their having learned here the infinite sufficiency of Him who is "altogether lovely."

Another correspondent speaks of the addresses of Rev. J. B. Figgis and Dr. Elder Cumming as being specially spiritual and edifying.

HOLIDAY SUGGESTIONS.

As the holiday season has now begun, might I point out to your readers what an opportunity is open to travellers to work for the London Hospital Flower Mission, during their vacation, by printing texts on small cards, especially made for the purpose, which can be procured either at Mildmay, or at 110, Cannon-street, for fixing on the bunches of flowers, issued by the above mission? They will also find many people they meet at different hotels will gladly help in the good work.

Then again Gospel portions and tracts are thankfully received by the people in almost all parts of the Continent, and amongst the children great good may be done, by distributing the beautiful illustrated Gospel leaflets which can be had of Mr. J. Spiers, 48, Paternoster-row, and who will send them (post free) to any address abroad or in England, in nearly any language. If travellers would bring out, and leave for the use of visitors at various hotels, a few good English books, they would be conferring a great boon on many, as it is in many places, especially in the High Alps, most difficult to find a book to read of a wholesome tone.

Yours faithfully, Thos. R. Fothergill.

FRANCE.—A member of the French League for the Elevation of Public Morality, writes to one of the French journals to say that France cannot glory over England. Those who are acquainted with the hideous condition of society know there is not a fact denounced by The Pall Mall Gazette that does not exist in every large populous centre in Europe; the only difference is that in England State regulation and protection is more limited than in most other countries.

For the Young.

LITTLE ORPHANS IN COLAR.

BY MISS ANSTEY.

You may have heard of Miss Steer's arrival at Colar. She writes: "What dear, bright little things some of the girls are; and how touching it is to listen to their childish voices. I often wish English Christians could hear them. Little Mercy waited yesterday after the Gospel service 'for salvation,' she said. Rodenda Rao had a talk with her, and she afterwards said that she was very happy that Jesus had saved her. It was very touching to see the tiny prostrate form and hear her voice saying, 'O Father, I have salvation, my sins are washed away in the blood of Jesus. I thank Thee."

I send you a few extracts from letters from my dear Hindu sons, which I think may give an answer to a question often asked—Do you find that the orphans are truly grateful for the Christian love and kindness shown to them? By nature Hindus are peculiarly ungrateful and unmindful of kindness, and the word 'gratitude' is not in their language. But when they come under the saving power of the Spirit, He produces in them this gracious disposition.

"My very dear Mother,—The time of your coming is near. We make very joy in Colar when you come. I tell you a story: Colar Orphanage is a large nest, we are all birds, and you are our mother. Now mother went to England to take rest, and the birds are left in the nest; when mother comes then they are very glad. Therefore come soon, mother.—Luke."

"My very, very dearest Mother,—We are all quite well by the grace of God, and your daily prayer. I received your letter on March 6. I am very glad and my fellow-students too. We are going to our Christian villages and to heathen villages, and to fairs, to preach the Gospel. Mr. and Mrs. R—— came with us, and they had a tent to live in, and we had no—if you kindly please get for us one, we shall be very glad, Mother; because sometimes may come rain, what we do then? therefore we had better have one tent. Kindly inform me when you come. You ought to start on the sea in the first of May, and you ought to come 9th of June. Kindly reply me at once. Since you have gone we lost month by month, week by week, day by day, hour by hour, and so on. It is hard for us to let you in your birthplace. Perhaps you may be glad to remain, but we don't like you to remain there. Please make haste to return to your poor orphans. We read in Prov. xxv. 25: 'As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.' Therefore please reply us soon. You kindly see and think over 1 Thess. iii. 10: 'Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face.

"I wrote many letters to you, but did not get reply. Many boys wrote letters to you, and you have replied. What did I to you? Am not I your son? Please write this time. My own writing this letter is very wrong, for I don't know too much English. I know few words. "I study the book which is the Bible. I prosperity in the Bible. Gabriel, Noah, Mark, and I, also Luke, every day morning, preach the Gospel, in our church hall, and we also preach the Gospel, Thursday meeting night; and Lord's Day afternoon we go out Bethany and other two farms, and in the coming fair we all go to preach the Gospel of peace to the heathen, i.e., unconverted people. You said Jesus is coming. I am not fear, for I am ready. He said that He would come, and his word endureth for ever. I am ready to go with Jesus. I expect He must come soon.

"Mr. Steanes took our photographs. He is a good friend for orphans, but we have a best Friend who died for us on the cross. We are all remembering you in our daily prayers, and asking the Lord to bring you amongst us, though I am unable to do any good for you, I am doing one [thing], I do pray day and night in my prayer for you."

SPANISH & PORTUGUESE CHURCH AID SOCIETY.

Dear Sir,—Last year our appeal for special prayer in behalf of the work of evangelisation and reform in Spain and Portugal, met with so hearty and general a response, and the answer to the earnest supplications then offered at the throne of grace has been so manifest in the increased blessing vouchsafed to the work in Spain and Portugal, and in our efforts to aid the cause at home, that we are encouraged once more to ask for the fervent prayers and thanksgiving of your readers. The recent terrible earthquakes, and the present grievous visitation of cholera, which is desolating so many homes in Spain, are, we believe, preparing the minds and hearts of the people for the reception of the truths of the Gospel. The cry, "Come over and help us," is ever becoming louder and more earnest. Under these circumstances we urgently appeal for daily prayer, and also for practical sympathy and generous support.

Yours faithfully, L. S. Tugwell,
Secretary.

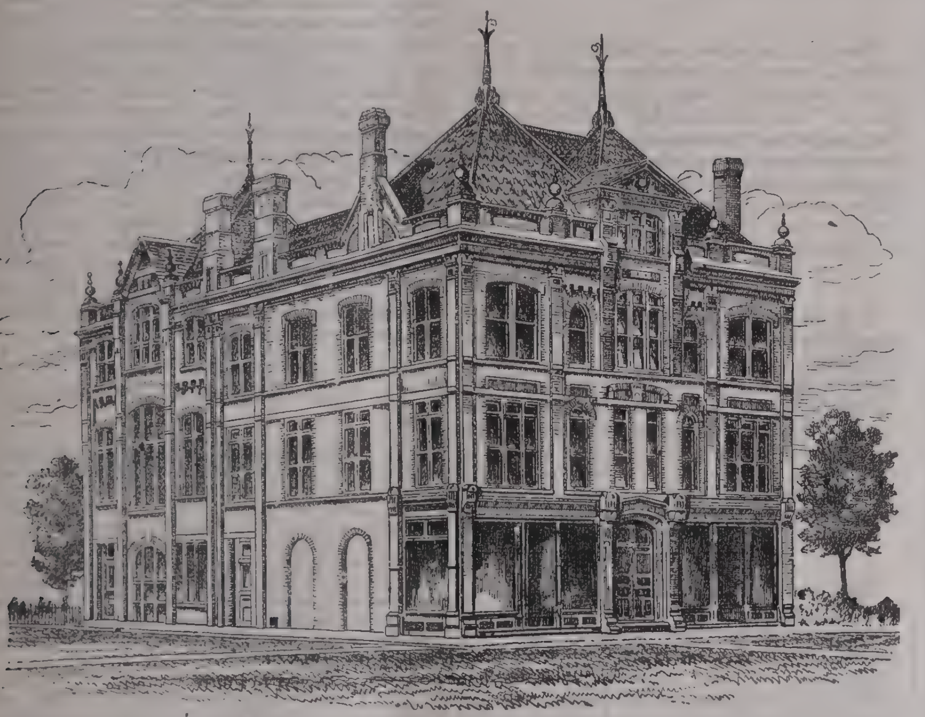
N.B.—All contributions should be sent to the Offices of the Society, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Cheques and Post-office Orders (on Charing-cross Office) should be crossed "Barclay, Bevan & Co.," and made payable to the Rev. L. S. Tugwell.

ERRATUM.—In our last issue (August 6) a letter from the Hon. Sec. of the Mission of the Kabyles and other Berber races of North Africa was headed "Ten more Missionaries for Kabylia." One of the council writes to say that the ten missionaries will (D.V.) be located at first, for the study of languages, &c., at the three stations of the mission in Morocco and two provinces of Algeria. Kabylia is only a very small portion of the large field, close to England, but almost entirely unevangelised. Men and women filled with the Holy Spirit and means to send them forth are the pressing needs of North Africa. The Hon. Sec., Mr. E. H. Glenny, of 21, Linton-road, Barking, will be pleased to communicate with any desirous to hear further about the mission.

THE NEW SANKEY LIBRARY, NEWCASTLE, PA.

UNDER the appreciative title of "The Pride of Newcastle," the Weekly News of that New England town gives a description of the noble institution in course of erection with which Mr. Sankey's name will always be associated.

The new library and Young Men's Christian Association block is being erected on the square, at the corner of Washington and Jefferson-streets, out of the proceeds of the sale of the Moody and Sankey hymn-books, and at the request of Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who desired that his old home should receive some benefit from the fund. The land was purchased by Mr. Sankey for $7000 and the old Stone Corner, which was erected in 1812 by Arthur Chenowith, was pulled down to make room for it, Mr. Sankey, after seeing a number of plans. was the best pleased with and accepted the one presented by Mr. S. W. Foulk, of this city, whose reputation is second to none in Pennsylvania.



The new building will be of Queen Anne style of architecture and will cost about $25,000 when completed. The front of the building will be of pressed brick with terra-cotta trimmings. The roof will be of slate with ornamental dormer windows. The windows will be furnished with plate and ornamental cathedral glass. On the first floor there will be two storerooms, each 21 by 57 feet. The entrance to the second and third floors will be in the centre. The side elevation will be the same as the front to the lecture-room, which will be two stories, with large gables and ornamented windows.

In the cellar will be a bowling alley and gymnasium, the entrance to which will be in Jefferson-street, also from the reception-rooms. Connected with the gymnasium will be a bath-room, lavatory, and toilet-room. The hall leading to the second floor will be ten feet wide, and the stairs lead directly to the lecture-room, which will be 42×54, and will have a seating capacity of 425. The reception-room will be 16×26, and will have a secretary's room connected. There will be an entrance to the library from the reception-room to the right; this room will be 20×26. On the left will be the entrance to the reading-room, 26×30, also to the parlour and prayer-room, 21×28 On the third floor will be the janitor's kitchen, bedroom and reception-room, and five other rooms which are to be rented as offices.

The new building will be a credit to the city when completed, and will be a splendid monument to the memory of Mr. Sankey, who is dearly loved by his old friends and neighbours. A large number of the books for the library was selected by Mr. Sankey while in Europe, and it will be second to none in Western Pennsylvania. It is to be hoped that the erection of this handsome block will prove to be the foundation for the improvement of the public square which it overlooks.

OBITUARY.

HERBERT FREDERICK ELMSLIE.

WE much regret to announce the death of Herbert Frederick Elmslie, the second son of Dr. T. J. Barnardo, which occurred from diphtheria, at Felixstowe, on the 1st inst.

MISS MATILDA ONSLOW.

The death of this active but unostentatious Christian lady took place after a very brief illness on Saturday, 11th ult., at Old Alresford, Hants. Miss Onslow was in her sixtieth year, and during her whole lifetime had been devoted to works of charity, which extended not only to the immediate wants of the poor, but also in founding and maintaining an Industrial Home at Old Alresford, and an Orphan Home at New Alresford. For some years, however, the former has been closed, and the Orphan Home has recently been removed to Old Alresford, where, under the loving care of the two sisters, many a poor orphan has found true friends, who loved and cared for them even as mothers. The funeral took place on the 15th ult., when every manifestation of sorrow was shown by the villagers and the inhabitants of Alresford, many shops of the town being partially and others totally closed, whilst the blinds of nearly all the private houses were drawn down. The remains were followed by about 150 persons, while in the churchyard were gathered between three hundred and four hundred of all ranks of society, the poor of the neighbourhood attending in large numbers.

MISS ELIZABETH MORGAN.

Miss Elizabeth Morgan, of Rome, died July 26. She established an Orphanage for little girls; and it was while preparing a summer residence for them she was called home to be with Jesus, while yet young, and in the full joy of sweet service. Prayer is asked for the widowed mother, and that the sudden departure may be greatly sanctified.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. W. FORBES closed his evangelistic services and Gospel Temperance meetings at the Edinburgh Castle last week. He has since given addresses at Highbury-corner Mission Hall. All letters should be sent to 71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N.

RICKMANSWORTH.—A tent mission was commenced on Sunday, August 2, by Mr. Henry Lakin. An important work is looked for amongst the navvies employed upon the Metropolitan Railway, and prayer on their behalf is asked.

NEW BRIGHTON.—Mr. Thomas Eyres, hon. sec. Children's Evangelistic Mission, has been conducting a fortnight's services for the young on the sand, opposite the Battery. The services have been so largely attended and have, we trust resulted in blessing to so large a number, that it has been decided to continue them.

WOODBRIDGE, SUFFOLK.—On Wednesday evening, the 5th instant, a meeting of young men was held on Mr. Alexander's lawn, for the purpose of forming a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association. Addresses were given by Messrs. Roberts, Warren and Edwards, of Ipswich, setting forth the advantages of the institution, and its aims and agencies. At the close, several names were enrolled as members.

DUNDALK.—Mr. George Hefford has just concluded a three weeks' mission in this place. The services were held in a wooden movable building capable of accommodating from five to six hundred people. Much interest was manifested, and we believe blessing resulted. On the 31st, the twentieth annual believers' meetings were held in the same place. Addresses were given in the morning by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, formerly vicar of Dundalk, and Mr. George Hefford. In the afternoon Bible readings were held, and in the evening addresses were given by Rev. H. E. Noyes, vicar of Kingstown, Mr. R. Clarke, and J. Barton, Esq., the convener of these gatherings.

RAMSGATE.—Mr. W. Nott is again engaged this summer with children's and evangelistic services on Ramsgate sands. For some seventeen seasons he has followed this work up with increasing interest, assisted by earnest Christian visitors who are taking their rest at this popular resort. God has owned this work to many families from the metropolis, careless ones have been awakened, anxious ones saved, and backsliders restored. Some have been able to testify, before their return home, of new and blessed experiences. But the greater part are met with after many days, sometimes at Mr. Nott's London gatherings, or communicating the glad tidings by letter or message to him.

A QUERY.—Could any of your readers inform me if "Butler's Analogy" has been translated into French, and, if so, where a copy can be procured?

W. LIVINGSTONE LEARMOUTH.

Cologny, près, Genève.

HOP-PICKERS IN THE ALTON DISTRICT.—Five tents were erected last season and fitted up for the comfort of hundreds of these "Nomads," who heard the Gospel, and not a few of them we believe were saved. On visiting an outlying encampment an appeal was made by a van man, somewhat as follows: "I say, master, couldn't you put up a tent here for we chaps? We sometimes go over to the tent yonder, but 'tis too far away. I'll lend you mine if you will put it up; it's a dancing booth, and we'll bring the fiddles too." Two "Punch and Judy" men and women, when leaving the town last year, called to acknowledge the good they had received. We want to erect three or four more tents this year, for which contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by S. Chinn, Alton, Hants.

THE "PILGRIM" BIBLE CARRIAGE.—We hope to make a tour with our Bible carriage from August 17, through the Essex villages, preaching the Gospel of God's grace and selling the Scriptures to the poor and neglected population of that county. Amidst the many Gospel efforts put forth at this time of the year we pray and ask the prayers of your readers that the Lord may bless us in this work by bringing many precious souls to a saving knowledge of the truth, and that we may scatter the good seed of the kingdom far and wide. If any of your readers would send us Gospel tracts or Scriptures for this effort, we shall be very thankful. Any of our friends who have missions in Essex and would like our help as we pass through, we shall be very thankful to give it. Kindly address as early as possible.

Notes and Comments.

IN consequence of the lengthy and important prospectus of the Salvation Army, we have held over almost all correspondence and reports on this subject.

The Conference at Peel, Isle of Man, has been unavoidably postponed for the present, owing to the inability of several expected speakers to be present.

A Great Demonstration is to be held in Hyde Park on Saturday, August 22, at 5.30, preceded by a meeting at St. James's Hall, on the previous evening, at 7.30, to express the horror of the people of London at the crimes which have been exposed, and to impress upon the Government their determination to put a stop to these atrocities. We hope that all right-minded men will help by their presence to make that demonstration as impressive as the vital importance of the case demands.

A diplomatic correspondence which has not obtained adequate notice may show whither Europe is drifting. Those in whose hands are tremendous issues "never cease," we are told, "from working out political combinations and problems, only soluble in the last instance by blood and iron." The collapse of the Turkish Empire is anticipated by them. The Eastern crash hastens. Then a rush—Russia for Constantinople, France for a better frontier, and for Alsace-Lorraine, England for exclusive control over Egypt, the Valley of the Euphrates, and for a firmer hold of India. Nations will inevitably form alliances. What these combinations will be is now the watchful study of continental statesmen. Meanwhile by the aid of Count Moltke, Germany is, it is stated, in possession of fully prepared plans for the invasion of every country with which she may conceivably be in hostilities. "All the foundations of the earth are out of course."

A contemporary has recently said that the English Press has a sort of irresponsible authority, and may be tempted to interpret its duty to the public in an arbitrary way. This is a subject that embraces other issues than present-day ones. The function of the Press is to furnish news, and to give information which will guide public opinion. Its silence, to suit its own notions, may be a conspiracy against the nation. Its suppression of facts may come to be a modern tyranny. The foundations of society may be undermined before the people awake to the menacing ruin. They will move then without the Press, but its future influence will be impaired with great national loss.

The movements of the God of missions call for prompt attention. China, we are told by the London Missionary Society's Chronicle, is "accessible to the Christian Church as never before." The following are the words of missionaries in the field: the Rev. Griffith John, "It is easy to find an audience in the most outlandish places any hour of the day." Rev. T. W. Pearce (Canton), "Missionaries find the people attentive to hear them in places where a year ago they were insulted." A Presbyterian missionary (Shanting), "We have added to the Church last year 418 members, and the inquirers are from 150 to 200." Rev. R. Lesher bears witness to the "remarkable sincerity of the converts;" and Rev. J. Gilmour to the quickening effect of a visit of Stanley Smith and his colleagues.

No surprise need be felt that there are Churchmen who protest against the hierarchical attempt to institute a "House of Laymen" which shall not be allowed to discuss questions of theology; and also against Canon Liddon's language that theology is a subject on which laymen must of necessity be profoundly ignorant. Pity the so-called Protestants who propound such notions do not recall the fact that without the laity in Germany and England there would have been no Protestantism. Theologians were used of God; but it was the people in peasants' cottages and Barons' castles who went to their Bibles, who carried the Reformation.

It is to be noted in this connection that it is, as the context shows, concerning laymen, that Inspiration says: "God would have all men come to the knowledge of the truth" (vide 1 Tim. ii. 1—4). It is also unquestionable that in these days, the fear of intelligent laymen, who are not "profoundly ignorant" of theology, is the breakwater against the doctrines of wrangling schools, about which professed theologians are so much disturbing many in their congregations.

There is no holier, as there is no more difficult, service for Christian men than to be stern rebukers of sin. The Lord said of Herod, "Go, tell that fox." Stephen and Paul learnt that denunciation was as holy at times as silence was at others. Great wisdom is necessary here, but also great fidelity. The failing nowadays is more in the latter direction than the former. Rebuke may be the voice of God, provided it be in love.

It is to be hoped that the Athenæum's manifestly prejudiced notice of Dr. Salmon's scholarly "Introduction to the New Testament" will not deter any one from studying a volume remarkable for close reasoning and keen thought, and likely to be of great value in these days of controversy with regard to the books of the New Testament, and especially with reference to the authorship of the Gospel according to St. John.

Half a century before the publication of the notorious volume by Strauss, systematic attacks had been made specially upon the fourth Gospel, because an admission of the authenticity of that book implies an admission of the Divinity of Jesus. In St. John's Gospel Christ unmistakably claims to be divine, and Dr. Salmon does good service, and does it in a masterly way, in showing beyond dispute, the fallacy of the arguments of the opponents of the Johannine authorship, that in the Synoptic Gospels Christ is simply "a moral reformer," and that the claims of Jesus in St. John's Gospel are not consistent with what is elsewhere told of Him.

"With respect to the external evidence," says Dr. Salmon, "John's Gospel stands on quite as high a level of authority as any of the others," and with regard to the internal evidence the learned writer adds "the claims which the Synoptic Gospels represent our Lord as making for Himself are so high, and, if He really was only man, are so extravagant, that, if we accept the Synoptic Gospels as truly representing the character of our Lord's language about Himself, we certainly have no right to reject St. John's account on the score that it puts too exalted language about Himself into the mouth of our Lord."

A correspondent, who takes exception to the statistics as to the decline of Romanism in England, recently quoted in our columns, and who urges that the figures were intentionally falsified with the view of stimulating Romanists, and of putting Protestants off their guard, may rest assured that Mr. Lucas is far above such a suspicion, and that his statistics may be taken as representing the best information available. As a recent contributor to the St. James's Chronicle has pointed out, an increase of Romanists in England would not necessarily prove that there has been an increase of Romanism among Englishmen, England being a harbour of refuge to all nations; and it is well to remember that, in taking a false view of the progress of Romanism, "we rob God of the thanksgiving due to Him, and of the acknowledgement that He is fulfilling his word." "Fear not, little flock," the Master said, when his disciples were a mere handful, "it is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," and day by day the boundaries of the Lord's realm are visibly being widened.

The "Peter's Pence" contributed to the Pope from the Archdiocese of Dublin since 1864 have amounted to the sum of £61,677, and the newly appointed Archbishop will lay at the feet of the Pope the latest contribution of £2,444. This large amount represents the pence of only one diocese, and a few weeks ago each of the Irish bishops took to Rome a similar munificent gift, made up, as an Irish journal boasts, "of the half-crowns, shillings, and sixpences of the comparatively poor," yet not long since men were finding ready purchasers in the streets of Naples for straws from the Pope's bed, to such poverty, they proclaimed, had the Pontiff been reduced by the action of the Italian Government.

The Times says concerning the cholera in Spain:—

> "The official returns are in many cases manifestly incomplete, and in no case are they likely to reveal the full extent of the calamity. Even as they stand, however, they exhibit a total from about the 20th of June till the 2nd of August—a period, that is, a little over six weeks—of very nearly 80,000 cases and very nearly 34,000 deaths. Allowing, therefore, a certain margin for defective returns and unrecorded cases, we are probably within the mark if we estimate the ravages of the cholera in Spain at from 90,000 to 100,000 cases, and at least 40,000 deaths."

It is the way of the world to trace all calamities of this kind to their immediate natural causes—chiefly to "an impure water supply, unclean, and therefore unhealthy, dwellings, and generally insanitary surroundings," and that thus "its spread is to a very large extent due to strictly preventable causes." But, notwithstanding this, it is, "in some of its aspects, a mysterious and incomprehensible disease." When we have made every allowance for secondary causes, whether it be in the loss of an individual loved one, or in the sweeping away of thousands, we must fall back on the great first Cause, "Himself hath done it." Whether in the history of Israel or of Christendom, pestilence is among the judgments of God (Deut. xxviii. 21; Matt. xxiv. 7). Personally and nationally we must acknowledge Him.

Under the title of "the Mystery of God," the Rev. J. Vincent Tymms, of Clapton, is about to publish a volume of Essays on Modern Forms of Unbelief. It will be issued by Mr. Elliot Stock.

The Salisbury Conference will be held (D.V.) from September 21 to 25, of which particulars may be obtained from Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury.

The World has an article on "Scandal and Melodrama," which makes it evident that men implicated in the sins which have lately been exposed are very much afraid of personal exposure. Thus it writes :—

"No peccadillo, however trifling, is likely for some time to be committed, or bruited abroad, without being inflated to dimensions such as cannot fail to gratify the appetite which has been created and fostered by an unscrupulously immoral agency. . . . Of course, homilists will not be wanting to announce the impending deluge. For the age is not only scandalous, but melodramatic. It loves the blue fire and the limelight as much as it does to credit itself with every form of wickedness. . . . On the strength of this the penny Jeremiahs of journalism threaten society with dissolution. A cataclysm is about to arrive, and so desperately depraved is the system under which we are living that it is on the eve of going to pieces. Whether or not these proclamations of doom are generally believed in, they are likely to upset the equanimity of some, and to cause breasts which ought to be imbued with a spirit of stoical calm to thrill with apprehension and terror. In other words, a scare has been established, and no one exactly knows what is to come of it. As a consequence, matters are seen through a ludicrously unreal and distorting medium, and those who usually await the future with confidence are haunted by a vague sense of impending calamity. . . . It was a favourite remark of Lord Beaconsfield's that men were perpetually making themselves wretched by the anticipation of events which never happened. Social extinction and eclipse are phrases full of sound and fury, but signifying nothing. The consequences of error and indiscretion exist, for the most part, in the mind of the offender's enemies rather than in the external reality of things. Everything is forgotten and forgiven nowadays with unparalleled rapidity. If it were not for the taste for scandal which society has acquired, the majority of the scandals now periodically current would never be heard of, and if it were not for the ludicrous habit of melodramatic exaggeration, the consequences of an evanescent escapade would never be painted in the lurid colours dear to the gossipmongers."

Is it well that social extinction and eclipse should be mere phrases, meaning nothing to bad men? Is it true that the consequences of error and indiscretion are only imaginary and not real? Is it for the good of society that everything should be forgotten and forgiven so rapidly? Wrongs are not so easily forgotten by the wronged, nor forgiven by "the Avenger of all such." "Peccadilloes," and "evanescent escapades," are Satan's own deceitful terms for sins by which he destroys men's souls.

We have received a letter from Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, endorsing the remarks we made a fortnight since, concerning the police, and putting the number of Christian men at 1100, or ten per cent. of the force. No body of public servants ought to be allowed to be placed in the way of such temptation as are our police. While we rejoice to recognise as brothers in Christ the 1100 Christian men among them, and while we believe there are many honest and trustworthy men, who are not professed Christians, the painful certainty remains, that a large number of men are unable to resist the temptation in which they are placed, and so become panderers to the vicious rather than protectors of the weak and ignorant.

The fault is in the system which produces its natural results in demoralising those who have not strength to resist its evil influences. The police are neither better nor worse than other classes, except as they are specially influenced for good or evil.

The Church of England Purity Society may be somewhat slow in moving, but seems likely to work effectively. It held an important meeting for men only, on Thursday, in Prince's Hall. The following is a letter to the Secretary, from the Bishop of Bedford :—

"DEAR SIR,—It is a great disappointment to me not to be able to attend the proposed meeting of your Society at the present time. I feel very strongly that the Church cannot stand by silent in the face of the terrible disclosures of hidden wickedness so recently made. Whether the disclosures were wisely or unwisely made is not now the question. That they were made with the distinct object of obtaining better protection for the young and helpless I have no doubt, and I know that they were made after much prayer.

"I earnestly trust that the measure before Parliament may be passed in such a form as to be really efficacious. We are bound as a nation to do all that legislation can do to restrain the frightful sins and wrongs revealed to us; but I have no doubt much more is to be effected by a resolute endeavour to improve the moral tone of the people at large. Thank God we have found the young men in our parishes, and not less so in the Universities, rising up in number to welcome all helps towards a life of purity.

"We want to raise the tone of society. We want to inspire a chivalrous resolve to protect the weak from wrong. We want to make profligacy a social disqualification. The Church has not been idle in this matter, but she must rodouble her exertions, and persevere in her crusade against vice, until such an exposure of horrible wickedness as we have just had shall be both unnecessary and impossible.—Yours very truly,

"W. WALSHAM BEDFORD,
"Bishop Suffragan for East London."

Men over eighteen years of age wishing to join the Society, should communicate with the Secretary C.E.P.S., 111, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster.

History may be read in the degradation or the disuse of words. The word modesty is almost obsolete, and when we speak of a modest girl we do not mean half so much as was meant formerly. The bloom has been rubbed off the word, as the grace and charm have been rubbed off "the girl of the period." Chaucer wrote disgustedly of "mannish" women; our age strives, not unsuccessfully, to rear that undesirable species.

THE HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, Soho-square, which was established exclusively for the treatment of women, has led to the establishment of similar institutions in various parts of the world. More than one hundred thousand of the sick poor have received medical or surgical treament within its walls, patients being received from all parts of the United Kingdom and the Colonies, with or without letters of recommendation. It was the first hospital in the metropolis to recognise the importance of providing accommodation for those whose means are limited, but who are able to contribute towards the cost of their maintenance. Applications for beds are so rapidly increasing that the present building, containing sixty-six, has become wholly inadequate to meet them. An effort is therefore being made to provide more room as applicants are now obliged to wait weeks and even months, with failing heart and strength, for admission to the wards. Of these sufferers more than 100 are waiting. To obtain the enlargement necessary, the General Committees estimate that no less than £100,000 will be required. This sum has been thrice raised for other hospitals within the last few years, and mainly in London alone. What others have done, surely the women of the United Kingdom can do. The ladies' committee, therefore, feel that the circumstances above mentioned fully justify them in appealing to women of all classes in the Kingdom for their aid in raising the sum thus urgently needed for the relief of their suffering sisters. The smallest donations will be thankfully received by the bankers:—Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C., or Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, & Co., Pall-mall East, S.W.; or by the secretary, Mr. David Cannon, at the Hospital. Annual subscriptions for a term of years are earnestly requested.

HELENA, Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland, President of the Ladies' Committee.

Letters to the Editor.

"SOCIAL ETHICS."

SIR,—"A hard-working man" says truly, "it's no use giving advice unless it's intelligible," and wants his teachers to explain how he can live on five shillings a week. May I, therefore, venture to recommend him a complete solution in the most practical way to his question, called, "How to Live on Sixpence a Day?" (6d., Nichols & Co., 23, Oxford-street, W.). ALBERT GOODWIN.

TRAMWAY SLAVERY.

SIR,—I wish to express to you my warmest thanks for the space you have afforded for the discussion of the claims of our tramcar slaves, and likewise to the public for the sympathy they have manifested. Although defeated in the division on my resolution on Wednesday last at the half-yearly meeting of the North Metropolitan Tramways Company, I feel that we gained a substantial moral victory, which the defence of the chairman, and the testimonies it has elicited from the tram-men proving its insufficiency, have made complete. The six months intervening between now and the next half-yearly meeting will give to the directors an opportunity of showing what concessions they propose to make, but now that the agitation has been fairly set on foot, we mean to fight it out. God sparing me, I shall not rest until we have secured to every tram-man, not only on the North Metropolitan lines, but throughout the whole of London—and indirectly, we hope, in the Provinces—a reduction in the hours of labour from sixteen to fourteen daily, and the option of having every other Sunday "off duty."—I am, yours, &c., ISABEL REANEY.

DISCOUNT ON RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

SIR,—In last week's issue, "Notes and Comments," you refer to the exorbitant discount required by the religious public upon religious publications. I venture to assert that in many cases the example has been set by colporteurs, supported by their societies. In a neighbouring town works a colporteur, boasting of his enormous yearly sales.

But how is this accomplished? Why, sir, at the expense of honest, and frequently Christian booksellers, by selling all their goods at nearly cost price. Receiving a salary, they are enabled to do this, driving the ordinary tradesman out of the market. I can, for instance, at the public stall of the colporteur aforesaid, obtain any of their publications at a discount of 25 per cent. "Songs and Solos" are especially sold in large quantities. In this way the sale of books is not really increased, but the colporteur thus monopolises the whole business.

I, with several others, have been enabled to sell large quantities of the best religious publications, the profits of which we devote to the help of a most useful Christian work, but of course we are unable to carry this on, owing to the under-selling of these Christian workers.

Now, not for one moment would I seek to detract from the good work done by the increasing staff of colporteurs, but I do think it is a pity that booksellers are obliged to push questionable literature, because they are deprived of a fair profit on Christian works. Not only so, but it creates anything but a good feeling towards those who, standing in an advantageous position, do not hesitate to thus impoverish their trade.

I think no one can deny that in the present days of cheap printing, sales at cost price are really unnecessary. Trusting that you may be able to devote a corner of your valuable paper to this letter, and believing that I am not alone in my thoughts on this subject, I am, dear sir, yours,

A LOVER OF CHRISTIAN JUSTICE.

MISS MACPHERSON writes us from Moville, July 31:—"We are being very gently dealt with, and have had a most peaceful journey thus far with our sixty little ones. We feel it is all in answer to the prayers of his people. We shall not forget you in this season of great need; you will realise that you have not lived in vain if this terrible convulsion is used to the stirring up of the Churches to their duty to the young. Our population increases with such a rapidity that emigration should be more used as a relief. If the ministers only knew their power, hundreds might find it their joy to cross to one or other of our colonies, taking with them a number of families. I often wish it were possible to do more in this line."

WHAT WILL IT BE?

A MEDITATION ON THE EVE OF A SWISS TOUR.

WHAT is the summer bringing,
What is in store for me?
Sunshine, blossom, and singing,
The voice of the bird and bee?
She has often bestowed her treasures—
Joys I can ne'er forget;
But now she promises pleasures
I ne'er have tasted yet.

She will open a page of glory
That I have not turned before;
And tell me a wondrous story
By river, and lake, and shore.
Often I silently ponder
On what it will really be,
When the beautiful country yonder
At last is revealed to me.

Ye peaks of celestial brightness,
Does fancy your image paint
As you rise in your dazzling whiteness,
Clothed like a spotless saint?
Have picture, and poem, and story
Unfolded before mine eyes
Some vision of mountains hoary,
Where Alps upon Alps arise?

For years I have thus been dreaming;
But what will it be to go
Where the morning sun is beaming
Rosy on fields of snow?
Till now have mine eyes been holden,
But what shall the rapture be,
When the sunset, red and golden,
On the beautiful hills I see?

What will it be, I wonder,
To listen, at noonday bright,
To the avalanche voice of thunder
Afar on some Alpine height;
Or, down by the lakeside, only
The plash of the passing boat;
Or, up in the pinewoods lonely,
The bell of the mountain goat?

* * * * *

But all to my Lord and Master
In confident love I leave;
The beauties are so much vaster
Than anything I conceive.
Ear hath not heard the story,
Eye hath not seen the sight,
Even of this world's glory,
Much less of eternal light.

So, on the threshold waiting,
In a radiant mist I stand,
Lingering—hesitating,
In a shadowy Beulah-land,
From the border country gazing,
Like a pilgrim at heaven's gate,
Picturing while I'm praising,
And wondering while I wait.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A CONFERENCE on total abstinence is to be held at Inverness on September 11 next.

IN Denmark, if a publican makes a man drunk he is obliged to send him home in a cab.

A SUNDAY Closing Bill for Sweden is about to become law. It provides also for earlier closing on week days.

TEN thousand persons are estimated to have attended a Temperance fête at Clifton, Bristol, on last Bank Holiday.

IT is stated that every two and a half days Great Britain spends in intoxicating drinks as much as she gives in a year to Foreign Missions.

MR. MUNDELLA, M.P., is a personal abstainer, and regards temperance as one of the greatest questions that affect the wellbeing of the people.

THE Earl of Mulgrave considers strong drink one of the greatest hindrances to Christianity in this country, and total abstinence the remedy for it.

IN Georgia only 22 out of 138 counties are not under Local Option, and in at least 100 counties Prohibition is absolute and strictly enforced.

THE new Attorney-General for Ireland, Mr. Holmes, Q.C., has declared strongly in favour of Sunday closing and strict enforcement of the Licensing Laws.

THE candidates for the Enfield division of Middlesex, Viscount Folkstone, Conservative, and Mr. John Kempster, Liberal, are both abstainers, and support local option.

IN his new book on the Congo, Mr. Stanley attributes many of the sudden deaths of Europeans in Africa to carelessness as to diet and clothing, and "the distempered greed for ardent drinks."

THE Autumnal Provincial Conference of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union is to be held in Belfast on September 6 to 10 inclusive, and elaborate arrangements for its success are being made.

Truth, of Toronto, refers to the increasing desire of employers for teetotal employés, and says the great railway corporations insist upon their servants being teetotalers. It is a pity the contract could not be made mutual.

IN reply to a question in the House, Mr. Bourke, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, stated that the Netherlands Minister had promised soon to arrange for a meeting of the conference relative to the floating drink shops in the North Sea.

THE centenary of the American Temperance movement is to be celebrated in Philadelphia on September 23 and 24 next. The movement was originated by a pamphlet by Dr. Rush, published in 1785. The Rev. Dr. Cuyler has urged all his brother ministers to prepare a special Temperance discourse for the occasion.

A NUMBER of Roman Catholic Good Templars have recently been compelled by their Church to leave the Order, on the ground that it is a "secret society." The Watchword says that in one case a young man was so grieved that he took to drink, and, except when in prison, has been drunk ever since. Is Good Templary a greater sin than drunkenness?

THE North-Eastern Railway Temperance Union held a public meeting last week on the Gateshead West Railway Station platform. Rev. W. M. Ede presided, and addresses were given by Revs. J. H. Hooper, and J. J. Dilks, who were attending the Newcastle Wesleyan Conference. Mr. Hooper had the honour of introducing the Blue Ribbon in the Shetland Isles where it was worn by 700 or 800, and Mr. Dilks had, thirty-five years ago, in conjunction with a Baptist minister, founded some of the first Temperance societies in the Shetlands.

A VERY successful Temperance fête and industrial exhibition was held last month in Newry, in connection with the Church of Ireland Temperance Society.

THE Baptist Total Abstinence Society reports as members, 1172 ministers and missionaries, 2688 church officers and subscribers, 212 students—a total of 4072. Of 241 students only 24 are non-abstainers.

MR. BEAMISH, chairman of the Coventry Board of Guardians, says he has never seen a teetotaler come to the workhouse for relief, and he has made inquiries at fifteen other workhouses and found a similar state of things.

THE Rev. Charles Garrett's "National Drink Bill," revised to date, has just been published by the British Temperance League. It is admirably adapted for circulation amongst voters. Two millions of the first issue were sold.

DR. NORMAN KERR, in a paper read at the annual meeting of the British Medical Association, in July, said: "We ought, in all cases to let alcoholic liquors be the last and not the first remedy, as they are ever fraught with possible danger."

REV. J. THORNLEY, organising Secretary to the Methodist Free Churches, reports a gratifying increase on the year in Bands of Hope and Temperance Societies. Invitations to lectures, &c., during the year have been more numerous than the Secretary could possibly fulfil.

CAMPBELTOWN, famous for whisky, has 21 distilleries. There is a vigorous Temperance element in the town, lately recruited by the formation of a branch of the British Women's Temperance Association. Mrs. Blackie, wife of Professor Blackie, D D., gave an admirable address on the occasion, and 47 names were taken.

TENT MEETINGS AT FULHAM.

DEAR SIR,—Last year you kindly inserted a brief notice of some tent services being held in the Laundry-road, Fulham. These meetings were much blessed in the conversion of many souls. This year a much larger tent has been erected in the Lillie-road, and meetings held therein on the Lord's day and each week-night. The Gospel is preached with power, and souls are saved. Some of the best workers are those who once were constant visitors at the neighbouring public-house, but who now bless God they were attracted by the sound of the Gospel proclaimed in the tent last year. During the continuance of those meetings many had been drawn together by the bonds of Christian love, and when the tent was taken down they agreed to hire a room where meetings could be held during the winter. It was fitted up by these hardworking men themselves after their usual day's work was done, and they contribute, as far as their means allow, towards the expenses. What a change comes over a man after he has acknowledged Christ as his Saviour. They who were most against Him are now the most earnest workers for the extension of his kingdom. Praying that this work under Mr. Elgar's care may be greatly owned and blessed of God.

Believe me, yours sincerely in Christ,
WALTER J. KINTON.

THE GOSPEL IN MEXICO.

MEXICO, says Le Chrétien Evangélique, might represent again Germany, France, and Italy in their struggles with the Vatican. The Mexican Government has abolished tithes, and the order of the Jesuits, confiscated immense convents, forbidden processions on the highway, and the wearing of the ecclesiastical costume outside the buildings consecrated to worship.

Protestantism was introduced into Mexico in 1869 by the Baptists, who have since been followed by the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and finally by the Congregationalists. There are 96 foreign missionaries and 40 native preachers, 264 churches, with an effective force of 13,096 members, and 27,300 adherents. All this certainly constituted a good commencement.

The following extracts from a letter to Le Chrétien Belge, by Rev. E. M. Haymaker, give a good idea of one of the native churches:—"There are so many interesting things to tell you that it is difficult to know where to commence. I should like, by some magic, to transport you all here on the benches in front of the pulpit, on a Sunday evening. You would see a truly moving spectacle, which you would never forget.

"Five hundred Mexicans, several so poor this year that they can only have one miserable meal a day, several, seated there, who were trying to draw on an old blouse, or ragged shirt to hide their backs or their naked shoulders; several taking it in turns to come in the only clothes possessed by the family, for instance, the mother coming once to the service, and the daughter the next time. Five hundred Mexicans, of whom four-fifths have no better clothes than a dress of thin calico (which generally forms one part only of this costume), and that in a temperature so cold that we Americans wear our warmest clothes and our overcoats! And yet these people bear the cold to come and hear the Gospel! And their desire to hear and possess the Gospel is so great, their hunger and spiritual destitution are such, that we feel fully justified in employing the money which we have, and that which will be sent us to provide for the need of their souls, rather than for that of their bodies. They are accustomed to poverty and a rough life, and they find the means of existence, although with difficulty. But these people have souls, and they cannot do without the Gospel.

"Until now we have had trouble in finding sufficient rooms to take in the different branches of our work, but the Committee has decided on the purchase of an old Catholic church, where we shall be comfortable. Our school could only receive thirty-five scholars, we shall have room for one hundred.

"Another very important branch of our work is the seminary, which we think of opening next autumn at San-Luis-Potosi, for the training of native preachers. The need for native preachers is becoming imperious; and it is felt throughout the whole extent of Mexico. We have professors, and the students abound, we only want a place and funds to maintain the establishment.

"It is the enormous and overwhelming success which creates the need. If there were few who cared to hear the Gospel, it would not cost much to carry on the mission. The work in Mexico is a success—a great success!"

CHRISTIAN WORK IN HULL.—A special effort is now being made for a supply of pure literature to the inmates of lodging-houses in Hull. Of these there are no less than sixty-two, with accommodation for 1383 lodgers. Reliable men have been found who are willing to circulate the literature amongst them, and sailors on board keels and vessels in the docks. Over 10,000 periodicals, &c., have already been circulated within seven months, and most gratefully received. Any old copies of Christian papers or tracts would be gladly received by J. Holliday, 31, Blundell-street, Hull. We also desire to form a lending library for this class of people, and any old books would be equally acceptable. John Holliday, Hon. Secretary; C. Winter, Hon Treasurer.

WAZAN, MOROCCO'S MECCA.

THE pen of Rev. Newman Hall not long since disclosed to English readers that in Morocco (the nearest foreign mission ground to England, and yet the most neglected) "the dark places of the earth are still the habitations of cruelty." His observation was confined to those parts usually traversed by tourists. I write from Wazan, Morocco's holy city, its Mecca, regarded as a spot of mystic sanctity. Here lives the shereef, the highest official in the religious life of Moslem Morocco, with his sons and numerous retainers. It is said that most of the Mohammedans of Wazan are shereefs, that is, lineal descendants from Mohammed. The shereef himself is greatly reverenced. No Sultan of Morocco is legally enthroned until consecrated by him. As he and his sons ride or walk, the people crowd about them and kiss their hands or garments. This is true, not only of the adult sons by former wives, who reside here, but of the lads who are his children by his present wife, an English lady living next to "Hope House," the Tangier station of the Kabyle Mission, and the residence of the writer and his co-workers. This English lady gained by this alliance the title of "Princess of Morocco."
